Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph for the reason that it contains a number of items which are legislative in their character and are not authorized on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish to indicate to the Chair the point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. I was going to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ANTHONY. When the gentleman has finished his points I would like to have a minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, have you the national defense act before you?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I have the national defense act before me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I invite your attention to section 113.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair to read section 113 for the purpose of seeing what is authorized, and then read page 78 of the bill and see what is undertaken to be given under the bill.

In the first place the act provides for shooting galleries and other places for target practice which have been established or may hereafter be established with funds provided in whole or in part by Congress. The bill, on page 78, provides for shooting galleries and places of practice regardless of how they are established.

Under the bill funds may be expended for operating shooting galleries and places for rifle practice, no matter when or by whom established. The law limits the funds to be expended only to those that have been established in whole or in part under provisions heretofore provided by Congress. In addition to that, the bill authorizes rules and regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice. There is nothing of that kind authorized in the act.

The CHAIRMAN. What interpretation does the gentleman give to that phrase "under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the controlling authority and approved by the Secretary of War"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The controlling authority is not to be determined by the draftsmen of this bill by writing the name of a particular organization in it. If that name can be written into the bill the name of any other organization may just as appropriately be written in. They must confine their language to that of the act. Again, the bill carries an appropriation of $80,000 with which to do certain things; and, under that language, they can buy guns and ammunition, whereas the act itself provides that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to provide for the issue of a reasonable number of standard military rifles and such quantities of ammunition as may be available for use in conducting such practice.

Then, in addition to that, provision is made for the payment of the transportation of persons to international matches. In addition to that, it is provided that this money may remain available until expended. Then there is a proviso which says:

That out of this appropriation there may be expended not to exceed $80,000 for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches.

That is a negative way of permitting an expense which the law does not authorize.

Those are several of the items to which I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I think the language of the national defense act, the section just quoted by the gentleman from Kentucky, gives the widest possible authority for the encouragement of national rifle practice, and the language there is:

Under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the controlling authorities and approved by the Secretary of War.

Now, the controlling authorities are the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, and the Secretary of War approves their recommendations.

I also want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the proviso in this paragraph authorizing the expenditure of—

Not to exceed $80,000 for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches—

Has been held in order previously, and the ruling can be found on page 2615 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not so much bothered about the proviso as about certain other provisions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no question whatever but what the feature pertaining to international rifle matches is subject to the point of order. That is legislation. We have never authorized the War Department or any controlling authority to send rifle teams—wholly disconnected from the War Department in instances—across the water to European rifle matches. That is carrying the matter entirely too far. When we want to compete with them we will do it on the battle field and not at these friendly rifle matches.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to invite the Chair's attention to some other matters. This bill provides for the employment of clerical services. The Book of Estimates has been transmitted by the War Department to the Speaker of this House and is now officially before the House. That Book of Estimates shows that they intend to expend a part of this money for the purpose of employing 18 clerks, and the Chair must take official notice of unauthorized appropriations.

Then, Mr. Chairman, again, in this bill there is a provision for the purchase of badges and other insignia. That language is to be found at line 12.

This section is so full of unauthorized stuff that one can just keep on mentioning item after item; but there are several provisions which stand out glaringly.

There is the provision making the funds available until expended; there is the provision for buying badges and insignia and for employing clerks. Under it they can buy guns and ammunition, when the law provides, under section 113, that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to provide for "the issue of a reasonable number of standard military rifles and such quantities of ammunition as may be available for use in conducting such rifle practice." Such as is available. That is the only legal provision by which to get ammunition; and last year, acting under that authority, the Secretary of War issued to this shooting-match concern approximately a quarter of a million dollars' worth of ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the first part of section 113 of the national defense act:

The Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress recommendations and estimates for the establishment and maintenance of indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, under such a comprehensive plan as will ultimately result in providing adequate facilities for rifle practice in all sections of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, read the next sentence.

The CHAIRMAN (reading)—

And that all ranges so established and all ranges which may have already been constructed, in whole or in part, with funds provided by Congress shall be open for use by those in any branch of the military or naval service of the United States and by all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the controlling authorities and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now then, Mr. Chairman, the next clause in this bill provides for the purchase of badges, and last year that was stricken out on a point of order; but this year they have not only placed that item in this section of the bill but they have placed it in the next one also. There are a half dozen things making it subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas give heed? Of the many points called to the attention of the Chair by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], I do not know that the Chair can find anything in this section of the act that authorizes the item "for the employment of instructors." The Chair is not able to find at this moment authorization for the purchase of badges and other insignia or for participation in international rifle matches.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the Chair will pardon an interruption there, and I know the gentleman from Kansas will indulge me, in reference to instructors, provision is made for that without pay as the original act provides that "the President is authorized to detail capable officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army and National Guard to such ranges as instructors," yet the bill proposes to pay for instructors.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if authorized to employ instructors outside, it does not matter that another provision provides for other instructors to be detailed from the Army itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but I do not find any provision authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair was asking for. Is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] able to supply the authorization for the three items mentioned by the Chair, the instructors, badges, and other insignia, and for participation in international matches?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Chair will permit, I think under the broad language, encouragement of rifle matches, there is authority in that paragraph for the widest range of activities in connection with such work. It is about as broad a paragraph conveying authority as I have ever seen in an act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And, under that mistaken belief, nearly everything imaginable has been written into the paragraph, most of it unauthorized.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Kentucky that if we would rise now, the matter could be settled by the time we meet to-morrow morning?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have some more information about the law.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I saw the Chair was in great trouble and I thought I would suggest a remedy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to find out what the law is and to find out what is authorized and what is not.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withhold his request just a moment until the Chair straightens out this matter?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is a good one, that the committee rise at this time and resume this matter in the morning. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. MADDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7877, the War Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WELLS, for five days, on account of important business.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of many constituents I have introduced two bills of interest and importance, two separate bills for substantial appropriations out of the Federal Treasury to permanently recognize two parks, one at the battle field of Pea Ridge, the other at Prairie Grove, Ark. These were two of the most important battles west of the Mississippi, and while the Government has expended many millions on other battle fields and parks, it has done nothing for these places.

The battle of Prairie Grove was fought on December 7, 1862, between the Confederates under General Hindman and the Federals under Generals F. J. Herron and J. G. Blunt. Early on the day of battle Hindman with 11,000 men moved against Herron; the Confederate cavalry first had the advantage, gallantly driving the Union forces. Herron's entire force then came up, and Blunt hastened to Herron's aid. The Federals were superior in numbers and equipment. The battle lasted the greater part of the day. The Confederates fought bravely, as they always did, but finally retreated. The losses on both sides exceeded 2,400.

On March 6-8, 1862, the severe and bloody Battle of Pea Ridge or Elk Horn Tavern was fought, Gen. S. R. Curtis commanding the Union forces and Gen. Earl Van Dorn commanding the Confederates. The casualties on both sides were heavy. I had relatives on the side of the South in both battles, and personally knew many of the brave men and officers participating in these bloody encounters. They fought well and came home after the war and honored themselves and their country in peace as they had in war.

I believe this great Government should recognize the brave men who fought on either side in these great battles by building a suitable monument, say a statue of Peace, or some appropriate memorial, and should permanently improve, beautify, enlarge if desirable, acquire more acreage, and establish and help by annual appropriations to keep in repair and care for these parks as the Government is doing in many other places.

I have asked that the proposed park at Pea Ridge be named the Peel National Park, for Col. Samuel W. Peel, once a member of this House from the third district and chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He is now spending the evening of his long and useful life at Bentonville, not far from this historic battle field, is over 92 years of age, and is deservedly the best-loved man in the district. He has traveled the long, long trail without discredit; he has played the great game of life with courage and fidelity.

His life has been gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world: "This is a man."

Colonel Peel has always given his best for his family, for his friends, and the public good, and I desire in this way and by these poor words while he is yet living to pay this chivalrous and faithful son of my district the compliment proposed in the bill to establish and maintain this park in his honor.

CORRECTING THE RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, several hours ago I brought to the attention of Mr. Speaker GILLET the fact that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the debates of yesterday a part of the RECORD had been materially changed from the way in which it was actually spoken. I refer to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. An hour or two ago I told him that when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rose, and we had gotten into the House, I would invite the attention of the Chair to his remarks for the purpose of having them comply with the stenographer's notes; in other words, just as the gentleman had spoken them. I do not wish to quibble about small matters, grammatical errors, if any may have occurred, or the smoothing out of sentences. I propose to overlook those; but there are two or three matters, and one in particular, which materially changes the substance of what was said, and I invite the attention of the Chair to that, for the purpose of having it corrected. I have the remarks of the gentleman before me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I think, under the rules, if I may state to the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman be willing to let this go over until the gentleman from New York is present?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I stated to the Chair a moment ago—

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from New York is now here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I was going to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that under the rules motions to strike out and correct the RECORD usually come after the reading of the Journal in the morning.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let us dispose of it now, the matter is so trivial.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have here the reporter's copy of the gentleman's remarks, and inasmuch as I have never participated in anything of this kind, I ask guidance of the Chair as to how it is to be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The manual says:

A motion or resolution for the correction of the RECORD may be made properly after the reading and approval of the Journal, and is not in order pending the approval of the Journal but is privileged after that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are many corrections in this report that are all right, but some which the gentleman has made are not. I made a request of him yesterday not to change the record in one particular matter, and I regret to say that he did not comply with that request, and I ask that the matter be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On page 426 of the Reporter's copy it reads as follows:

Colonel Hunt may have been guilty of bad judgment. It was pointed out here that he permitted this prisoner to go without handcuffs, but all gentlemen know that if Colonel Hunt or any other Army officer would put handcuffs on a prisoner, there would be 20 or 30 gentlemen on the floor of this House protesting against the brutality of that officer.

That has been changed to read:

Colonel Hunt may have exercised bad judgment. It was pointed out here that he permitted this prisoner to go without handcuffs, but all gentlemen know that if Colonel Hunt or any other Army officer would put handcuffs on a prisoner "while on a train or traveling," there would be 20 or 30 gentlemen on the floor of this House protesting against the brutality of that officer.

On page 427 of the reporter's notes the gentleman from New York is reported as having stated:

After 30 years of service I think it is not fair, it is unjust, to brand an officer as a traitor because he was guilty of using bad judgment in a case with which he had no personal contact.

That has been changed to read as follows:

After 30 years of service I think it is not fair, it is unjust, to brand an officer as a traitor because he was guilty of using bad judgment, and in the actual desertion he had no personal contact with the prisoner at the time.

Mr. Speaker, I care nothing whatever about the other interlineations; I think the gentleman was entirely pardonable in making them. But I do ask that a correction be made as to these items I have referred to. I make the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the interlineations referred to in the reporter's copy which he has just read.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman from Kentucky a right to inspect the manuscript of another's remarks where those remarks have not cast any reflection on the gentleman himself in any way? The rule in the Manual, section 903, at the bottom of the page, says:

A Member is not entitled to inspect the reporter's notes of remarks which do not contain reflections on himself delivered by another Member and withheld for revision.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this has been done many times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will pardon me, I say that these remarks were not held for revision, because the gentleman did not have leave to revise.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. But the remarks of Members are always revised.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a question of the integrity of the proceedings of the House. As I understand it, if a gentleman has a right to revise and extend his remarks, then another gentleman can not have that copy of the stenographer's notes, because then he has a right to take them all out and put in new entirely, but this is a question of where the revision has been made without the permission of the House or of the committee, according to my understanding.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman understand that a Member has no right to revise his remarks where he does not change the substance and without adding new material, that he has no right to revise the remarks without the special permission of the House?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not know what the rules provide; of course, the custom is to go ahead and revise your remarks where you do not change the substance of your statement. What the rules provide I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the substance is changed here.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says that the substance of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] said has been changed entirely.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Oh, that statement is absolutely untrue, and I will submit the stenographer's notes as to whether the substance has been changed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would not have any quarrel with the gentleman as to whether a statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky is true or untrue, because the gentleman from Kentucky can take care of himself in that respect.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that would be true if the substance was changed in a way which would put another Member who would ask a question, perhaps, in a false light, but where it is merely a change of two or three words, perhaps, to add or detract from the force of the general statement, where it does not reflect in any way upon another Member, or change the purport of the debate, then the Member, as I understand it, has not overstepped the limits of revision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] must remember that over my protest in conversation with the gentleman from New York before this change was made, and without his having leave to revise, he has qualified his statement for the purpose of making it as harmless as possible, when he had made a very broad statement.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard upon this? I think I am somewhat concerned in it. The gentleman from Kentucky just stated that I made a change in revision to soften the statement I made originally. I say that I have done nothing of the kind, and the gentleman knows that. I did not do anything of the kind. I added those three words there, and I told the gentleman this morning that I did it. I walked over to the desk and told him that I did it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Of course I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman says that he walked over and told me about it. At that time I had not seen this RECORD, and my suspicions were aroused by the gentleman's having said what he did. I then sent down and got the original manuscript, and after I saw that he had materially changed it, then I went to him and spoke to him about it and asked that he be here at this time for the reason that I was going to make this motion.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I leave it to my colleagues whether I have materially changed the Reporter's manuscript. As it read originally it is as follows:

It was pointed out here that he permitted this prisoner to go without handcuffs; but all gentlemen know that if Colonel Hunt or any other Army officer would put handcuffs on a prisoner—

And so forth.

Then I added the words:

While on a train or traveling.

Does that materially change it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Whether I said that at the time or not I do not know, but I stand by the stenographer's minutes. The other change is this, and it was absolutely necessary to qualify it. As it reads in the original copy it is as follows:

After 30 years of service, I think it is not fair, it is unjust, to brand an officer as a traitor because he was guilty of using bad judgment in a case with which he had no personal contact.

Now, that was all right in the argument, and I changed it this way. I struck out "in a case with which" and inserted the words "in the actual desertion he." So that it reads, "And in the actual desertion he had no personal contact with the prisoner at the time."

If that is a material change I am willing to submit to the judgment of my colleagues.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is a material change because the officer about whom we were discussing had had actual contact. This changes the gentleman's statement to that effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out the changes indicated.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—yeas 18, noes 30.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to challenge the vote, and ask for the yeas and nays and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Ohio withhold his motion a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio has been recognized in the midst of a sentence coming from me.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky challenges the vote and makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Whereupon the gentleman from Ohio moved that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Ohio to withhold his motion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would be glad to do so—

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman from Kentucky must withhold his point of no quorum, otherwise it will be impossible to transact any business.

CONFERENCE REPORT—DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker pro tempore, acting in the dual capacity of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and as Presiding Officer, desires to file a conference report. He would like very much to file it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will withhold it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The gentleman from Kentucky might lose some of his rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, and to provide supplementary appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman mind withholding his point of no quorum in order that I might ask unanimous consent to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow? I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask what the status of this matter will be to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be the first business in order, as the Chair understands it, to-morrow morning, if the gentleman from Kentucky calls it up.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 28, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

418. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation: "To authorize temporary executive disposition in the public interests of the services of officers subject to executive control," was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 28, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, Thou art indeed a good and gracious God in Thy dealings with us; Thou art so patient and loving and always ready to help us in times of need. Give us strength in our weakness, wisdom in our folly, direction in the right path of duty. Lead us ever onward in the straight and narrow way, under the guidance of Thy Spirit. Be very near to us to-day. Help us, we beseech of Thee, to understand Thy will and be glad to do it, so that when the shadows of evening gather about us we may be able to say we have walked with God in the line of duty this day. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Fess	King	Robinson
Borah	Fletcher	Ladd	Sheppard
Brandegee	Frazier	Lodge	Shortridge
Bronson	George	McKellar	Smith
Bruce	Gerry	McKinley	Smoot
Bursum	Glass	McLean	Stanfield
Cameron	Gooding	McNary	Stephens
Capper	Hale	Mayfield	Swanson
Carrway	Harrell	Neely	Trammell

Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Ralston	Weller
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Willis
Dill	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.
Ferris	Keyes	Reed, Pa.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are attending hearings before a special investigating committee of the Senate.

I was also requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LAMMOR] on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

"DANGER IN NATIONAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION."

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Record a very interesting and able editorial in the Baltimore Manufacturers Record of the 20th instant entitled "Danger in national control of education."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DANGER IN NATIONAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION.

President Butler, of Columbia University, in a recent address in Philadelphia took identically the same ground that the Manufacturers Record has repeatedly taken in opposing the creation of an executive department of education at Washington, which was advocated by President Coolidge in his first message.

We have pointed out from time to time how such a system would result in concentrating in bureau-controlled methods inaugurated in Washington the entire educational interests of the country, completely destroying all self-reliance and initiative and placing the entire scholastic activities of the country, at first in public schools but later in all institutions of learning, under the control of Washington.

It is bad enough to have the General Education Board with its $50,000,000 doing its utmost to control the educational life of this country through colleges and universities, but it would be even worse if to this situation should be added a department of education with $100,000,000 a year at its command to influence the Nation's educational work.

Commenting on this proposition—and unfortunately but few papers have seemed to realize its seriousness—Doctor Butler says that it "makes an obvious appeal to professional vanity and pride of educators," and it may be added that this professional vanity and pride of educators is one of the dangers of the country; and to this he adds:

"In particular it is vital, if the American school system is to survive, that the Federal Government keep its hands off the schools. Imagine our diverse and diversified population, living under widely varying conditions, all brought to heel in their schools as the people of Prussia once were by the authority and edicts of a central office at the National Capital. I should regard any such development as marking the beginning of the end of the America which our fathers knew and of that American school system in which our generation has been brought up."

Referring to the proposal of the National Government to appropriate $100,000,000 annually to aid State school work, Doctor Butler said that he regarded this as "distinctly harmful from whatever point of view it be examined."

We already have the Government controlling too many lines of work and of thinking as it now does, but if to the domination of bureaucratic methods now prevailing there should be added a complete control of education—and this would eventually be the result of the plan commended by President Coolidge of the establishment of a department of education with $100,000,000 annually at its command—no public-school teacher in the country would feel free to take any position contrary to that advocated by the department of education. From that department would be issued bulletins of every kind day after day, flooding every public school in the land with advice as to what to teach and how to teach it; and the result would be a complete destruction of all individualism in public-school education, and that would eventually lead to a similar destruction in colleges and universities.

Why so many of our people are captivated by schemes such as this for destroying the power of our educational work in order to secure financial help from the National Government, which comes out of the people themselves, we can not comprehend. More and more our people are being taught to look to Washington for guidance in everything. Some good things originate in Washington, but a great deal that is put out from that center is antagonistic to the final welfare of the country and the building up of thinking people.

Edison was recently quoted as saying that not more than 2 per cent of the American people really think. Most of them imagine that they are thinking, but they are simply swallowing, without fully digesting it, what official life in Washington furnishes as mental food, much of it of the most unwholesome character, leading to the destruction of the moral fiber of the country.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on yesterday the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 2420. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak.; and

S. 2446. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Clarks Ferry Bridge Co., and its successors, to construct a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the railroad station of Clarks Ferry, Pa.

WHITE RIVER DAM, ARKANSAS—DIXIE POWER CO.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, some days ago the Senate passed a bill introduced by my colleague (S. 2686) to authorize the Federal Power Commission to amend permit No. 1, project No. 1, issued to the Dixie Power Co. It is a measure extending for a period of 18 months a permit granted to the Dixie Power Co.

to construct certain works pertaining to the creation of power in the State of Arkansas. As the bill is now pending in the body at the other end of the Capitol, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a telegram addressed to me by the chairman of the Arkansas Railroad Commission, which shows the justification and necessity for the legislation.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., March 26, 1924.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

After full investigation of the dealings of Hugh L. Cooper with the Dixie Power Co., sitting as a board of arbitration, the Railroad Commission of Arkansas has this day found Cooper guilty of reprehensible and fraudulent conduct. Certified copy of finding and order of the commission to you by mail.

CLAY S. HENDERSON, Chairman.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present a petition addressed to Congress from the Automobile Club of Berkshire County, Pittsfield, Mass., requesting the repeal of the unfair war excise tax on automobiles. I ask that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body of the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned users of motor vehicles, respectfully petition for the repeal of all unfair war excise taxes, including those on the motor vehicle and the tax on misfortune which every car user must pay the Federal Government when accidents or other mishaps force him to buy repair parts.

Transportation is essential to everybody. It enters into every cost of living and distribution. It can not be provided at the lowest possible charge when restrictive taxes are levied against it, a fact recognized by Congress when it repealed the war excise taxes levied against railroad transportation. The cars which we use are a transportation necessity to the farmer and the urban dweller alike. Congress has accepted the principle that war excise taxes are unjust by its repeal of these taxes on musical instruments, sporting goods, chewing gum, thermos bottles, fur articles, picture frames, perfumes, toilet waters, hair dyes, and free admissions to entertainments.

We urge that all remaining taxes of this character, including motor taxes, now be erased from our statute books.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Community Farm Bureau, of Cody, Wyo., praying for the passage of House bill 518, the so-called Muscle Shoals bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ellensburg, Wash., praying for the passage of legislation restricting immigration with quotas based on the census of 1890, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the jubilee convention of the Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho Woman's Christian Temperance Union, favoring the more effective enforcement of the so-called Volstead Act by the employment of the military forces of the United States to patrol the highways near the Canadian border, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of sundry members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Clayton, Kans., remonstrating against making any amendment to the Federal prohibition act so as to legalize 2.75 per cent beer, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Silk Association of America, at New York, favoring the passage of Senate bill 2601, providing for the registration of designs, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of members of Wichita Lodge, No. 571, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Wichita, Kans., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2646, to provide for the expeditious and prompt settlement, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Topeka and Douglass, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation restricting immigration with quotas based on the census of 1890, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FRAZIER presented a resolution of the Fortnightly Club, of Fargo, N. Dak., favoring the passage of legislation restricting the production of narcotics to the medical and scientific needs of the world, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petitions of Guy L. Elken and 16 other citizens of Mayville, and of R. R. Wright and 35 other citizens of Homer, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of the so-called McNary-Haugen and Norris-Sinclair bills, providing aid to agriculture, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a meeting in Ellenville Township, Williams County, N. Dak., favoring the passage of the so-called McNary-Haugen and Norris-Sinclair bills, providing aid to agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the memorial of Mrs. Jessie Kraft and 22 other citizens of Turtle Lake, N. Dak., remonstrating against the passage of legislation reducing the tariff on eggs, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Charles Berg and 41 other citizens of Dunselth, N. Dak., praying for the passage of the so-called Norris-Sinclair bill, providing aid to agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Erick M. Oman and 36 other citizens of Napoleon, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation to repeal or reduce the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2839) for the relief of George Turner, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 312) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) declaring agriculture to be the basic industry of the country, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 313) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon, as indicated:

A bill (S. 303) authorizing the conveyance of certain land to the city of Miles City, State of Montana, for park purposes;

A bill (S. 306) granting to the county of Custer, State of Montana, certain land in said county for use as a fairground (Rept. No. 314);

A bill (S. 310) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire land and erect a monument on the site of the battle with the Sioux Indians in which the commands of Major Reno and Major Benteen were engaged (Rept. No. 315); and

A bill (S. 2690) to transfer jurisdiction over a portion of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, Mont., from the Department of the Interior to the United States Department of Agriculture for experiments in stock raising and growing of forage crops in connection therewith (Rept. No. 316).

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1809) for the relief of Emelus S. Tozier, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 317) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1823) for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 318) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1427) for the relief of Rosa L. Yarbrough, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 319) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2634) authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the State of Maine certain land in Kittery, Me., formerly a part of the abandoned military reservation of Fort McClary, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 320) thereon.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the Greene Memorial Association to erect and maintain a memorial to Gen. Henry A. Greene on the United States Military Reservation at Camp Lewis, Wash.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 109) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the adoption of amendments thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to Senate bill 2576, to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes. I ask that the proposed amendment may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HARRIS to the bill (S. 2576) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes:

On page 12, line 10, strike out "two" and insert "one";

On page 12, line 13, strike out "1910" and insert "1890";

On page 13, line 13, strike out "1910" and insert "1890";

On page 14, line 8, strike out "1910" and insert "1890"; and

On page 14, line 20, strike out "1910" and insert "1890."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment I have submitted a statement from the head of the American Legion and the head of the American Federation of Labor in regard to the immigration question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

[From Labor, Washington, D. C., March 29, 1924.]

GOMPERS AND QUINN UNITE IN URGING BAN ON ALIEN FLOOD—LABOR AND LEGION AGREE THAT UNRESTRICTED IMMIGRATION ENDANGERS THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC—APPEAL MADE TO CONGRESS FOR PASSAGE OF JOHNSON BILL AT THIS SESSION.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and John R. Quinn, national commander of the American Legion, have united in an attack on unrestricted immigration and to urge that Congress take action at this session to prevent a flood of aliens when the present 3 per cent quota law expires June 30, 1924.

Joint statements were given out at Washington this week in which the Federation and Legion agree upon the desirability of absolute stoppage of immigration for the present; but, in the absence of absolute stoppage, demand the strictest possible limitation, thus favoring the pending Johnson bill and opposing other measures which would open the gates wider.

TWO LEADING HOSTILE FORCES.

"America must not be overwhelmed"—

Says Samuel Gompers in his attack on the unrestricted immigration propaganda—

"Every effort to enact immigration legislation must expect to meet a number of hostile forces, and in particular, two hostile forces of considerable strength. One of these is composed of corporation employers who desire to employ physical strength ('bread backs') at the lowest possible wage and who prefer a rapidly revolving labor supply at low wages to a regular supply of American wage earners at fair wages. The other is composed of racial groups in the United States who oppose all restrictive legislation because they want the doors left open for an influx of their countrymen regardless of the menace to the people of their adopted country.

"It is no more possible to get alien groups to regard immigration as an American issue than it is to get a certain type of American employer to so regard it. Employers regard it as an unemployment issue, and they have no more regard for American standards, American institutions, or American principles in connection with the employment of alien wage earners than they have in connection with the purchase of raw materials. It must be said in fairness to employers, however, that there is less hostility to enactment of proper immigration legislation in this session of Congress than ever before.

RACIAL GROUPS ARE ACTIVE.

"A great many employers, formerly hostile to restrictive legislation see the error of their way and have changed their position entirely as a result of the war. Not so with the racial groups. They constitute the most important factor in opposition to restrictive legislation in the present session of Congress. Resolutions, memorials, and protests by the score have come to Members of Congress, and committees of Congress from racial groups clamoring against protective restrictive legislation.

"Clearly, these groups are acting, not as Americans but as aliens, loyal only to the country of their birth. They have found the goose that lays the golden egg, and they ardently hope the goose will live up to its reputation for foolishness—at least until all of their relatives, friends, and neighbors can get here to share in their good luck.

"Americans not only desire to maintain the standards which they have achieved, but they are determined to improve them. In addition to this, Americans generally are determined to maintain the general character which has been given to our institutions through the racial characteristics of those who have been the dominant force and the largest contributing factor from the very beginning."

COMMANDER QUINN'S STATEMENT.

Commander Quinn, of the American Legion, declares that the melting pot has become impotent, and that in order to keep America a true democracy we should suspend immigration for whatever period may be necessary "until we provide machinery to teach immigrants how to live up to American standards of living, to our ideals, and our traditions."

Reviewing the period since the armistice, Commander Quinn says:

"It did not take long for the Legion to discover that the new group of immigrants was to a large extent a menace to American institutions. Accustomed to the low European standard of living, these foreigners, in their anxiety to have work, accept wages below the wage needed by the American workman to sustain himself and family.

"American institutions are established upon the marginal wage that American labor requires to maintain itself as a self-respecting unit of American society. An influx of cheap labor was bound to undermine this standard of living. Of the 4,500,000 Americans who were in the military service a great majority of them were men who worked with their hands for a living. This tidal flow of unrestricted immigration threatened to prevent their successful reintroduction into civil life. This condition, along with others, caused the American Legion to devote considerable thought to the immigration problem, then, as now, one of the most important facing the Nation.

MELTING POT IS IMPOTENT.

"The American Legion has studied the problem from the viewpoint of the immigrant also, because it maintains that a man does not necessarily have to be born in this country to become a good American.

"Given the opportunities and advantages he should have, the immigrant could become a responsible American citizen. In the past 100 years 80,000,000 foreigners have emigrated to this country and are an integral part of our Nation.

"But the American Legion has found that the melting pot has become impotent, that so multitudinous was the influx of Europeans, driven by discontent, that the country could not assimilate them—was, in fact, suffering from indigestion of immigration.

"Ignorant of their rights and privileges under our existing laws, many immigrants were being exploited, not only by astute men from their own mother country, who had been here longer, but by industry. Unable to act collectively, the immigrant took what wage he could get, and as a result he usually got little. The padrone system made industrial slaves of thousands.

"The bitterness engendered brings me to the consideration of another menace, the fertile bed for sowing radicalism among the embittered immigrants. When once the foreigners have learned their rights and privileges they immediately see what has been done to them, and in their dormant hatred are not content with liberty, but want license. This serious fact is more true now than it was in 1920, or even before the World War.

EUROPE SEETHES WITH REVOLUTION.

"Europe in the past three years bubbles and seethes with revolutionary doctrines. A republic erupts here; a dictatorship springs into being there. Never, perhaps, since the great migrations of the Goths, Cimbrians, and Huns has there been such general unrest and desire to seek new scenes. South Europe, if permitted unrestricted immigration, would flock to this country by millions instead of thousands. Venizelos, the Greek statesman, said that America could solve the problem of the Near East by permitting the 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 nationals there to emigrate to this country.

"Such a move might solve the Near East problem, but I shudder to think what it would do to this country by lowering our standard of living.

"We must close the immigration gates until we have assimilated those now within our borders. It is the sensible thing to do. If you have indigestion you do not continue to gulp down the food that caused it. Any physician would direct you to stop eating until the trouble had vanished. That is exactly what the American Legion advocates."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table. It is an amendment to the bill (S. 2576) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes, which was reported on yesterday. The bill, as reported, I understand, will be soon taken up and become the unfinished business. The bill purports to base the number of immigrants coming to the United States on the census of 1910, while my amendment seeks to put the quota of such immigrants at 2 per cent on the census of 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi will be printed and lie on the table.

REDUCTION OF TAXES.

Mr. McKINLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6715, the tax reduction bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

EXCISE TAX ON WEAPONS.

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1960) to prohibit the entry into the United States and to levy an excise tax on certain weapons, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF VENTILATING, HEATING, AND COOLING SYSTEMS IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That a joint committee to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized to investigate thoroughly the system, plans, and proposals of Carroll L. Riker for the improved ventilation, heating and cooling of the Senate Chamber and of the Hall of the House of Representatives, and such other systems, plans, or proposals for that purpose as the committee may determine. The committee shall make a report of its investigation with recommendation for the adoption (1) of the best and most approved system of ventilation, heating, and cooling of the Senate Chamber and the Hall of the House of Representatives and (2) of suitable regulations for the control and operation of such system.

The committee is authorized to sit during the sessions and recesses of the Sixty-eighth Congress, to call before it the foremost engineers and such other experts as will command the confidence of the Congress to testify under oath; to employ a stenographer to report its proceedings, the cost of such stenographic service not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words; and to incur such other expenses as it deems advisable in making its investigation and report. The expenses so incurred shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

ESTABLISHMENT OF RADIO IN CAPITOL BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 197) submitted yesterday by Mr. HOWELL was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and are hereby, directed to cooperate in the appointment of a joint commission of radio experts from the War and Navy Departments to investigate and report to the Senate upon the following problems, to wit:

First. The equipment of the Senate Chamber with electrical transmission and receiving apparatus such that without defacing the Senate Chamber each Senator at his desk may individually and clearly hear, without the use of a head receiver, the proceedings of the Senate at all times in whatever tone of voice conducted.

Second. The additional equipment necessary for the broadcasting by radio of the proceedings of the Senate and the House of Representatives throughout the country, utilizing the radio stations of the War and Navy Departments.

The report of said commission to include the estimated cost of installation, maintenance, and operation of the proposed systems suggested in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof.

Resolved further, That such commission also be requested to recommend a limited area of the country that for experimental purposes be initially afforded such broadcasting of the proceedings of Congress to the end of determining the advisability of extending such service to cover the entire country; such report to include the cost of such experimental installation together with the expense of maintenance and operation thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules, and the question is on the motion of reference.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, this resolution merely asks for information.

Mr. WARREN. I think it also calls for an expenditure.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I repeat, the purpose of the resolution is merely to secure information. If agreed to, there will be no expense whatever attached to carrying out the terms of the resolution by the experts of the War and Navy Departments. The resolution does not propose to entail one dollar of expenditure. It merely asks that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy appoint a board of experts from those two departments, who shall consider the question and merely report to the Senate what such a proposal would cost; that is all. Not one dollar of expenditure is proposed to be entailed. It is merely information which is asked for, and the information can be obtained by the War and Navy Departments without any expense whatever to the Government.

The United States Navy has $25,000,000 invested in radio appliances, and the Navy has some of the best radio experts in the United States. The Army probably has $15,000,000 invested in radio apparatus, and the Army also has some of the best radio experts in the country. These experts, should the resolution be agreed to, would merely convene, consider the propositions therein submitted, prepare a report, and send it to the Senate. The only expense of that report would be the printing thereof.

Radio communication is a tremendous subject, one in which the entire United States is interested. Why should we not have the information called for by the resolution if it will cost nothing? The use of radio is growing by leaps and bounds. I have been called upon this morning by two representatives of the Radio Corporation of America, who have intimated that their corporation would be willing, at no expense, to broadcast the proceedings of Congress. Why? Because they stated that the proceedings of Congress would be of such tremendous interest to the people of the country that the Radio Corporation of America would like to be the instrument of furnishing such a service to the people.

If that is the situation, why should the resolution be referred to a committee to determine as to whether or not we shall ask for the information? Resolution after resolution is adopted by the Senate asking for information from the heads of the departments. I sincerely trust that the Senate will allow this resolution to become the act of this body, in order that we may have the information which it calls for at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on yesterday I moved that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules. The resolution involves the question of the equipment of the Senate Chamber with radio service, which directly concerns the construction of the Capitol Building, which is in charge of the Committee on Rules. It seems to me a very important matter, and I think the Senate ought to have the benefit of committee action upon it. It is a common practice of the Senate to send resolutions of inquiry to committees before they are adopted by the Senate.

The scope of the resolution is very extensive. It begins by directing the appointment by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy of a commission. Then it takes up the question of the equipment of the Senate Chamber, which is a very important question, indeed, to the Senate. I do not at all know whether or not the Senate desires to have everything which is said here broadcasted. It would certainly extend the debates in the Senate very greatly, and I think the subject ought to have the benefit of the examination of a committee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think that some such information as that called for by the resolution would be very valuable to have presented to the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and it could be procured directly by a committee just as well.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's motion, as I understand, is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules for its consideration as to whether to report it back or not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the resolution involves an important matter which I think ought to go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DILL. I agree to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest that I think the resolution should be referred to one of the standing committees of the Senate. As I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts has moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I have suggested the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules because that committee has charge of the Capitol Building.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the resolution being referred to the Committee on Rules; indeed, I shall be very glad to have it so referred. I think the resolution should certainly receive consideration by a standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, suppose this resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules, the very information which the resolution calls for the committee should have in order properly to consider the subject embraced in the resolution. The committee at the present time has no information respecting the matter. Why should not the Senate have the information that should be placed before the committee in order that it may pass upon the question? Nothing can be done with reference to installation and operation without further action by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's resolution proposes to create a joint commission. It would therefore seem to commit the Senate to the policy of going forward with a proposal to equip the Senate Chamber with radio devices necessary for broadcasting the proceedings of the Senate. The committee, of course, can procure any information that it finds essential to a proper report on the resolution; but, in my judgment, the Senate should not create the commission called for by the Senator's resolution until a standing committee of the Senate has reached the conclusion that it is desirable to convert the United States Senate into a radio broadcasting station.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I am as anxious to see this information secured as is the Senator from Nebraska; but, owing to the fact that it is a new subject and embraces an entirely new proposition, I think there is a great deal to be said in behalf of the contention that it should be referred to some committee that would consider the matter and probably reword the resolution in some way or other which would insure that the information attempted to be secured would be even more advantageous. I merely want to explain to the Senator that that is the reason why I believe the resolution should be referred to a committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote on the resolution now, but I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that if it shall be referred to the Committee on Rules and shall not be acted upon immediately, the Senator then may move to discharge the committee and bring the resolutions back to the Senate for consideration.

I have been thinking a good deal about this resolution which the Senator presented on yesterday, and I really think it would be a good thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will my friend the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to say to the Senator that my suggestion that the resolution be referred to the committee is not a perfunctory one. If the resolution shall be referred there, I shall insist that the committee give the subject the consideration which its importance requires, and I shall not acquiesce in a motion to discharge the committee if it is not immediately reported. I want the Senator from Alabama to understand my viewpoint on the matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was not referring to the Senator's position at all; I was simply explaining my own.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I certainly hope that when the resolution shall be reported back, if it takes that course, there will be no provision in it to install radio devices which will enable us to hear what the country says about us. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. That is one reason I favor it, because I believe if we had in the Senate radio facilities some of the speeches which are now made would not then be made. I believe there would be more speeches made here in the interest of the rule of the people; I believe that there would not be any speeches made here in defense of crooked officials. I think that when a Senator arose to speak, he would know that the sovereign power of this Nation was listening to him, and he would be very careful about what side he took. I think there is a great deal in the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska, and I am in sympathy with his position.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I merely wish to suggest to the committee to which the resolution may be referred that, if they report back the resolution favoring the installation of broadcasting devices in the Senate, at the same time they consider and report a new rule which will divide up the opportunities for speaking in this body.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, there is nothing in the resolution which commits the Senate to action respecting the broadcasting of the proceedings of Congress. The only thing that is in this resolution is a request for information, which can be readily furnished by the War and Navy Departments. I have merely connected the two together, because each is engaged in radio work, and together they have invested in radio in the neighborhood of $40,000,000. Why should not these two departments merely give us some information, information which the committee should have before it passes upon this question at all. If the resolution committed the Senate to any course, that would be one thing, but it does not commit the Senate to any course; it merely asks for information, and it will not cost a dollar. Are we going to say that we will not have this information, that we will first refer the resolution to a committee to determine whether they will recommend that we shall have the information? Is there something in the information for which we are asking that the people of this country ought not to know? Is there something about it that the Senate should not know? I have never known since I have been here—although, of course, my service extends over only a few weeks—a resolution to be offered asking for information from a department which was not passed by unanimous consent. Now, we are asking for information respecting radio and the possibility of broadcasting the proceedings of the Senate. Why should we not have it? What is there in radio that suggests that information respecting it should not be furnished to us by two governmental departments that are conducting such activities?

I sincerely trust that the motion to refer the resolution to a committee will not prevail.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts tell me what the Committee on Rules could do with the resolution when it only calls for information?

Mr. LODGE. They could consider it, perhaps ask for further information, give it consideration—which it has not had—and report back to the Senate their views upon it. They are charged with the care of this part of the Capitol Building, and this is a question to be considered by them. They may wish to amend the resolution. Nobody will have an opportunity to consider it if the reference is not made.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the resolution propose that anything shall be done to the building?

Mr. LODGE. The second clause refers to the equipment of the building.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; but it just refers to the cost of it. It does not propose that we shall proceed to do anything.

Mr. LODGE. The committee can get that information, and get it more quickly, I think, than it can be gotten by sending in a resolution of this kind. We may want to know some other things in regard to it. It is a very important change.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we may want the superintendent of the building to be around when the estimates are made. We may want to know what effect its installation might have on other connections. We may want to know what it will cost to make up the estimate.

Mr. COUZENS. That is included in the resolution—an estimate of what it will cost.

Mr. CURTIS. We may want to know what it will cost to get up the information. We may want to know how long a time it will take. We may want to know if representatives of the departments will be required to come to the building and into this Chamber. We may want them to consult with our engineers to see what effect it might have upon the wiring of the building and other things.

Mr. COUZENS. That can not be done under this resolution, as I understand the Senator. That is his understanding, is it?

Mr. CURTIS. The resolution does not provide for it. It is a new and important question that should be examined into by a committee before action is taken.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I regret to see this opposition to this radio arrangement manifesting itself on the Republican side of the Senate. I see no objection to having this information sent here. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] has made a very strong point, it seems to me, when he says that the other resolutions calling for information have been adopted without going to any committee. This is a big proposition. The President talks over the radio occasionally, and people all over the country can hear him. It is quite a discovery that has been made that people can talk over these instruments and be heard hundreds of miles away.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a minute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator spoke of the President radioing the country. I believe he did that and found a cat. Is that so?

Mr. HEFLIN. The papers carried some statement to the effect that the White House cat was lost, and they radioed for him, but when the cat came in he refused to answer any questions because they might incriminate him. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, speaking of the radio, if we could establish that system here all of these seats would be full every day. The Senators who stay here very little would be in their places, because somebody would ask: "Where is Senator So-and-so? Why is not he here? He is rarely ever here." You would not have to say that more than once. He would be sitting in his seat every day after that. It would do good in that respect, and it would do good in another respect. We have to educate the Republican Party, and if we could force these Republican Senators to stay here the work of education would go on more rapidly. If we could reach the country at the same time that we are educating them, the pressure coming from home would cause them to vote right here.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ODDIE. I will ask the Senator how he reconciles his statement with the proposal that he heard in the committee the other day, and which he was in favor of, that a committee of the Senate visit several cities in the country on certain investigations, spending a week in Kansas City, I think, a week in Chicago, and so on, for the balance of the term. How can Senators be in their places attending to public business if they are required to visit various cities of the country when they should be here?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator has gone off on the wrong trail. That is public business. There is not anything more important than the prevention of the use of the mails for fraudulent purposes. There is nothing more important than to go to the rescue of the citizen who has been deceived and defrauded by the use of a governmental instrumentality and has had the savings of a lifetime taken away from him. It is the duty of the Government to go and see to it that that citizen is protected in his rights and that crooks who thus use the governmental instrumentalities shall be punished. There is no higher service that the Senate can render, or any individual Senator can render, than going out into the country, if necessary, to apprehend these crooks and punish them.

We shall not be gone very long. We are going to take a good deal more testimony right here in Washington, and I take it that we shall not be away from here longer than 10 days in all; and if I should have to go away for 10 days there are several others on this side who will instruct you while I am gone.

So, Mr. President, I am going to vote with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] that these governmental officials be requested to give this information to the Senate without having it go to a committee and be considered and then reported back, and then deciding whether or not we will ask for this information. I want this information. I know now that I want it. I do not know how long it is going to take the average Republican Senator to decide whether or not he wants it, but I know now that I want it, and I think the people will indorse the step we take to get it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

On a division the motion was agreed to.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, some coarse vilification of my esteemed colleague [Mr. WHEELER] has been going the rounds of the press, emanating from the Republican National Committee. I send to the desk a telegram and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the telegram.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

BILLINGS, MONT., March 26, 1924.

HON. THOMAS J. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The confidence of the people of Montana, as evidenced by one of the largest pluralities ever given any candidate in Montana, is unshaken in our junior Senator, B. K. WHEELER. People of this State can not be stampeded by stale charges of which he was thoroughly exonerated long ago. The propaganda against him in to-day's news is merely a rehash of old unfounded charges and shows the straits to which the opposition is put to undermine his efforts. The electorate of this county have every confidence in his integrity and honesty of purpose and resent this unwarranted attack.

LINDHEAL O. JOHNSON,

Chairman Democratic Central Committee, Yellowstone County.

IRA C. COVERT, Secretary.

ASSESSED VALUATION OF RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a further resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The reading clerk read Senate Resolution 199, submitted by Mr. DILL on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, directed to ascertain from the proper authorities of each State of the United States the assessed valuation, on a 100 per cent basis of valuation, as used for taxation purposes, of all of the property of each of the railroads of the United States acting as common carriers, whether used for the purposes of common carriers or not, which are under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and report the said valuations used for taxation purposes to the Senate of the United States: Provided, That said report shall show, first, the total valuations for taxation purposes on a 100 per cent basis of the property of each railroad company or system, separate and apart from other railroads, and, second, the total of such valuations of all railroad properties by States, and, third, the total of such valuation for the whole United States.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in line 5 I omitted some words which I should like to offer as an amendment. After the words "taxation purposes" add the words "for the year 1923." I have no date set out in the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the word "purposes," it is proposed to insert "for the year 1923."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I could not hear the resolution read. Is it a resolution asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish this information?

Mr. DILL. To secure from the various States the information, on a 100 per cent basis of valuation, as to the valuation of all railroad property.

Mr. CURTIS. For taxation purposes?

Mr. DILL. For taxation purposes. I had in mind having the information for use in the committee when we take up for consideration the valuation question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. For information, I desire to ask how this information would be obtained, if, as is the case in many States, the assessed valuation of property, particularly real estate, is less than 100 per cent? They would not have in the county records, in the assessor's office, nor perhaps in the board of equalization at the capital, the full valuation on a 100 per cent basis, in the language of the resolution, of the railroads within the State.

Mr. DILL. In each State they use a certain percentage of valuation. From that can be figured the valuation which would result from a 100 per cent basis. In my State, for instance, we use a 50 per cent valuation. Therefore we would double the 50 per cent valuation to get the 100 per cent basis. I think that method in each State would be only fair in the getting of the taxable value.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has not that information now?

Mr. DILL. I understand not at this time. They would have to acquire it by mail, probably.

Mr. KING. Would this include also electric roads?

Mr. DILL. I think not. It simply refers to those railroads under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know whether or not other States have laws similar to the Delaware law in regard to railroad property. The amount is fixed by legislation, said sum to be paid in lieu of taxes, and from time to time—and frequently the time is long deferred—that statute is amended, increasing the amount to be paid. So, while it is true that we have not a very big State or a very big railroad system, we do have an interstate operation, and the commission is absolutely barred from getting any information along the line suggested from the State of Delaware.

Mr. DILL. The commission could so report as to that State. I think there are very few States of that kind, however, and I would not want to attempt to include language to cover that at this time. Perhaps at a later date I may.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce what is being done, in a general way, and what has been done in regard to the valuation of railroads.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, up to the beginning of this year, according to the information furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I recollect now, about three-fourths of the roads have been valued—a sufficient amount, according to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for them to take the percentage and estimate about what would be the total value, especially of the class A roads. About one-fourth of the roads are yet to be physically valued under the La Follette law. I suppose that is what the Senator has reference to.

Mr. LODGE. That is being done under a general law passed some time ago?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it is about a little more than three-fourths completed. The figures I have in my committee room, but my recollection is that it is about three-fourths completed.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator recall about when the law was passed for the valuation of the roads?

Mr. SMITH. I think that law was passed in 1900 or 1910. Perhaps it has been in actual operation something like 11 or 12 years.

Mr. LODGE. The work has been carried on steadily during that time?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; the valuation has been carried on. The estimated value, as well as I recall now, is something in the neighborhood of $19,000,000,000 plus.

Mr. LODGE. That is, the Senator means the value of the roads already covered?

Mr. SMITH. What the commission have already completed has given a basis of calculation so that the value of the other fourth can be estimated. Estimating the total value upon the basis of the known three-fourths, they estimate the value of all the roads at something like $19,000,000,000 plus.

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator any idea what amount of money has been spent already on the work of valuation?

Mr. SMITH. The figures are in my committee room, and I would not attempt to say accurately, but it is perhaps somewhere between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. Ten or fifteen million already spent?

Mr. SMOOT. More than that; probably twenty million.

Mr. SMITH. I was just speaking from memory.

Mr. KING. About twenty-five million.

Mr. SMITH. I think perhaps $15,000,000 may be nearer correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

OWNERSHIP OF STOCKS, BONDS, ETC., BY OFFICIALS.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the calendar is in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to call from the table Senate Joint Resolution 74, and I ask that it be read by title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the title of the joint resolution.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) introduced by Mr. FRAZIER, relating to ownership of stocks and bonds of industrial, railroad, mining, banking, shipping, oil, and other corporations, firms, and partnerships by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and by employees of the Federal Government, and their relation to such corporations and firms.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to suggest to the Senator that we want to go on with the calendar until 2 o'clock, if we may, and during the morning hour debate is limited to five minutes. Would the Senator mind letting the matter go over until after the time allotted to the calendar, or does he want to go on now?

Mr. FRAZIER. It will take me only about five minutes to make the statement which I wish to make.

Mr. President, the people are more interested in government and governmental affairs than ever before. Public officials are being more closely watched than ever before, and, in my opinion, they should be. The rank and file of our people have been hoping for some real constructive legislation for a long time. They have been disappointed so many times that a general dissatisfaction and unrest exists.

In a great many cases this borders on resentment. The people feel that they have not been and are not getting a "square deal" at the hands of Congress and other Government officials. I am sorry to say this, but I feel that I am in a pretty good position to know what the rank and file of the people, especially of the Middle West, think about it, having come so recently from the farm myself.

I honestly believe the common, ordinary, everyday citizens have lost faith to a large extent in the Government. They feel that the Government is of, by, and for the financial interests, rather than of, by, and for the people, as Lincoln said it should be. Some of the outstanding legislation of recent years goes a long way toward bearing this out—the Federal reserve bank act, the Esch-Cummins railroad bill, the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, the proposed ship subsidy, and, coming down to the present session, the so-called Mellon tax plan. Furthermore, the recent developments brought out by the investigations now going on have not helped in this respect, but have only added proof to what the people have suspected for a long time.

In view of this situation, in view of the developments brought out by the investigations, in order to allay suspicion—publicity kills suspicion—for the protection of Members of Congress and Government officials, and to satisfy the just inquiry of the people, I believe this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. President, this resolution is not aimed at any particular individual; it is not aimed at any group or any party; it is not aimed at the Democrats or the Republicans. The aim of this resolution is to give each Member of Congress and Government official an opportunity to officially put himself on record as to what his interests are and what he represents, and to let the public know the facts they are entitled to know.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is a joint resolution and should go to a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 74.

Mr. CURTIS. It is a joint resolution and should go to one of the committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CURTIS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then I ask that it be referred to the proper committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is in order.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that in taking up the calendar we commence where we left off, with Order of Business No. 252.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish the Senator would add to his request that only unobjected bills shall be considered this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not like to add that, because I do not know how other Senators feel about it.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that in considering the calendar the Senate shall begin with Order of Business No. 252.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have a bill on the calendar which has been twice objected to, which was passed in the last session. I would like to know when the stage will be reached when we can have a vote on that measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not give the information asked for by the Senator.

Mr. FESS. The request of the Senator from Nebraska is that we shall begin where we left off yesterday. Why not begin with the beginning of the calendar, as we generally do?

Mr. NORRIS. The reason why I have made the request is that if we always begin, when we are considering the calendar, at the beginning of the calendar, there will be a number of bills which will never be reached on the call of the calendar. It seems to me when we start with calling the calendar we ought to go as far as we can, and the next time start where we left off. We get through a certain number of bills every time, and if we commence over again, the bills that are reached at the beginning of the calendar are taken up over and over and over again, while there are a lot of other bills further along which never are considered.

Mr. FESS. The Senator declined to ask that only unobjected bills be considered. If the request was that unobjected bills be considered only, I would not object to going on in that way, beginning where we left off, but if we are to consider objected bills as well I want to have my bill considered also.

Mr. NORRIS. I myself would not object to that kind of a request. Still, I do not like to make it, because under the regular rule of the Senate we call the calendar, and when a bill is objected to a Senator has a right to move that it be taken up, and the Senate decides whether to take it up or not.

Mr. FESS. That is all I am asking.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the bill to which the Senator from Ohio refers?

Mr. FESS. The bill to which I am referring is the bill concerning the loss of war-savings stamps in the Bowling Green, Ohio, post office.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the calendar number?

Mr. FESS. Calendar No. 192. It is a bill which was passed almost unanimously last session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIS. Reserving the right to object, if that is necessary—and it is not—I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not withhold his request long enough to permit my colleague to request unanimous consent that Order of Business No. 192 be taken up. It is a bill which was passed in the last Congress and I think in the preceding one, was it not?

Mr. FESS. Yes; it was.

Mr. WILLIS. It has been twice passed by this body, and I think was objected to yesterday under a misapprehension. If the Senator from Nebraska would withhold his request, my colleague could then ask unanimous consent that his bill be taken up, and we could proceed with it.

Mr. NORRIS. If my request is granted, it will be in order for the Senate to take up the bill to which the Senator has reference.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought it might be open to argument as to whether that would be the case. If it is understood that my colleague can then make his request, I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. He may make his request then.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the calling of the calendar will begin with Order of Business No. 252.

DAVID C. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business No. 192.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 192, the bill (S. 2168) for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why not proceed with the calendar in the regular way? Will we not be able to reach the Senator's bill?

Mr. FESS. The call of the calendar will begin with a number beyond that of the bill which I have called up.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was there objection on yesterday to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FESS. There was what was equivalent to an objection; some one asking for the reading of the report, which was quite long.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator make a brief statement respecting the bill, and it may be that it can be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that if there is to be objection—

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the rule of procedure an objection can be made at any time, so that the Senate can proceed to the consideration of the bill and any Senator under the rule and the practice of the Senate is entitled to object. The Senate does not, by taking up the bill, preclude itself from an objection under the order under which we are proceeding. My suggestion is that we take it up, and I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wants to have it fully understood that if the Senate makes the agreement that is proposed by the Senator from Ohio we are not then proceeding under Rule VIII, but we are proceeding under the unanimous-consent agreement to take up and consider the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. We are now proceeding with the calendar under Rule VIII. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to recur to a number on the calendar that has been passed over. He does not move to proceed to its consideration. Therefore the same practice would apply as would apply to bills that have not yet been reached on the calendar, unless the Chair himself insists upon raising the point of order against the proceeding. I suggest that the Senator make a brief statement regarding his bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may make the statement, but the Chair wants to understand the unanimous-consent agreement that has been made, which, as he now perceives it, is that the Senate shall proceed—

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio state his request?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Ohio asks to recur to a number on the calendar that had been passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will state again his request for an agreement.

Mr. FESS. I request unanimous consent to return to No. 192 on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request now made by the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2168) for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David C. Van Voorhis, of Bowling Green, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,931.17, being the amount of war-savings stamps lost by him while postmaster during the year 1918, without fault on his part, and which amount was thereafter by him paid to the Government out of his own funds.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in 1918, during the war, when the post office was in the business of the sale of war-savings stamps, there were lost in the post office at Bowling Green, Ohio, war-savings stamps that amounted to a little over $1,900. The postmaster paid the Government the full amount. Afterwards the Post Office Department sent an investigator into Bowling Green to make an investigation of the situation. The investigation was exhaustive, and the report was to the effect that the post office was not very heavily manned at the time. The assistant postmaster, by the name of Brewer, was ill. He at one time had asked to be relieved by having some one substituted for him, but that was not done. It was during this time that the loss took place. The report was to the effect that there was no laches in any way on the part of the authorities in the office, that they held the postmaster not to blame, and reported in favor of the Government reimbursing him.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Third Assistant Postmaster General stated in a communication upon the subject that if the Post Office Department had the power it could grant relief to the postmaster in this instance, but that it would require legislation in order to accomplish it.

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I see no reason why the bill should not pass. It is similar to many bills that have already passed.

Mr. FESS. It has twice passed the Senate in previous Congresses, but never got through the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does it appear that there was any absence of a safe or other way of protecting the stamps?

Mr. FESS. I understand there was not.

Mr. FLETCHER. How did the loss occur?

Mr. FESS. It is claimed that in the press of the business of the office—the office being at the time insufficiently manned—it came about; they could not ascertain the source of it; but the loss occurred.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was this one of those central accounting offices that were built up under the plan that required one office to supply several others?

Mr. FESS. I think so. This was the county seat of Wood County.

Mr. CARAWAY. That always entailed upon the postmasters more burdens than they had force to meet. I have several instances like it.

Mr. FESS. I see no reason why the Congress should not give authority to reimburse the postmaster, when under the circumstances he did not seem to be responsible.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE IN FEDERAL COURTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the calendar under Rule VIII will begin at Order of Business 252.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 624) to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEPPER. May I ask to have the pending amendment stated for the information of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. In lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "triable by jury, in which the jury has been impeached to try the issue of facts," and insert in lieu thereof the words "tried by jury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the words "pending in said court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in line 7, to strike out the word "personal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in line 8, to strike out the words "of testimony involved in said issue" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or value of the evidence."

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to move a substitute for the pending amendment, as follows: On page 1, in line 8, after the word "weight," strike out the words "of testimony involved in said issue or value of the evidence" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the evidence," so that the clause would read:

The credibility of witnesses or the weight of the evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves a substitute for the committee amendment, which the Secretary will report, reporting the language as it would be if amended by the substitute of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The READING CLERK. Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "of testimony involved in said issue," and also the words in italics, "or value of the evidence," and insert "of the evidence," so as to read, "opinion as to the credibility of witnesses or the weight of the evidence."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 and insert in lieu thereof:

At the conclusion of the evidence and before argument of counsel the judge shall deliver his charge to the jury in writing.

Mr. RALSTON. Let me inquire if that means to strike out the proviso on that page, that where States allow the judge to instruct jurors after argument that practice will be followed?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; it does not strike that out.

Mr. RALSTON. It leaves that in?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. RALSTON. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to propose an additional amendment. On page 1 of the bill, in line 10, following the word "court," I move to insert the words "from entering a judgment of compulsory nonsuit or from," so that the proviso would read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the court from entering a judgment of compulsory nonsuit or from directing a verdict when the same may be required or permitted as a matter of law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator explain just what he desires to accomplish by that amendment?

Mr. PEPPER. There is some difference of opinion among Senators as to whether the same necessity that makes it desirable to reserve by proviso the right of the court to direct the verdict does not also require the reservation of the right to direct a compulsory nonsuit. The thought is that every judgment of compulsory nonsuit involves some estimate by the court respecting the sufficiency of the testimony that has been adduced in support of the plaintiff's claim. It is to safeguard a practice which every one of us would desire to safeguard that the proviso has been amplified in the way suggested by the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think the entire proviso is outside of any authority conferred by the Constitution of the United States. I do not think the sixth or seventh amendments provide for that sort of restriction. Still I am so desirous of getting some legislation through the Congress on the subject that I shall not at this time object.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator would be of opinion, would he not, that if any proviso were to be inserted it ought to be a comprehensive one?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have already so stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. I beg leave to offer a final amendment. On page 2, in line 10, after the word "charge," I move to insert the words "orally and," so that the whole would read:

That in United States courts sitting in States in which the law permits the trial judge to deliver his charge orally and after argument of counsel, such procedure and practice may be followed by the trial judges in United States courts sitting in such States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLINTON G. EDGAR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1799) to refund to Clinton G. Edgar income tax erroneously and illegally collected. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and pay to Clinton G. Edgar $3,253.79 for income taxes erroneously and illegally collected from him in 1917.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by myself in the interest of securing a refund of an income tax which was illegally collected, the claim for refund having been barred by statute of limitations. The Secretary of the Treasury, I understand, recommends that the refunds be made. I hope there will be no objection to the refund, because refunds are being made and have been made in promiscuous sums for some years.

Mr. OVERMAN. What was the trouble about the beneficiary of this bill getting a refund from the Treasury without coming to Congress for relief?

Mr. COUZENS. It became necessary for him to come to Congress because, as I have stated, the claim before the department was barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. OVERMAN. What number of years has elapsed since the tax for which a refund is now asked was paid?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not now recall, but it is stated in the report on the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The tax was collected in 1917. I did not see the Senator from Michigan present when I rose; but I was struck with the last sentence in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the bill, in which he states:

In accordance with the above, I am unable to approve the proposed bill authorizing refund of $3,253.79 to Clinton G. Edgar.

That would seem to be an adverse report from the Treasury Department.

Mr. COUZENS. The Committee on Claims have reported the bill favorably. I do not know just exactly what consideration moved them, but the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] spoke to me about the matter, and he reported the bill. The report of the committee states:

Since the commissioner is without power now under the law to act, having failed to act as required by law at the time required by law, this is a case which in all justice calls for remedial legislation.

It is the purpose of the present bill to remedy this injustice, since the taxpayer has no recourse either in the departments or in the courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator from Michigan particularly examined the refund in question, and is he assured that it would be a proper refund but for the statute of limitations?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I am satisfied of that, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, if I may say a word, I desire to state that the Committee on Claims went into the matter very carefully, and there was no one who questioned that the Government had received these taxes and had received them wrongfully. The person named in the bill was clearly entitled to a refund of the taxes, but under the law they could not be refunded. The Secretary of the Treasury, I think, however, was of the opinion that there should be a general statute enacted covering such cases, but, of course, it would take a long time to get such action.

Mr. FLETCHER. It looks as if the report of the Secretary of the Treasury from which I have read was based on the idea that there is an already existing remedy; that there is no need of a special act to cover this case; but the committee reports that this tax money was actually paid in excess of what was due, and if the passage of the bill is the proper way to have it refunded I presume the bill should be allowed to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN O. KRUSCHKE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1790) for the relief of Herman O. Kruschke, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, in line 9, after the word "no," to insert the word "pay"; and in line 10, after the word "pension," to insert "bounty, or other emoluments," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John Kurs, alias Herman O. Kruschke, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of the Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF SURPLUS BOOKS FROM NAVY DEPARTMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 350) to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment in line 3, after the word "authorized," to strike out the words "and directed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer such books as may not be required for the uses of the Navy Department to the Interior Department as the Secretary of the Interior may consider useful for educational purposes at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and other Indian schools throughout the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] explain the object of this bill? We have had a few more "transfers from the Navy to the Interior Department" than were desirable. I do not see what occasion there can be for a transfer in this instance, but perhaps this bill does not refer to oil reserves.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Navy goes into the matter quite fully. The Interior Department wanted to secure the use of books for the Indian school at Santa Fe. That is the special occasion for this proposed legislation. The Navy Department had a large number of books which were no longer needed in the Navy Department, and so the bill merely proposes to transfer such books to the Interior Department as the authorities may think desirable.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the passage of the bill, but asked the question because there was no report in reference to the bill on my calendar file.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD SUFFERERS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I was not able to be present at the time when we were last considering the calendar, when order of business No. 223 was reached. That is just above the point where we commenced the consideration of the calendar to-day. It is a measure which passed the Senate at the last session of Congress. I ask unanimous consent that we may take that bill up for consideration at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 223. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not apprehend that I shall object, but I should like to have the bill read. It is back of the point at which we started this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 349) for the relief of sufferers in New Mexico from the flood due to the overflow of the Rio Grande and its tributaries.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over. I should like to examine it further.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well, if the Senator from Utah so desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 112) providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether I have any objection to the bill or not. I have not had time to read it over carefully, nor to study the report. The chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is not present, he having reported the bill. It is a very important bill, and I think that it ought to go over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FLAG FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2439) to create a commission to procure a design for a flag for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, created a commission to procure a design for a distinctive flag for the District of Columbia, the seat of the Capital of the Nation: Provided, That in the selection of such design the commission hereby created shall have the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and to be read the third time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill, but I do not see why it should cost $1,500 to perform the work which is proposed by the bill. I move to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$500," in line 1, on page 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On line 1, page 2, it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$500."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee is absent from the city to-day, and I think it would be rather unfair to consider an amendment of that kind in his absence. Rather than have action by the Senate on a matter for which the Senator from Delaware perhaps has a good defense, I would rather see the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to suggest that the bill has passed beyond the stage of amendment. Without objection, however, the order of the Senate passing the bill to a third reading is reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think that if we adopt the amendment I have suggested and then pass the bill, it could be corrected in the House, if there is need of any more money than is provided in the amendment. It is a Senate bill, and I should like to make headway with it.

Mr. McNARY. In all fairness, in view of the situation, I shall ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over in the parliamentary stage that it has now reached.

ADJUSTMENT BY SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to adjust a transaction relating to 3,500 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. FLETCHER asked that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was going to say that, in the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Edge], who is the author of the joint resolution, I should like to make a brief statement if I could have any encouragement that the objection would be withheld.

Mr. FLETCHER. I withhold the objection in order that the Senator may make a statement, but I do not wish to have the bill acted on to-day.

Mr. McNARY. I have only this to say: A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session, and it is similar also to two other bills which passed the Senate and also the House at the last session of Congress. It merely authorizes the Sugar Equalization Board to examine the facts and determine whether or not there is a liability for a quantity of sugar which was shipped from the Argentine to this country following the war for the purpose of depressing the extortionate price then being charged to consumers of sugar. The bill has been favorably reported by the committee, and a favorable report has also been made by the Department of Justice. I do not care to go into a long discussion of the bill if the Senator insists upon the objection. I have merely given a brief outline of its purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that there is objection to consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I think it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF WOODEN CARS ON RAILROADS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on yesterday, when we reached Order of Business 199, Senate bill 1499, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] objected to its coming up; but he is now agreeable to its passage, and will not object. I therefore ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. What bill is it?

Mr. HARRIS. It is Senate bill 1499.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the bill be read for the information of the Senate first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1409) to promote the safety of passengers and employees upon railroads by prohibiting the use of wooden cars under certain circumstances.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the bill be read for information first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York object to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I withhold objection until I know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That when used in this act the term "common carrier" means a common carrier subject to the interstate commerce act, as amended, engaged in the transportation of passengers.

SEC. 2. That on and after 30 days after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for a common carrier to use a car other than a steel or steel underframe car, between steel cars or steel underframe cars, or in front of any steel car or steel underframe car, in any train used in whole or in part for the transportation of passengers.

SEC. 3. That any common carrier which violates the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each offense and $100 for each day of the continuance of the offense. Such penalty shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil suit brought by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation about the bill. It seems to me it is a very important one. I should like to hear from some of the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, let me read to the Senator what the Interstate Commerce Commission says about the bill. They have recommended the passage of a measure like this a number of times in their annual reports, and I read an extract from a letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission dated February 20, 1922. They say:

We urge immediate action on legislation providing that no wooden passenger-train cars shall be located in a train between or ahead of steel or steel underframed cars. Such legislation would not entail an additional expenditure but would increase safety.

That is all there is to it. Let us say that in my State, for example, there is a Pullman steel car, and between that and the engine there are three or four frame cars. In the event of an accident the steel car would telescope those frame cars, and it would mean the death of probably 100 people. This bill is to remedy that. It will not cost the railroads one dollar. It is simply to protect life and to protect people from being injured by putting frame cars between steel cars and engines.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the bill been reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. HARRIS. It is reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. KING. Does it relate to cars operated by electricity—that is, interurban roads?

Mr. HARRIS. It does not mention them, but I should say that it would include them, and I think persons traveling in such cars ought to be protected just like others. It refers to all common carriers.

Mr. KING. Does it prevent the use of wooden cars absolutely upon trains?

Mr. HARRIS. Not at all. It does not prevent the use of wooden cars. It does not prevent anything except putting frame cars between steel cars.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, if the bill is unanimously reported from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMSHIP "LEXINGTON."

The bill (S. 81) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Colonial Navigation Co., owner of the American steamship Lexington, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States submarine O-7 on the 6th day of October, 1919, in the East River, N. Y., near Horns Hook, may be sued for by the owner of the said American steamship Lexington in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, including interest, and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said American steamship Lexington, or against the owner of the said American steamship Lexington in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not find this bill on my calendar. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps I can explain it in a moment.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All that this bill does is to authorize the Federal district court for the eastern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, to hear this claim.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK GRYGLA.

The bill (S. 362) for the relief of Frank Grygla was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of Frank Grygla, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $669.71, for salary as special agent of the General Land Office for the period October 15, 1901, to May 8, 1902, being at the rate of $1,200 per annum, such salary having been withheld on account of his suspension from duty by an order of the department to investigate charges against him which were not sustained and from which he was entirely exonerated.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The reading clerk read the report (No. 249) submitted by Mr. CAPPEN on the 14th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 362) for the relief of Frank Grygla, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in Senate Report No. 611, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

[Senate report No. 611, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 910) for the relief of Frank Grygla, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

"The facts in the case are fully set forth in the following letter from the Secretary of the Interior, under date of May 15, 1920, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report."

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, May 15, 1920.

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,

Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with your request of April 24, 1920, for a report on Senate bill 2701, for the relief of Frank Grygla, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

By departmental order of October 4, 1901, Mr. Grygla, then a special agent of the General Land Office, and so appointed April 8, 1898, was suspended from duty pending investigation of charges against his official conduct. After a full investigation of these charges the Commissioner of the General Land Office transmitted to the department a report by a special agent of the investigation. In his letter of transmittal the commissioner made the following statement:

"This report, which appears to be based upon a careful investigation, contains the well-sustained conclusion that Special Agent Grygla has devoted himself to his official duties and has accomplished as much as could be expected under the conditions prevailing in Alaska. I therefore respectfully recommend that Special Agent Frank Grygla be relieved from suspension."

By departmental order of April 26, 1902, Mr. Grygla was relieved from suspension, salary and allowance to begin when he should resume duty, since which time he served the Government, either as a special agent or clerk, most of the time until his death, which occurred November 20, 1918.

In March of 1918 Mr. Grygla filed in the General Land Office a claim for compensation for salary and per diem, amounting in the aggregate to $1,460.36, claiming compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum, the salary allowed him when in Alaska, and $3 per diem. This claim was disallowed as to the days of October 14 and May 6 for the reason that Mr. Grygla had been paid for those days, and was disallowed as to the remainder for the reason that he was not in Alaska when he received notice of suspension, and therefore was entitled in any event only to pay at the rate of $1,200 per annum, his salary when not in Alaska, and for the further reason that the order of suspension made no provision for payment of salary and per diem for the period of suspension. (See 21 Compt. Dec. 478.)

In view of the fact that Mr. Grygla was fully exonerated after investigation of the charges, of the fact that the Interior Department can not under the law reimburse him for losses incurred by his suspension, and of the further fact that similar claims have been allowed by the Court of Claims (41 C. Cls. R. 514, case No. 27948), I think it proper that relief as proposed in Senate bill 2701 be granted.

Cordially yours,

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HASTINGS BROS.

The bill (S. 763) for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros. and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owners of the steam water boat Iola, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said steam water boat and the United States tug Hercules in Elizabeth River on the 3d day of April, 1910, may be sued for by the said Hastings Bros. in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of said Hastings Bros., or against the said Hastings Bros. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORIN THORNTON.

The bill (S. 606) for the relief of Orin Thornton, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago, when Senate bill 606 was reached on the calendar, I objected to its consideration. I was not familiar with its terms. I thought, upon reading it, that it was to correct the record of a man who had deserted. I have been advised that there was no desertion; that it was just a mistake upon the part of some of the officers at the time in Thornton's given name; and I ask unanimous consent that we recur to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Orin Thornton, late of Company A, Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of said company and regiment: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIOLATION OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

The bill (S. 2399) to provide and adjust penalties for violation of the navigation laws, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments, on page 2, line 1, after the words "penalty of," to insert "not more than," and on line 2, after the word "liable," to strike out "and the owner of the vessel transporting such automobile also shall incur a like penalty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be added at the end of section 4472, Revised Statutes, as amended, the provision: "That the owner of any automobile in which all fire has not been extinguished and the motors stopped immediately after the automobile has taken its position on any vessel found on navigable waters of the United States and in which such fires do not remain extinguished and the motors remain idle until the vessel is made fast to the wharf or ferry bridge at which she lands shall incur a penalty of not more than $500, for which the automobile shall be liable."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF PAYMENT OF COMMUTATION OF QUARTERS, ETC.

The bill (S. 2299) to validate the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918, and of rental and subsistence allowances under the act of June 10, 1922, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, after line 6, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all payments of armory drill pay made to enlisted men of the National Guard for fractional parts of months be, and the same are hereby, validated: Provided, That any amounts heretofore collected on account of payments so validated shall be refunded: Provided further, That where such armory drill pay has been withheld, payment of same is hereby authorized: And provided further, That the unobligated balances of the appropriations "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard" for fiscal years 1922, 1923, and 1924, are hereby made available for settlement of any claims arising under this section.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light, under the act approved April 16, 1918 (40 Stats. p. 530), and of rental, and subsistence allowances under sections 4, 5, and 6 of the act of June 10, 1922 (42 Stats. p. 627), made in good faith by disbursing officers prior to June 22, 1923, on account of dependents, and without fraud on the part of the payee as determined by the Secretary of War, be, and the same are hereby, validated: Provided, That any amount heretofore collected on account of payments so validated shall be refunded.

SEC. 2. That all payments of armory drill pay made to enlisted men of the National Guard for fractional parts of months be, and the same are hereby, validated: Provided, That any amounts heretofore collected on account of payments so validated shall be refunded: Provided further, That where such armory drill pay has been withheld, payment of same is hereby authorized: And provided further, That the unobligated balances of the appropriations "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard" for fiscal years 1922, 1923, and 1924 are hereby made available for settlement of any claims arising under this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have an explanation from the Senator from New York about this bill, how far it reaches, and to what extent it applies to other States or to any particular case? What is the general purpose of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there are two distinct purposes in the bill. They are quite unrelated, one to the other.

The first provision of the bill is found necessary by what to my mind seems an extraordinary ruling of the comptroller. Perhaps it would be of interest to the Senator from Utah to let me advise him what has happened in the matter of the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light, and, subsequent to the abolition of that allowance to the Army, in the payment of subsistence and rental allowances.

On April 16, 1918, we passed an act providing for the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light for the wife and child or dependent parent of an officer. In accordance with this act an officer's certificate was prepared, approved by the Comptroller General and accepted by the General Accounting Office, and all vouchers claiming commutation were dependent upon that certificate. On April 6, 1922, four years later, the Comptroller General ruled, in effect, that the certificate was not sufficient, and demanded a certain form of affidavit that was instantly agreed to by the War Department, and the entire service informed of the form of affidavit which an officer would have to make before this allowance would be approved by the Comptroller General when it came before him in the form of a voucher.

Then, on June 10, 1922, we passed a pay readjustment act, affecting the Army and Navy and related services, and we abolished the allowance known as commutation of quarters, heat, and light, and substituted therefor subsistence and rental allowance. Twelve days later the Comptroller General issued an approved form of affidavit to be executed by officers making application for these allowances. That was distributed to the service, and the officers conformed with the approved form, and were paid that allowance. On January 20, 1923, the Comptroller General changed the approved form and sent out another one. The War Department instantly published that to the service, and officers thereafter conformed with the new approved form, and were paid in accordance with the terms of the statute. On June 22, 1923, the Comptroller General ruled that, based upon experience, the former approved form and all forms prior to that were insufficient and that it was necessary for him to have another new form of affidavit, and that was published to the service and complied with immediately. Those constantly changing requirements of the Comptroller General were, without delay, published to the service and every effort made fully to comply with the requirements.

Now, the Comptroller General states that all payments made to officers on the forms approved by him prior to the last form are subject to suspicion, and that action must be taken to collect from these officers payments made to them of commutation of heat, light, and quarters prior to the new pay readjustment act, all payments made to them for rental or subsistence long subsequent to the passage of the new pay readjustment act. The War Department finds itself under the necessity of going back through its pay records, going to hundreds and hundreds of officers who were paid by disbursing officers in perfectly good faith in accordance with the forms approved by the comptroller and in the General Accounting Office, and attempting to collect from officers sums as high as $2,500 apiece, and varying from that maximum sum down to insignificant small sums.

Of course, no service of any department of the Government can be operated if the whim of the Comptroller General is to result in the changing of forms of affidavits and application blanks four or five or six times, and then, finally, when the Comptroller General issues the one which he says now suits his ideas, he shall hold that all prior forms are insufficient and payments made under them illegal. The purpose of this bill is to validate the payments made under the forms previously adopted and approved by the Comptroller General himself.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator should add an amendment providing that the Comptroller General should agree with himself for at least a year, so as to avoid these conflicts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He does not seem able to do that. In the amendment to the bill again we have the Comptroller General involved, and I think perhaps technically in this case he is right. The law provides that an enlisted man of the National Guard shall be paid armory-drill pay, and it averages for a private $1 a drill, with a limited number of drills per year—I think about 48 or 50—but it is provided that he shall not be paid any drill pay unless he attends 60 per cent of the drills fixed for his organization in any one calendar month.

Suppose a man enlists on the 15th of the month for a three-year enlistment. He will miss the first two drills in that calendar month. He attends the next two drills. The Comptroller General says he can not be paid for those next two drills, because he has not attended 60 per cent of the drills for the month. He could not do so, for he was not in the service.

It does not end there. His three-year enlistment period expires on the 15th of the month three years from that time, and therefore he misses the last two drills of that month. Although he has attended the first two drills of that last month of his service, he can not be paid for them, because he could not attend 60 per cent of the drills for the last month. So he is deprived of pay for four drills under the ruling of the Comptroller General.

This amendment cures that situation very simply. It reads:

Provided, That all payments of armory-drill pay made to enlisted men of the National Guard for fractional parts of months be, and the same are hereby, validated.

These men have been paid this money, and the Comptroller General insists that they give the money back. They have served the Government, attended the drills, and conformed with all the regulations.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether there have been any payments made which come within the category of either of these provisions which should not be validated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to validate the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918, and of rental and subsistence allowances under the act of June 10, 1922, and for other purposes."

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 2450) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1894, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard shall not be construed to hold an office within the meaning of this section."

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that measure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill is here on account of another ruling of the Comptroller General, and I think one of the most extraordinary ones I ever heard of.

The law provides that a person holding office in or under the Government shall not hold another position under the Government which carries a salary in excess of $2,500 per annum. That needs no explanation.

There are retired enlisted men of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps who have served 30 years in the service and are retired at three-fourths pay of the grade they occupied on the date of retirement. The Government, in other departments, has employed those men, some of them to the great advantage of the Government on account of their extraordinary training and experience. The Comptroller General comes along and says that a retired enlisted man holds an office as such, a most extraordinary conclusion. This bill states definitely that a retired enlisted man does not hold an office, and, of course, he does not hold an office. His relations to the Government are contractual in nature, that is all. If a retired enlisted man is held to hold an office under the Government, then an active-duty enlisted man must likewise be held to hold an office under the Government. As a matter of fact, we know that when an enlisted man enlists he takes a contract to serve the Government for a fixed period of years. How the Comptroller General or anybody else could say that an enlisted man in the Army or Navy holds an office under the Government passes my comprehension.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the bill permit a retired enlisted man to draw his three-fourths pay and at the same time draw his salary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly, if he is serving the Government in another capacity. That ought to be the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLORENCE PROUD.

The bill (S. 1017) for the relief of Florence Proud was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF WILD BIRDS AND ANIMALS.

The bill (S. 2146) to amend section 84 of the Penal Code of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 84 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (34 Stat. p. 1088), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 84. Whoever shall hunt, trap, capture, willfully disturb, or kill any bird or wild animal of any kind whatever, or take or destroy the eggs of any such bird on any lands of the United States which have been set apart or reserved as refuges or breeding grounds for such birds or animals by any law, proclamation, or Executive order, except under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, prescribe, or who shall willfully injure, molest, or destroy any property of the United States on any such lands shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska to give an explanation of this? First, let me say that I have rather a constitutional objection to conferring so much authority upon the Federal courts or Federal agencies to handle cases which ought to be within the cognizance of the States.

Mr. NORRIS. I share the Senator's ideas on that subject, in the main.

Mr. KING. I know the Senator does.

Mr. NORRIS. This bill, however, I think will meet with no objection when I state that it is a copy of the existing law, except that it prohibits the trapping and capturing of birds and wild animals on other reservations than bird reservations. Under the present law the prohibition applies only to bird reservations. This extends it to other animal reservations which are under the control of the Department of Agriculture. I can not see any reason why we should protect birds on one reservation and not on another.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is a very good measure.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLOW CREEK RANGER STATION, MONTANA.

The bill (S. 2147) to complete the construction of the Willow Creek ranger station, Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend, out of any moneys appropriated for general expenses of the Forest Service, not to exceed the sum of $500 to complete the construction of the Willow Creek ranger station in the Lewis and Clark National Forest, Mont.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Nebraska explain that bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in this case the department started to build a ranger station at the Willow Creek station, Montana. The law fixed the limit at $1,000. There was a sudden rise in the price of lumber about the time they started to build the station. The station is now partially completed, and on account of this increase in the price of lumber they are unable to finish it within the limit of $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take another $500 to complete the station?

Mr. NORRIS. The department does not think it will take $500 additional, but they thought we had better make it $500, so as to be on the safe side.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS.

The bill (S. 2148) to empower certain officers, agents, or employees of the Department of Agriculture to administer and take oaths, affirmations, and affidavits in certain cases, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That such officers, agents, or employees of the Department of Agriculture of the United States as are designated by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose are hereby authorized and empowered to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit whenever such oath, affirmation, or affidavit is for use in any prosecution or proceeding under or in the enforcement of any law committed to or which may hereafter be committed to the Secretary of Agriculture or the Department of Agriculture or any bureau or subdivision thereof for administration. Any such oath, affirmation, or affidavit administered or taken by or before such officer, agent, or employee when certified under his hand and authenticated by the seal of the Department of Agriculture may be offered or used in any court of the United States and shall have like force and effect as if administered or taken before a clerk of such court without further proof of the identity or authority of such officer, agent, or employee.

SEC. 2. That no officer, agent, or employee of the Department of Agriculture shall demand or accept any fee or compensation whatsoever for administering or taking any oath, affirmation, or affidavit under the authority conferred by this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST SERVICE AND REFORESTATION.

The bill (S. 2149) to facilitate and simplify the work of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, and to promote reforestation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys received as contributions toward reforestation or for the administration or protection of lands within or near the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of said reforestation, administration, or protection by the Forest Service and for refunds to the contributors of amounts heretofore or hereafter paid in by or for them in excess of their share of the cost.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture, out of any moneys appropriated for the improvement or protection of the national forests, may construct, improve, or purchase buildings for national forest purposes at a cost of not to exceed $2,500 each, but not more than 10 buildings constructed, improved, or purchased in any one year shall cost in excess of $1,000 each.

SEC. 3. The act of June 6, 1906 (31 Stat. p. 651), is hereby amended to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, to sell, without advertisement, in quantities to suit applicants, at a fair appraisement, timber and cordwood not exceeding $1,000 in stumpage.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish subsistence to employees of the Forest Service, to purchase personal equipment and supplies for them, and to make deductions therefor from moneys appropriated for salary payments or otherwise due such employees.

SEC. 5. Where no suitable Government land is available for national forest headquarters or ranger stations the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase such lands out of any funds appropriated for building improvements on the national forests, but not more than $5,000 shall be so expended in any one year, and to accept donations of land for any national forest purpose.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to provide, out of moneys appropriated for the general expenses of the Forest Service, medical attention for employees of the Forest Service located at isolated situations, including the moving of such employees to hospitals or other places where medical assistance is available, and in case of death to remove the bodies of deceased employees to the nearest place where they can be prepared for shipment or for burial.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator from Nebraska make some explanation of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. The desirability of this legislation is pretty well set forth in a letter directed to me, signed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The idea of it all is to simplify some of the difficulties under which the Agricultural Department in its Forest Service labors at the present time. For instance, here is one of them:

(c) Ordinarily rangers in charge of isolated back country districts are kept at their posts from the beginning to the end of the fire season. During this period it is necessary to supply them with food and personal equipment through purchases made on the outside and forwarded to them by Government pack trains. This section would substitute business methods for the present lax arrangement.

Section 5 would authorize the department to expend not more than $5,000 in any one year from existing Forest Service appropriations for land for ranger station headquarters where no suitable Government land is available therefor. In past years several cases have arisen where all the land suitable for headquarters sites within a ranger district, where the needs of the Government require a forest ranger to be stationed upon the ground, had been acquired by private owners prior to the establishment of the national forest. In many instances suitable sites have been donated to the Government. It is the view of the present solicitor of the department, however, that such donations are not authorized by statute.

I am just reminded that it is only 2 minutes of 2 o'clock. I would not be able to finish the explanation by that time. I think, and the committee thought, that there was nothing in the bill except a provision for the installation of more business methods in the handling of these remote stations.

Mr. McKELLAR. The principal objection I have to it is that it sets a very bad precedent in permitting the Secretary of Agriculture, or any Secretary, for that matter, to expend money out of income without any appropriation by Congress. I think that is a very bad practice.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator not to make an objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not make any objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 5, the general pension bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the bill just under consideration passed rather quickly, but I am not going to make any objection to it. I had a little experience this past summer—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment to permit me to make a request?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have somewhat the same view about it that the Senator from Florida has just expressed, and I have so stated to the Senator from Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was just passed be reconsidered, and let the bill go over until we may have an opportunity to examine into it more carefully.

Mr. NORRIS. I will join in the request. Of course, I have no desire to take any advantage of the situation. It will be understood, of course, that we will begin with that bill on the next call of the calendar. It is perfectly proper that Senators should have an opportunity to look into it if they so desire.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not mean to raise any objection to the passage of the bill or to the bill itself. I thought there might be some little opportunity to make some inquiry regarding certain provisions for the erection of new buildings, and so forth, but I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to the passage of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. It had passed, but the Senator from Tennessee wants to look into some features of it further and has asked unanimous consent that the vote by which it was passed may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course I shall not object to that, but I want to correct the impression that seemed to prevail that I rose for the purpose of calling attention to the quick passage of the bill as if it was objectionable to me.

I want to make this further statement about it. I had some experience last summer as a member of the special committee on reforestation, and we came in contact with the national forests and national parks. The men connected with the Forest Service, I desire to say without any hesitation, in my judgment are the finest type of men, the highest class of men connected with the Government in any capacity whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to confirm the statement of the Senator from Florida, because it agrees with my view. I have come in contact with them in an official capacity many times. I think we have in the Forest Service, so far as I know, without exception a fine set of men who are doing their full duty at a very meager pay.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I have no doubt that all he states about the service is correct. It is not on that ground at all that I am objecting. It seems to me that it is a bad practice to have any officers of the Government to collect moneys and pay them out. I think all moneys ought to be paid out through appropriations from the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the Senator at all. It is perfectly proper that he should have an opportunity to look into the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall do so by the next time it is called on the calendar. I suppose the Senator will be willing to accept some amendments along the line I have suggested.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask that the Senate proceed with the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ernst	Keyes	Robinson
Bayard	Ferris	Lodge	Sheppard
Brandegee	Fess	McKellar	Simmons
Brookhart	Fletcher	McKinley	Smoot
Broussard	Frazier	McNary	Stephens

Dill	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. LENROOF) on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me until I present a conference report?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly. I ask that the pension bill, the unfinished business, may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 10, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 34, 35, 36, 39, 45, and 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 37, 38, 42, 46, 48, and 49, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,735,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That no money herein appropriated for the enforcement of the national prohibition act, the customs laws, or internal revenue laws shall be used to pay for storage in any private warehouse of intoxicating liquors or other property in connection therewith seized pursuant to said acts and necessary to be stored, where there is available for that purpose space in a Government warehouse or other suitable Government property in the judicial district wherein such property was seized, or in an adjacent judicial district, and when such seized property is stored in an adjacent district the jurisdiction over such property in the district wherein it was seized shall not be affected thereby"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$14,416,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$925,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 2, 43, and 44.

The report was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask that action may now be had on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the words "discharged for," to insert "or died in service of"; in line 15, to strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert "June 27, 1905"; in line 16, before the word "years," to strike out "two"; in the same line, after the word "years," to strike out "who has been," or may hereafter be, placed on the pension roll under this or any other law, public or private"; and in line 19, before the words "a month," to strike out "$50" and insert "$35," so as to read:

That the widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1866, inclusive, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for, or died in service of, a disability incurred in service and line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to June 27, 1905, and having attained the age of 62 years, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $85 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 19, after the words "a month," to insert "having attained the age of 74 years, $45 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, to strike out the words "and an additional pension of $6 a month for each child of the officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years"; and in line 22, after the word "case," to insert "there be no widow or a widow not entitled to pension under any law granting additional pension to minor children or in the event"; on page 3, line 2, after the word "years," to insert "or helpless child or children"; and after the word "children" to strike out "such pension shall be paid"; and in line 3, after the word "years," to insert "or helpless child or children shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 a month," so as to read:

And in case there be no widow or a widow not entitled to pension under any law granting additional pension to minor children or in the event of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, or helpless child or children, such child or children under the age of 16 years or helpless child or children shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 9, before the word "shall," to strike out the word "proviso" and to insert "section," so as to read:

Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this section shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter granted under this or any former statute, public or private.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 23, to strike out the words "having so served for less than 90 days," and to insert "regardless of length of service"; and in line 24, after the words "discharged for," to insert "or died in service of," so as to read:

That the former widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1866, inclusive, and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, regardless of length of service, was discharged for, or died in service of, a disability incurred in the service and line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1905, and having remarried either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage or marriages has or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands or by divorce without proof of adultery on the part of the wife, shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 9, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child or to a child or children under the age of 16 years of age, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease," and to insert:

That where a pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, a widow or former widow shall not be entitled to pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her; and upon the granting of pension to such widow or former widow payment of pension to such child or children shall cease; and this proviso shall apply to all claims arising under this or any other law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 3, to insert an additional section in the following words:

Sec. 5. That any widow, remarried widow, minor child or children, or helpless child or children, who has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed a pension under this or any other law, public or private, shall be paid an additional allowance at the rate of $8 a month on account of each of the minor children under 16 years of age and helpless children of the soldier, sailor, or marine: Provided, That the marriage of a child shall terminate the additional allowance and the child's right and title to pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (5) 6, page 6, line 13, to strike out the word "benefits" and to insert "provisions, limitations, and benefits"; in line 22, after the date June 28, 1906, to strike out "or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897"; in line 24, after the words "Civil War," to strike out the words "and the war with Mexico"; in line 25, after the word "children," to insert "under 16 years of age and helpless children," so as to read:

Sec. 5. That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War, and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, on account of service during the Civil War, and the widows and minor children under 16 years of age and helpless children of such persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we are now, as I understand, considering committee amendments. I wish to move to strike out section 6, but I understand I can do that later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can offer his amendment later.

Mr. DIAL. As I understand, we are now merely perfecting the committee amendments?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. But at the proper time I wish to strike out all of section 6.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DIAL. Very well; I so understood.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in sections (5) 6, page 7, line 1, after the words "Provided, That," to strike out "service under this section shall be proven in the manner and form specified in section 2, act of March 4, 1917, and the act of September 1, 1922," and to insert "the period of service performed by the soldier, sailor, or marine as enumerated in the provisions of this act shall be determined by reports from the records of the War Department or Navy Department, where there is such a record, and by the reports from the records of the General Accounting Office showing payment by the United States where there is no record of regular enlistment into the service of the United States, or showing reimbursement of the State by the United States on account of such service," so as to read:

Provided, That the period of service performed by the soldier, sailor, or marine as enumerated in the provisions of this act shall be determined by reports from the records of the War Department or Navy Department, where there is such a record, and by the reports from the records of the General Accounting Office showing payment by the United States where there is no record of regular enlistment into the service of the United States, or showing reimbursement of the State by the United States on account of such service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (7) 8, page 7, line 22, to insert a semicolon and the words "and upon attaining the age of 72 years, $40 per month; and upon attaining the age of 75 years, $50 per month," so as to read:

Sec. 8. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension to the soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, May 30, 1908, or under the act of March 4, 1917, shall be $30 per month; and upon attaining the age of 72 years, $40 per month; and upon attaining the age of 75 years, $50 per month, and that the rate of pension to the widows of soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll or who may hereafter be placed thereon under said acts shall be $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (7) 8, page 8, line 3, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of the acts enumerated in this section be, and hereby are, extended to the widows of the surviving officers and enlisted men of the organization known as Tyler's Rangers, recruited at Black Hawk, Colo., 1864, for service against the Indians, and to the officers and enlisted men of the Texas Volunteers who served in the defense of the frontier of that State against Indian depredations from 1875 to 1880, inclusive, and to the widows of such officers and enlisted men who were married to the officers or enlisted men prior to March 4, 1917.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment ought to be adopted. It occurs to me that those soldiers were in the Regular Army, and the amendment proposes to make a selected class and to give them a pension. There were no doubt plenty of men in the West who fought Indians. It seems to be class legislation, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert the following additional section:

Sec. 9. That all persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or Chinese Boxer rebellion between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, and was honorably discharged from such service, or, regardless of length of service, was discharged from a disability incurred in the service and line of duty, and who are now or may hereafter be suffering from any mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character not the result of their own vicious habits, which so incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States and be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $50 per month and not less than $20 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support; and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated, and shall continue during the existence of the same: Provided, That any such person who has reached the age of 62 years shall, upon making proof of such fact, be placed upon the pension roll and entitled to receive a pension of $20 a month: in case such person has reached the age of 68 years, $30 per month; in case such person has reached the age of 72 years, $40 per month; and in case such person has reached the age of 75 years, $50 per month: Provided, That all leaves of absence and furloughs under General Orders, No. 130, August 20, 1898, War Department, shall be included in determining the period of pensionable service.

That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of this section be, and hereby are, extended to and shall include any woman who served honorably as an Army nurse, chief nurse, or superintendent of the Nurse Corps under contract for 90 days or more between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1901, inclusive, and to any such nurse, regardless of length of service, who was released from service before the expiration of 90 days because of disability contracted by her while in service and line of duty, so as to preserve their military and pensionable status as provided in section 2 of the act of September 1, 1922, and entitle them to the increased rates.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in section 9, on page 8, lines 16 and 17, I wish to move to strike out the words "the Philippine insurrection, or Chinese Boxer rebellion."

Mr. President, I made a long speech on this matter yesterday and I do not care now to rehash it, but I wish to take care of the Spanish War veterans, particularly the wounded or disabled veterans. However, I can not see any reason for giving a special pension to soldiers of the Philippine insurrection or of the Boxer uprising. These soldiers were not volunteers, as were the Spanish-American War veterans, but they were Regular Army soldiers. I, therefore, do not see any reason to select them as a special class.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that many volunteers served in the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. DIAL. Some of those who so served were volunteers.

Mr. BURSUM. Many of them did so; and many volunteers also served in the Boxer rebellion. The very same volunteers whom we sent to Cuba, but who failed to see service in Cuba, were sent to the Philippine Islands. The soldiers of the Regular Army constituted a very small proportion of the troops who were engaged during those years in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DIAL. But the Boxer uprising was not much of a war, nor was the Philippine insurrection, and if we are going to have soldiers at all, what are they for except to fight?

Mr. BURSUM. The Filipino insurrection was a very serious affair. In the Boxer rebellion there were, however, very few engaged.

Mr. DIAL. I insist on the amendment which I have suggested in section 9, page 8, lines 16 and 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In section 9, page 8, after the name "Spain," it is proposed to strike out the words "the Philippine insurrection, or Chinese Boxer rebellion."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the phrase "the Philippine insurrection, or Chinese Boxer rebellion, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902," appears in the act of July 16, 1913, and the act of September 21, 1922. It has been officially determined that the Spanish War began April 21, 1898, and merged into the Philippine insurrection without intermission, and that the Philippine insurrection terminated July 4, 1902. The Chinese Boxer rebellion occurred in 1900 and is comprised within the period between the dates mentioned. To strike the phrase out of the bill would operate to deny to the soldiers and their widows the pension which Congress has provided in the act of July 15, 1913, and of September 1, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Let the amendment be reported, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In section 9, on page 8, in lines 16 and 17, the Senator from South Carolina proposes to strike out the words "the Philippine insurrection, or Chinese Boxer rebellion."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section (12) 10, on page 10, line 24, after the word "same," to insert "or shall have lost the sight of both eyes," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That from and after the passage of this act all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 per month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow, or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $90 per month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot, or shall have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs, or have been totally disabled in the same, or shall have lost the sight of both eyes, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading clerk proceeded to state the next amendment of the Committee on Pensions, in section (8) 11, page 11, line 3.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I think the Secretary is proceeding too rapidly. He has, I think, skipped page 9 altogether. We were just discussing an amendment on page 8, line 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the Senator from South Carolina offered his amendment to come in on page 8.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And page 9 is a part of the same section.

Mr. BURSUM. Page 9 relates to section 9, which is the same section to which the Senator addressed himself a few moments ago.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to move to amend some items on page 9, but I will reserve the right to do so.

LOWER RIO GRANDE VALLEY, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement to the Senate in reference to the investigation by a Senate committee of certain individuals and certain land companies in the lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas.

Now that the investigation has begun and public attention has been centered upon it, I believe this an appropriate time to clear up any erroneous conceptions that may have developed. The investigation relates to charges of fraudulent use of the mails and of interference with proper Government procedure on the part of a few specified individuals and a few specified companies. No reflection is made or intended on the numerous other land companies in the valley, on the wonderful fertility of its soil, or on its more than 100,000 people—people representing the best and most enlightened and progressive elements of every part of this Union.

The Reclamation Service of the Federal Government after a detailed examination and survey of the valley has pronounced it capable of producing crops every month in the year and has declared practically all of its soils to be exceptionally fertile. Valley lands in the irrigated areas sell as a rule for $300, $400, $600, and even $1,000 an acre, and in some instances orchards of especial excellence have sold for $5,000 an acre; and the justification of such figures is found in a productivity rarely equaled. The valley is in the front rank of the world's most fruitful and productive regions.

I take this opportunity to urge the investigation committee to visit the valley at the earliest possible date. The valley will welcome them with the hospitality for which it is so widely and justly famous. I feel that I speak the sentiment of its citizenship when I say that the valley wants the truth developed without fear or favor, but does not wish an investigation relating to a few concerns and a few individuals to put it in a false light before the country.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the able senior Senator from Texas, who is always on the job when Texas's interests are involved, has stated the case correctly. There is no disposition on the part of the investigating committee to make a fight on the valley. We realize and we admit that there are fine farming lands in the valley, and some of the very best people in the world live in the valley. At the same time, it is admitted by the honest men and women who live in the valley that fraudulent practices have been carried on to a large extent by certain land companies, and the people down there are anxious to have those frauds stopped and the crooks who perpetrated them apprehended and punished.

The sole purpose of the investigation is to punish those who have used the United States mails to rob people in the valley on land sales. "Robbing" is not too strong a term to use. People have been robbed down there and frauds have been practiced against citizens who have gone in there with the accumulations of a lifetime and have been left stranded in the valley.

It was represented to them that lands were under irrigation systems and that they would be ready as soon as prepared for cultivation to make crops. So after they had paid the last dollar they had and went there and prepared the soil for cultivation they found that there was not a drop of water to be had for irrigation purposes. Therefore, they were unable to make the first payment on the vendor's lien notes, and the crooks who sold the land took the land back, and the $5,000 or $10,000 which the purchasers had already paid in cash were lost outright, and those who had paid their money were, as I have said, left stranded in the valley.

Strong-arm methods have been resorted to in the valley to keep these people from making known to the Government the truth as to these fraudulent transactions.

Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Texas in praise of the fertile soil of the valley and of the good people of the valley in the main, and there is no intention on the part of the investigating committee to make a fight on the valley nor on the honest people of the valley. The fight is made against the crooks and criminals in the valley, and when we get through with the investigation it is going to be of great benefit to all the good people of the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as a member of the committee I desire merely to say that the very distinguished and very able senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has correctly stated the real purpose of the investigation, and the proper scope of the investigation, and the proper objects of inquiry involved in the investigation now before the committee. There is not, I am quite sure, any disposition at all to question the fertility of the land in the valley, or to question the integrity and high standing of the citizens resident in the valley. There is but one disposition, and that is to investigate the conduct of men, whether they be inside or outside of the valley, who may have exploited the splendid resources of the valley by resorting to questionable means and by the employment of the United States mails in carrying out certain schemes.

I should like to say also, Mr. President, that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has been most diligent and most urgent to have the exact position of the committee in this investigation clearly defined; and he is entitled to have this declaration made because it affects his State. He has not been wanting in diligence in any respect, but, on the contrary, has been most diligent in limiting this inquiry to its proper scope, and in furnishing a clear and definite statement of the real purposes and intentions of the committee in making the investigation, and of the Senate in ordering the investigation.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] that if he desires to have reconsidered the amendment recently adopted to section 9, the Chair will entertain a motion to that effect.

Mr. DIAL. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain it after the committee amendments are completed.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 3, after the word "increase," it is proposed to insert "in the rate," so as to read:

That the pension or increase in the rate of pension herein provided for—

And so forth.

WITHDRAWAL OF UNITED STATES FORCES FROM HAITI.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to a resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] on the 7th of February of this year.

This resolution deserves some consideration and comment. It is as follows:

Whereas martial or military law was proclaimed in the territory of the Republic of Haiti by the commander of the American military forces landed there in 1915; and

Whereas such military law continues effective throughout the territory of a friendly Republic by the authority of the President of the United States; and

Whereas under such military law citizens of Haiti are liable to arrest by the armed forces of the United States and to trial before military tribunals of the United States, nine years after military law was first proclaimed, to the end that anarchy might be checked and civil order restored: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the continuance of such military or martial law, and the liability of Haitian citizens throughout the Republic to trial before military tribunals of the United States, is undemocratic, unrepugnant, and contrary to American ideals and the policies of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States.

Mr. President, it is obvious that the latter part of the resolution is a criticism if not a condemnation of President Coolidge and in order to commend the late President Harding and contrast his treatment of the Haitians with that accorded them by the present administration. The resolution contains a recitation which, as I understand the facts, is not entirely accurate. I respectfully submit that there has been no change in the policy of the Harding administration by the present one in dealing with Haiti and her people. Both administrations have disregarded the wishes of the Haitian people, and imposed a distasteful military rule upon them. The policies of both Presidents have been, in the language of the Senator from Illinois, "contrary to American ideals, undemocratic, and unrepugnant."

The policy of President Harding was to continue the military occupation of Haiti, and to compel by force the Haitians to submit to alien control. It maintained martial law in a nation and over a people who did not invite us there, and who bitterly resented the invasion of their territory and the control of their affairs. The policy of the present administration is equally obnoxious to the Haitian people, and equally at variance with the ideals of this Republic. The present course of the United States toward Haiti and Santo Domingo can not be defended; it is imperialistic and has excited distrust among most Latin American Republics. This policy continues in authority an American clothed with autocratic power and who exercises his authority as a military ruler—not a civil governor.

During the last Congress I offered a resolution calling for the withdrawal of the United States from Haiti, and on the first day of the Congress I offered the following resolution:

Whereas the relations between the United States and the Republic of Haiti have assumed a condition which is unsatisfactory to the inhabitants of said country and otherwise disadvantageous to the United States, which condition is due in large measure to the presence of the naval forces of the United States in said country and the exercise by the United States of the control of the finances and revenues of said country; and

Whereas the purpose of the intervention by the United States in the political affairs of said country, the direction of their revenues and finances, and the police of the same by the United States naval forces has been accomplished and there is no further advantage either to the United States or said country from any continued intervention in its affairs: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the President should withdraw the naval forces of the United States now in Haiti and should arrange an abrogation of any treaty, protocol, or other agreement providing for the control of the revenues of Haiti by the United States, or providing for the intervention of the United States in the political affairs of said country, and that it is the sense of the Senate that Haiti should be free from any external interference with its domestic policies or internal administration.

Mr. President, a hearing was had some time ago by a committee of the Senate for the purpose of investigating conditions in Haiti and Santo Domingo, particularly with reference to the military occupation of those States by the United States. So much criticism was made against our Government that this inquiry was ordered with a view to ascertaining all the facts and the reasons why we were holding in subjection alien peoples.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, was that the investigation made by a committee of which the Senator was a member?

Mr. KING. I will say, in reply to the Senator's question, that I was appointed a member of the committee to conduct the investigation, but owing to the demands made upon my time by service upon other committees, I was compelled to resign before the committee had fairly gotten started, and another Senator was appointed in my stead.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Did the Senator visit Haiti? Mr. KING. I visited Haiti prior to the investigation by the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Whatever became of that committee's report?

Mr. KING. I have before me a volume entitled "Inquiry into Occupation and Administration of Haiti and Santo Domingo," but it does not contain the report. My understanding is that a preliminary report only was submitted. I understood that the committee would submit a final report. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], who is a member of that committee, can advise the Senate as to when the final report will be made.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCOMACK], is absent, and I would have to discuss the matter of the final report with him before I could answer the Senator from Utah. I understand that he is out of the city.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if a final report has been prepared by the committee?

Mr. ODDIE. I do not know of any report that has been submitted or prepared other than the one that was submitted to the Senate over a year ago. It was the unanimous report of the committee that visited Haiti and studied that situation with great care.

Mr. KING. But that was a preliminary report, was it not?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not say offhand whether that was a preliminary report or not.

Mr. KING. The Senator did not regard that as a final report?

Mr. ODDIE. No, Mr. President; I do not so regard it.

Mr. KING. The committee intended to submit a final report, did they not?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not tell what all the members of the committee intended, but it would be my judgment that they would submit a report later, before being discharged.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCOMACK], before he submitted, on February 7, 1924, the resolution which I have just read, call the committee together and ask the opinion of its members as to the propriety of submitting the resolution?

Mr. ODDIE. As a member of the committee, I can say positively that he did not mention that to me at any time, and my first intimation of it was in reading the resolution after it was submitted.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know, then, when the committee will conclude its labors and submit for the consideration of the Senate a final report?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not say.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator makes such an inquiry. Does he not know that the record of investigations of this body has consisted simply of finding facts and making recommendations, without any action?

Mr. KING. I am afraid I shall have to confess the accuracy of the deductions to be drawn from the question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts; but I had hoped that the committee of which the Senator from Nevada is a member would reform the procedure heretofore followed and would submit a final report and ask the judgment of the Senate upon the same. The primary purpose of the inquiry was to find out why we were in Haiti and Santo Domingo; why we were spending millions of dollars annually maintaining thousands of marines and naval forces in the territory of friendly nations against their will; why this Republic should adopt an imperialistic course toward the people of small and weak States; and having ascertained the facts, it was supposed that upon report being submitted Congress would announce some policy and take some course, either approving military control over these States or ordering the Executive to withdraw the military forces of the United States therefrom.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, as a member of the committee I have been in pretty close touch with conditions in Haiti since the report was filed, and I am somewhat familiar with those conditions; and I do not know of any line that could be drawn in point of time between the conditions that existed when the report was filed and the present time. I do feel confident in saying that the officials of our Navy and Marine Corps who have been conducting matters, as directed, in Haiti have been doing excellent work. They are splendid, able men, and I feel that they have given a good account of themselves.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, in view of the statement he has just made, under whose authority have General Russell and naval and marine officers in Haiti been acting?

Mr. ODDIE. Commissioner Russell was appointed by President Harding and given the rank of an ambassador, with quite broad powers.

Mr. KING. That was done without the consent of the Senate, was it not?

Mr. ODDIE. It was done with the consent of the committee of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Of course the committee of the Senate could not exercise the constitutional powers of the Senate. It would seem, therefore, that General Russell was appointed as ambassador by the President by and with the consent of the committee of the Senate.

Mr. ODDIE. He was appointed high commissioner, but his powers were those of an ambassador.

Mr. KING. The Senator said he had the rank of an ambassador, as I understood him.

Mr. ODDIE. That is my understanding, or with the power of an ambassador.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator find any warrant in the Constitution for the President of the United States or the State Department to commission an officer of the Army or Navy as ambassador or to confer upon him the power of an ambassador without the consent of the Senate?

Mr. ODDIE. I can not say offhand that the consent of the Senate was not given.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that the Senate's consent was not given.

Mr. ODDIE. I know the committee recommended to the President that General Russell be appointed commissioner, and if I could have a moment I could send for the report and see just what the wording of the description of his duties and powers is.

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have the Senator do so. But may I say to the Senator, and I say it with all due respect to him and to the committee, that, in my judgment, if they recommended that the President should name an officer of the Army or the Navy to proceed to Haiti and then take over the government of the people and subject them to military control and institute martial law and exercise the powers of an ambassador they would not fully appreciate the constitutional limitations upon the Executive. Moreover, it is my opinion that the President has no right to keep military forces in Haiti and impose upon the people policies and measures, even though they may be advantageous materially and financially, against their will and without their consent. That is imperialism bald and repulsive.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I do not think the committee did anything which would be in conflict with the Constitution, and I know it had no such intention. I will say that the committee gave this matter very deep study. It spent many weeks in its investigations here and in traveling over Haiti.

The result of our occupation has been most beneficial to the inhabitants of Haiti, and has been a positive blessing to those people. Heretofore, for years and years, for generations, they have had nothing but revolution after revolution. Those poor people have been forced to flee to the mountains, the men of Haiti have scarcely dared to show themselves before the American occupation. They would have been drafted into the revolutionary armies. That has been done time and again. These revolutions were periodical. They would start in the northern part of the island and continue on down to the capital, and when the revolutionists would get within a few miles of the capital the president would have to flee. To give a little illustration of the peril of being president of that country, I will say that in 10 years they had something like eight presidents. Two or three of those presidents were murdered, two or three were poisoned, and one or two escaped barely with their lives.

Mr. KING. Of course, Mr. President, I concede, for the sake of the argument—and I think the Senator has stated the facts historically quite accurately—that there have been revolutions in Haiti. My recollection is that they had more than two score executives within a period of 80 years. I concede there have been revolutions in Haiti. There are revolutions in China, there have been many revolutions in South American Republics, and doubtless there will be many more revolutions throughout the world until the day comes when the lamb and the lion shall lie down together and men shall learn the arts of peace. But conceding that there have been revolutions in Haiti, and that the men, using the Senator's expression, have been compelled to flee to the mountains to avoid being drafted into the armies, conceding there have been confusion and chaos, does that justify the United States in becoming a policeman to settle the internal affairs of that country and to set up a military form of government which, in the language of the colleague of the Senator, is "undemocratic, unrepugnant, and contrary to the policies of President Harding?"

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKINLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question. The Senator from Nevada has said the men all had to flee to the mountains. Was the army composed of the women of Haiti when the men had to hide out in the mountains to keep from being drafted into the army?

Mr. KING. I will let the Senator from Nevada answer that.

Mr. ODDIE. I will say to the Senator that the women have had to do most of the work.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who was drafting the men into the army if the men were all hidden in the mountains?

Mr. ODDIE. Not all, but a great majority of the men.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not want that question to remain in doubt. I wanted to know who was drafting the men when the men were all hidden in the mountains.

Mr. ODDIE. The revolutions in Haiti in years gone by were, in a way, business affairs. They started in as business affairs, I might say, because I think dollars and cents in starting certain propaganda had a great deal to do with them. The Senator from Utah has used the word "policeman." I do not want that statement to go unchallenged. I would rather say that the strong arm of the American Government has been used, not as an arm of force but as the arm of a protector and a friend, and that is what the arm of America has been to the island of Haiti.

Mr. KING. How does the Senator interpret the words of his colleague, the chairman of the committee, in the resolution which he has offered within the last few weeks, wherein he says:

Whereas such military law continues effective throughout the territory of a friendly Republic by the authority of the President of the United States; and

Whereas under such military law citizens of Haiti are liable to arrest by the armed forces of the United States and to trial before military tribunals of the United States, nine years after military law was first proclaimed, to the end that anarchy might be checked and civil order restored: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the continuance of such military or martial law—and the liability of Haitian citizens throughout the Republic to trial before military tribunals of the United States, is undemocratic, unrepugnant, and contrary to American ideals and the policies of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States.

Which the Senator is defending, and pleading for a continuation of—

How does the Senator interpret the language of his colleague; and placing that language in juxtaposition to the statements of the Senator eulogizing the military rule of the United States, which brings about this autocracy and tyranny how does the Senator reconcile his position with the statements of his colleagues?

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator permit me to interject a remark?

Mr. KING. I want to be fair to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CARAWAY. I take it for granted that the statement of the Senator a moment ago that the Army of the Americans in Haiti was the arm of a friend and a protector, construed in connection with his other statement that the men were all hidden in the mountains, means that it is thought to be a very great advantage now that they can be in jail instead of being in the mountains.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad if the Senator cares to reply to my question.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I certainly would not be a party to criticizing the wording of a resolution offered by my colleague. He may have information which I have not received touching the present condition there, but as to blaming President Coolidge, or saying that the occupation has been continued in opposition to the idea expressed by the late President Harding, I will state that our committee made a very careful study, as I have already told the Senator, and we found that the information which came to President Harding, on which he based his statement in his inaugural message, was inaccurate.

I am satisfied that President Coolidge is acting in good faith, because he has been acting on reports which have been sent to him. There may have been very radical changes in the immediate past with which I am not familiar, but I do know that our occupation has been enlightening and helping the people of Haiti. Our marine officers have established a gendarmerie, a splendid body of natives, and have been training them with our own Marine Corps officers, training them splendidly, so that when the time comes—and I hope it will not be far in the future—when Haiti can be turned over to its own government, it will have a force of men who can maintain order. I may state, further, that the President of Haiti is a splendid and able man, a very highly cultured man, and an able lawyer. I do not think he has any unfriendly feeling toward our occupation. In fact, I feel satisfied that he sees many benefits as the result of our occupation.

Mr. KING. I think I can assure the Senator that President Borno approves the military rule of the United States, for the reason that the bayonets of the American marines keep him in office. He is a mere figurehead, a puppet. His authority is only such as the military forces of the United States confer upon him. If a free election were held in Haiti, he would not be President 24 hours. Of course, he will defend the use of military force by our Government so long as it is utilized to keep him in office.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, unfortunately less than 5 per cent of the people of Haiti can read or write. They are people who need help and need support. I believe that the United States Government has been a good big brother to them, and I am in favor of doing what is necessary to continue that relationship and to help make Haiti a much more prosperous country than it is to-day.

I know that in years gone by, before our occupation, some of their officials were dishonest, and much of the money that was collected from the Haitians did not find its way into the public treasury; it found its way into the pockets of dishonest officials. To-day conditions have changed in this respect.

Mr. KING. Of course, if the Senator will pardon me, I would not want to draw any comparison between the acts of dishonest officials in Haiti and in the United States. It is said that there are no dishonest officials here; so far as we can judge from recent investigations, some might be disposed to challenge the claim.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the question of dishonest officials, I think, is a human question. The human equation enters into it. Men for all time have been judged by a certain standard. There is an average, and I want to believe that the average of officials is good and that they are honest. If officials go wrong, it is a misfortune. I want to believe that the large majority of officials are honest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I assent to that last statement by my friend, and I think the officials of the United States Government, by and large, and of the States and municipalities of the United States will compare favorably with the officials of any country in the world. Indeed, I believe that for morality and integrity they have no equals in any country. The delinquencies and transgressions that are brought to light are infrequent; they are exceptions which prove the rule which I contend obtains. There is no condition sufficient to justify the statement now too frequently made that the foundations of the Government are being destroyed. This Government is too strongly entrenched in the affections of patriotic people to be disturbed or seriously affected by the delinquencies or transgressions of a few of its officials.

Does the Senator want to make any other reply to the statement of his colleague?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I do not want to criticize my colleague or comment upon his action, because I assume he had certain information which I have not. Therefore it would ill become me to criticize him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has stated that the United States has established and is maintaining martial law in a friendly state; that its citizens are liable to arrest by the armed forces of the United States, and to trial before military tribunals nine years after the establishment of military law, and the Senator's colleague declares that this course is being pursued by the present administration contrary to American ideals and the policies of Warren G. Harding, and that such course is undemocratic and unrepugnant.

I do not assent to the statement submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] to the effect that the present policy was not pursued during the Harding administration. Men were then arrested and tried by military tribunals and thrust into jail, and the military occupation was as oppressive, as tyrannous, as undemocratic, and as unrepugnant under Mr. Harding as it is under President Coolidge.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I have just found that the report referred to was printed on the 28th of June, 1922, during President Harding's administration. From that time to the day of the President's death I am not aware of any adverse comment on his part on the report of our committee, so I assume that he took our committee report as a fair and comprehensive statement of conditions, and that he approved it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the statements of the Senator from Illinois, embodied in the resolution which I have read, so far as I can learn, are accurate. Martial law, cruel and inhuman, as martial law usually is, if enforced; men are arrested without cause and imprisoned without trial. Freedom of speech and the press is denied, and a situation exists which calls for immediate rectification. Under the military rule of the United States the election which the constitution of Haiti provided for was prevented. Men who attempted to vote were arrested and thrust into jail. A faction of the Haitian people are used by the military forces of the United States, and are invested with paper titles to various offices; but the power is held by the United States and exercised through its representatives, who are upheld by strong military forces sent from the United States and paid for by the United States.

Let me refer to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie] that General Russell has ambassadorial powers. How did he attain these powers? Who made him ambassador? Where is the treaty providing for an ambassador to be sent from the United States to Haiti? How can he be ambassador and at the same time the military ruler of the State? Where did the United States get its authority to take over the government of the Haitian Republic and subject the people to a military rule? These questions call for replies. None has been given; even a Republican and the chairman of the investigating committee is dissatisfied with the course of the administration and the military occupancy of the Territory of Haiti.

Mr. President, I challenge the right of President Harding or President Coolidge or the Secretary of State to pursue the course which has been pursued and is still being pursued in Haiti. I deny that the President has the right to confer upon General Russell the dictatorial military power which the latter is exercising, or to invest him with the authority or the simulated authority of an ambassador from the United States to the Government of Haiti.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie] does not seem to be familiar with conditions now prevailing in Haiti, though he is a member of the committee that should advise the Senate as to the course that should be pursued by the United States in dealing with Haiti.

It must not be forgotten that we forced ourselves upon the Haitian people. We took their Government away from them. We landed our soldiers upon their soil forcibly and have for years forcibly held control of their island. We have killed more than 3,500 of the Haitian people during the period we have controlled their territory. We are now thrusting men into jail because they demand the right of free speech and of free press, because they protest against an alien rule and the forcible occupation of their country.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dale	Keyes	Ralston
Borah	Dial	King	Ransdell
Brandegee	Dill	Ladd	Sheppard
Brookhart	Ferris	Lodge	Shortridge
Bruce	Fess	McKellar	Smith
Bursum	Frazier	McKinley	Stanfield
Cameron	George	McNary	Stephens
Capper	Gerry	Neely	Trammell
Caraway	Harris	Norris	Wadsworth
Colt	Heflin	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Copeland	Howell	Overman	Warren
Cummins	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Weller
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

HARRY M. DAUGHERTY, LATE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at the conclusion of the few remarks I shall make a letter of the President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge, requesting the resignation of the Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, and the reply of the Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, to the letter of the President.

Permit me to say that I have never had the honor to know the Attorney General. Something like two years ago I was engaged in a controversy with him with reference to his connection with the pardon of Charles W. Morse. At that time I was charged on the floor of the Senate and in the press with waging a scurrilous assault upon the Attorney General. It was charged by him and his friends, and here on the floor of the Senate repeatedly by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], that the Attorney General had had nothing to do with the pardon of Morse. The Senator from Indiana assured me and the Senate that on several different occasions he had asked the Attorney General with reference to the matter and had been assured that the Attorney General had no interest in the Morse pardon and had received nothing in consideration for the pardon of Morse. Afterwards I had printed in the RECORD the contracts and the correspondence. The Attorney General was such a poor sportsman that he came back and said the Senator from Indiana had wholly misunderstood him, and he never had undertaken to say that he was not interested in the pardon of Morse.

I refer to that for this reason: More recently other charges have been made against the Attorney General. I have been told that Members of the Senate on the Republican side, including the majority leader, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the leader of the independent element on the Republican side of the Senate, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BOHAR], and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENNELL], have frequently represented to the President that it would be politically wise and expedient to exchange the present Attorney General for some one else with more influence. I have never understood that they contended that he was not an admirable Attorney General, but that he was politically unpopular.

A resolution was introduced in the Senate asking for an investigation of the Attorney General. That resolution was offered by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. My friend the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] attacked the junior Senator from Montana very viciously for trying to get on the committee to investigate the Attorney General. It was intimated in language so strong that it could not be called an intimation that Mr. WHEELER was seeking the advantage of a position on the committee in order to "frame up" the Attorney General. We were assured by the Senator from Ohio that the Attorney General was "as clean as a hound's tooth," and that if he had a fair committee and an opportunity to defend himself all the country would realize that they had unjustly and harshly prejudged the Attorney General.

The committee was finally selected and hearings were had. I know the country understood and the Senate understood that the Attorney General was to have a fair trial and that all judgments were to be suspended until the committee should have concluded its hearings. Now, when a few witnesses have been heard, the President, failing to observe what I presume everybody understood to have been at least a tentative agreement that the Attorney General should have a chance to vindicate himself before judgment should be passed upon him, summarily dismisses the Attorney General to-day.

I want to give the President the credit for having said in his letter, "There is not anything wrong with you, Mr. Daugherty; there is not any reason for any fair-minded man to criticize you at all; but inasmuch as the position is embarrassing we are going to rid ourselves of the embarrassment by prejudging you and putting you out of the Cabinet. Then, if you can rehabilitate yourself in the opinion of the country, we will not interpose any objection." That is the only thing the letter says. "It does not make any difference to us, Mr. Attorney General, whether you have been honest or dishonest; we are not putting you out because you have not been faithful to your trust; we are not complaining because of anything you have done or have not done; but the situation is growing embarrassing, and the time has come when somebody has to be thrown overboard for the safety of the rest of us who hope to be reelected; therefore, Mr. Attorney General, it is your time to walk the plank." [Laughter in the galleries.]

The Attorney General submitted his resignation with bad grace. He said to the President in language that certainly is as harsh as anything that anybody here upon the floor of the Senate has used, for which we have been denounced all over the country as being "scandal-mongers" and "assassins of character," and of imputing to people bad motives—he said to the President, "Mr. Coolidge, you demand that I shall sacrifice my reputation; that I shall go out into the world branded with infamy, simply because it is politically expedient so to do."

I take it that the Attorney General has as good an opportunity to know what the real motives of the President are as has anyone else; and that is in effect what he says. "You sacrifice me, Mr. President, in order that the rest of you may ride out this storm; I am to be destroyed politically and socially, I am to be an outcast, in order that the rest of you who participated in this administration may survive this storm of criticism by the American people which is sweeping over the country."

As I said a moment ago, I do not know the Attorney General; I refused to be a member of the committee that should investigate the Attorney General, because I had been critical of him. I had thought, as most people, I think, thought, that he never had the qualifications to entitle him to be Attorney General; that he was mentally and morally, and, by reason of his associates, unfitted for that place. I thought, and I believe everybody else believes, that his appointment was the payment of a political debt. I had protested against the hundred million of the American people being compelled to pay the political debts of the then President of the United States. I do want to say, however, Mr. President, that the Attorney General as an individual has risen very much in my estimation in recent weeks. At least he is no cur and no coward. He is a double-fisted man, who fights back, and, right or wrong, I believe the American people are going to say that he has some admirable qualities.

I know they appeal to me. I do not believe that he ought to have been sacrificed by the President in the manner in which he is now sacrificed. If the statements contained in the letter of the Attorney General be true—the Attorney General in his letter to the President, which I take it for granted is true, states that he twice offered to resign from the Cabinet since President Coolidge became President of the United States, and he could have done so without embarrassment, but that the President assured him that the magnificent service which he was rendering to the country and the highly efficient state of the department over which he presided made it desirable for him to continue as Attorney General—if those statements are true—and I take it for granted that they are, because I can not imagine that a member of the Cabinet can make a statement to the President that is not true—if it is true that the President believed and believes that the Attorney General was highly efficient, that his manner of presiding over the department with which he had been intrusted as a Cabinet member was so satisfactory that he could not be spared, I do not very much believe that the people are going to sympathize with the President when, just because South Dakota registers its verdict against the President, he sacrifices the Attorney General.

I realize that it is hardly incumbent upon me to defend one Republican against another [laughter], and I would not have done so, Mr. President, if that moral and mental mentor of the Republican Party, Mr. McLean, recently in his administration organ, the Washington Post, had not stated that the members of the Republican Party in the Senate have utterly failed their party; that they have become so fearful that they would not defend their party against any attack, and that the American people were going to reach a judgment soon that they were either "guilty" or "cowards." I do not want to misquote the statement in Mr. McLean's newspaper, but is not that the effect of the rather kindly lecture that he read the majority party in the Senate the other day?

Therefore, Mr. President, if no Republican will defend the Attorney General in this his hour of need, I am going to do it myself, because everybody will know I am not actuated by any partisan zeal. [Laughter.] My motives in this particular instance will not be misjudged, since I believe that a man who wanted an opportunity to present the evidence to the country, if otherwise he was entirely acceptable to this administration, ought not to have been sacrificed merely that the President might get a more favorable hearing in some other State than he got in South Dakota this week.

I wish, Mr. President, to present the two letters and have them printed in the RECORD, one following the other. I think they will be enlightening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letters will be printed in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

The letters referred to are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 27, 1924.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: Since my conference with you I have examined the proposed reply you suggest making to the demand that you furnish the committee investigating the Department of Justice with files from that department, relating to litigation and to the Bureau of Investigation. You represent to me and to the committee in your letter that it would not be compatible with the public interest to comply with the demand, and wish to conclude your letter with a statement that I approve that position. Certainly I approve the well-established principle that departments should not give out information or documents, for such a course would be detrimental to the public interest, and this principle is always peculiarly applicable to your department, which has such an intimate relation to the administration of justice. But you will readily perceive that I am unable to form an independent judgment in this instance without a long and intricate investigation of voluminous papers, which I can not personally make, and so I should be compelled to follow the usual practice in such cases and rely upon your advice as Attorney General and head of the Department of Justice.

But you will see at once that the committee is investigating your personal conduct, and hence you have become an interested party, and the committee wants these papers because of a claim that they disclose your personal conduct of the department. Assuming that the request of the committee is appropriately limited to designated files, still the question will always be the same. In view of the fact that the inquiry relates to your personal conduct, you are not in a position to give to me or the committee what would be disinterested advice as to the public interest. You have a personal interest in this investigation which is being made of the conduct of yourself and your office, which may be in conflict with your official interest as the Attorney General. I am not questioning your fairness or integrity. I am merely reciting the fact that you are placed in two positions, one your personal interest, the other your office of Attorney General, which may be in conflict. How can I satisfy a request for action in matters of this nature on the ground that you as Attorney General advise against it, when you as the individual against whom the inquiry is directed necessarily have a personal interest in it? I do not see how you can be acting for yourself in your own defense in this matter and at the same time and on the same question acting as my adviser as Attorney General.

These two positions are incompatible and can not be reconciled. I am sure you will see that it is necessary for me to have the advice of a disinterested Attorney General in order that I may discharge the duties of my office in this and other matters. I feel certain that you will know how deeply I regret that this situation has arisen. It only illustrates the difficulties which are certain to recur with ever-increasing embarrassment and your inability to perform satisfactorily the duties of Attorney General under present conditions. You will readily understand that it is not now my intention to prejudge the issues which remain to be developed in this investigation. I recognize that you are entitled to a full and fair hearing. But as there is no way by which you can divest yourself of the interest you have personally in the investigation I can see no way but for you to retire as Attorney General, and I am therefore compelled to request your resignation.

Very truly yours,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

HON. HARRY M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

MARCH 28, 1924.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Under separate cover I have just handed you my formal resignation as Attorney General of the United States, to take effect forthwith. Now that I am no longer a member of your Cabinet I feel constrained, as a private citizen, in all kindness, to call certain matters to your attention.

Your request, Mr. President, for my resignation is based on grounds which seem to me untenable. As you will perhaps remember, I did not intend to seek your advice with regard to compliance with the demands of the Senate committee for the indiscriminate delivery of the confidential files of the Department of Justice, or parts thereof. As I explained to you, my duty was clear, for I had frequently been called upon to determine this question. My answer was ready, as I informed you, and furnished you a copy thereof.

My sole purpose in taking the matter up with you was to let you know the position I was compelled to take in the interest of the public business and for the protection of the Government, that you might be in position to advise other departments, if similar requests were made, what course they should pursue.

Your suggestion that I can not function as Attorney General and defend myself against these charges at the same time I believe is hardly warranted by the facts. You know that I have employed counsel at my own expense to take the responsibility of representing me at the hearings before the Senate committee in order that I could devote my time to the public business, which I have been doing continuously.

Those employed in the department have given no time belonging to the Government to this so-called investigation, except to furnish data required by the various congressional committees. The business of the department is at its peak in efficiency and accomplishment, and I am prepared to demonstrate this fact before any tribunal if opportunity is afforded.

Your suggestion that an attack upon a Cabinet officer disqualifies him for further official service is a dangerous doctrine. Mr. President, all the pretended charges against me are false. But whether true or false, if a member of the Cabinet is to be incapacitated or disqualified by the preferment of charges against him, no matter how malicious and groundless, and he is compelled to give up his responsible position and sacrifice his honor for the time being because of such attack, no man in any official position is safe, and the most honorable, upright, and efficient public servant could be swept from office and stable government destroyed by clamor.

I have often advised you that my elimination is part of the program now being carried out; the origin of the persistent and vindictive attempt to discredit me as Attorney General is well known. It principally proceeds from two sources: The powerful individuals and organizations who resent my successful action, in conformity with my sworn duty, to save this country from violence and anarchy during an industrial crisis far more serious than the general public has ever known; second, from those equally powerful individuals and organizations guilty of graft upon the Government during the World War, while the youth of our land was making the supreme sacrifice for the Nation. I have to the best of my ability discharged my sworn duty to prosecute all such individuals and organizations, but the task has been beset with peculiar difficulty by reason of the fact that the official record in most of these cases was made up by men supposedly representing the Government in these transactions who were either knowingly or stupidly parties to the crime. This partnership of the rioter and the war profiteer has ceaselessly sought to break down the faith of the American people in me and in the Department of Justice. In the high court of impeachment their attempt to fasten guilt upon me collapsed in disgrace to its originators, and they did not dare appeal again to the constitutional court. In the low court of scandal, gossip, rumor, and innuendo, to which appeal is now made, it will have no better success with the people of this country who read and think and believe in justice and the square deal, but coupled with threats of similar treatment of other public men it has impressed politicians, who think everything of personal and party expediency and nothing of the principle involved, with the necessity of offering me as a sacrifice to propitiate the vengeful interests which seek my destruction.

I can not escape the conviction, Mr. President, that your request for my resignation is also most untimely. It comes at a time when the truth is banishing falsehood from the public mind, even though I have not as yet had an opportunity to place upon the witness stand before the Senate committee a single witness in my defense or in explanation or rebuttal of the whispered and gossip charges against me. No better evidence of the failure to substantiate charges of wrongful action on my part could be offered than the character of the proceedings by the Senate committee engaged in conducting the present inquiry. If my accusers had believed me guilty, they would have been scrupulously careful to select as members of the tribunal men of judicial character, with open minds, in order that an unprejudiced verdict might be rendered. The choice as majority members of this committee of men, some of whom have openly, bitterly, and falsely assailed me under senatorial immunity and who had also assailed my administration of the Department of Justice; the designation of a member of this court as prosecutor who is the responsible author of the resolution against me; the refusal to apply to the proceedings any rule of evidence or to grant to me the customary immediate right of cross-examination and early opportunity for rebuttal; and, above all, the character of the witnesses, including blackmailers, bootleggers, confessed corruptionists, and discharged and discredited Government employees, not one of whom has given testimony that would be admitted as evidence in the most loosely conducted court of the land—all this proves to fair-minded men that in the absence of competent and credible testimony the elements in control of this committee seek to convict by immaterial and malicious gossip retailed by irresponsible witnesses. In such a tribunal, by such methods, and out of the mouths of such witnesses, an honest man could be convicted of any crime.

I am aware, Mr. President, that the suggestion has been made to you that my retirement from the Cabinet would serve the ends of party expediency. Had I believed this, I would have retired when this contention was first raised. Twice since you became President and when I could have done so without criticism I have offered to retire from your Cabinet, and you have in each instance requested me to remain, because as you were kind enough to say, of your entire satisfaction with the splendid accomplishments of the Department of Justice under my administration. After this recent attack, and while under fire, I stood my ground because I believe cowardice and surrender of principle are never expedient, and that every sacrifice of justice to clamor is followed by demands for still greater sacrifices. From the beginning this attack upon me has, in fact, been an attack upon the administration and the Republican Party, which my assailants are seeking to discredit for partisan purposes. Since the assault upon me began, the purpose to attack every administration official of prominence, including the President himself, has been publicly revealed.

The American people confront a crisis in national affairs equal in gravity to any we have faced in all our history. Is this to remain a Government of law and order, of constitutional procedure, with its guarantees of individual rights and its safeguards for equal justice to the highest and the humblest, or is it to become a Government by slander, by terrorism, and by fear? In the battle for my rights as an official and a citizen the rights of every citizen of this Republic are involved, for who of all our millions of people knows but that he may be the next to become the object of unjust accusation maintained by lawless inquisition?

In conclusion, Mr. President, please accept my thanks for your statement that you do not question my fairness or integrity, and believe me,

Yours very truly,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if Mr. Daugherty, either as an individual or while he was Attorney General, has done things for which he deserves punishment, I am sure there was nothing to justify so cruel and unusual a punishment as to be defended by the Senator from Arkansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure, in view of the letter that the Attorney General wrote the Senator from Pennsylvania, that he will not feel much called upon to do so, and I thought one of us had to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have no intention of defending the Attorney General or of criticizing him adversely. The Senator from Arkansas knows, or might know if he cared to, that I have been quite candid in the expression of my opinion that the choice of Mr. Daugherty to fill the exalted office of Attorney General was a mistake in the first instance, an error of judgment, and I have been one of those who have indulged the view that sooner or later that great office should be vacated by him.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator says he has been quite candid. The Attorney General was quite candid with the Senator, too, was he not?

Mr. PEPPER. Well, Mr. President, I do not know what the purpose of the question is. Perhaps the Senator will develop it a little further. I am not sure that I understand it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know that there is anything obscure about it. I understood that the Senator said he had been quite candid. I also understood that the Attorney General wrote a letter in which he was quite candid with the Senator about the candid advice that the Senator from Pennsylvania had given the President concerning the Attorney General, was he not? He set forth his views.

Mr. PEPPER. I understand the Senator from Arkansas to question me as to what he understood?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I read it in the newspapers, in an open letter from the Attorney General to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PEPPER. I apprehend that if the Senator from Arkansas read something in the newspapers he is entirely competent to reach a conclusion as to whether what was said by the writer of the letter in the newspapers was candid or whether it was not. I can only interpret that form of interruption not as a request for information which the questioner does not possess but as a desire to obtrude into the course of another Senator's remarks suggestions which will break the thread of his observations. Mr. President, we have had a good deal of that sort of thing in the Senate, and it is extremely difficult to deal with.

It will be observed that in the course of the remarks just made by the Senator from Arkansas he undertook to state what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LORCE] and I had said to the President on the occasion of a certain interview that we had with the Chief Executive in this connection. Of course, the Senator from Arkansas has no basis whatever for any understanding upon the subject, and any suggestion of his as to what happened on that occasion is wholly gratuitous and can not be made the basis of any statement that is entitled to credence or acceptance here.

The Senator from Arkansas also said, if I correctly understood him, that he had reason to believe that there was a tentative agreement between the President of the United States and the Attorney General, which has now been broken by the action of the Chief Executive. I venture to think that the basis for any such statement made by the Senator from Arkansas is as unsubstantial and without foundation as was his statement with respect to me.

Mr. President, we are dealing now with a great public situation. Here is a case in which the subject matter is the office of Attorney General, the head of the Department of Justice. Justice, Mr. President, is the greatest interest of man on earth; and the Department of Justice, in my humble judgment, should be presided over by some one who will stand as high among his peers at the bar as the thing which the department symbolizes should stand for among the interests of the American people. As I said before I was interrupted, I am one of those who have been quite candid in expressing the view that the incumbency of the office has fallen far below that high ideal. Therefore I do not rise to speak on behalf of anybody or against anybody; but I wish, Mr. President, to direct the attention of the Senate to the fact that the President of the United States, after having given to the Attorney General the longest chance that fairness could dictate to relieve him of embarrassment by resignation, has now acted in a way which I applaud, which I believe the country will applaud, and those who attribute it to a desire to make political capital out of the situation will be a small minority, as lacking in respectability as they are potent in vociferous denunciation.

Mr. CARAWAY rose.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I am not going to ask the Senator to yield. I will wait until the Senator yields the floor. He does not want his line of discourse broken.

Mr. PEPPER. On the contrary, Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas or any Senator who asks a question which I can recognize as a request for information. I am very happy to yield to any such inquiry.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator was yielding the floor. I want the floor when the Senator is through; that is all.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall detain the Senate for a very few moments.

Mr. President, I wish to suggest that the office of the Attorney General is not a Republican office or a Democratic office, primarily. It is the office of the people; and the great interest of the people of the United States is that that office should be filled by some one who will be above suspicion. In my judgment, that which has been developed at the inquiry set on foot by some of my colleagues is in form and substance a volume of gossip containing a percentage of truth, but what the percentage is no man living is competent to decide.

But whatever may be the percentage of truth contained in that volume of back-stairs gossip which has been inflicted upon a long-suffering American public, this much is clear: That there has been an atmosphere down there at the Department of Justice which ought not to surround the place of high ideals for which that department ought to stand; and I rise in my place to express profound gratification that the President of the United States, after waiting with fairness and patience for the limit of the time of opportunity for voluntary withdrawal, has now indicated in no doubtful terms the course which in his judgment the Attorney General should take; and I think the Attorney General has done well to subordinate his self-interest to the public good.

I know the type of man who fights on and fights on when he believes himself to be under unjust accusation. I share with the Senator from Arkansas his admiration for the type; but I have always thought, Mr. President, that your fight is a more worthy one when only your own fortunes are at stake in the course of it. If you are fighting your fight at the expense of the welfare of your fellow citizens, then it seems to me that it is no mark of pusillanimity, it is no mark of cowardice, to subordinate your interests to theirs and to withdraw, even if it may be under fire.

So I applaud what the Attorney General has done. I wish he had done it voluntarily. I approve of what the President has done. I think he has acted none too soon. If anybody chooses to accuse me of being influenced in my view by regard for the political considerations that are involved, that is his right; but as I look into my own mind I think I can perceive it clear of any such taint. I think that my training and relationships to the law and the courts have been such as to give me the kind of exalted ideal that I hold respecting the Department of Justice and the man that should head it; and when a President, whether he be Democrat or Republican, corrects a mistake improvidently made in time past for which he is not accountable, I feel, sir, that he has done something which should receive expressions of approval by the people of the United States, and such expressions it seems to me that I can foresee in rich abundance.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ought to be duly crushed by this lecture read to me by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania in such a "kindly" spirit, in which he attributes to me lack of information as to what motives he possessed and what recommendations he made to the President of the United States.

I never said that the Senator from Pennsylvania did say that "for the good of the party they ought to get rid of the Attorney General." I do not know what the Senator said to the President of the United States, and, frankly, I am not at all interested. Because the President did not act upon it, evidently not thinking it worthy, therefore it does not concern me.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am very much pleased to do that.

Mr. PEPPER. Did I misunderstand what the Senator said? Because, if so, I should like to withdraw that portion of my remarks. I understood the Senator to say that he believed or supposed or understood that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, accompanying the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to the White House, had expressed to the President of the United States an opinion, not that the Attorney General was unfitted for the office he held, but that he should be exchanged for somebody exercising greater political influence.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not recall just what I did say, Mr. President. The notes will show.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator a little more specific. Now that I have asked him the question, is not his recollection refreshed to the extent of admitting that substantially I quoted him accurately?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; here is what I think I said, but I shall be glad to have the notes read. I said it was understood that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pepper] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] had made representations to the President that he ought to get rid of the Attorney General. As I now recall—and that is a matter of the public prints, and we can easily verify it—the Attorney General came back in a very pointed letter, and, as I now recall, the thing that he took the Senator from Pennsylvania to task for, and I have inferred that it occurred, was that the Senator had said "It was not a question of justice." The question was that the Attorney General had lost the confidence of the people. The Attorney General in his letter to the Senator from Pennsylvania said he did not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that it "was not a question of justice." Now, is not that what occurred?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will answer that question after the Senator has answered mine.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have answered the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon, Mr. President. The Senator has not yet answered the question that I put to him again, namely, whether he did not, in the course of his remarks, say in substance that he understood that the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Massachusetts had represented to the President that it would be well for him to exchange the Attorney General for some one having greater political influence and not on the ground that he was unfit for the office that he held?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will answer the Senator. In substance, that is what I said. Wait a minute. I hope the Senator will not be so much in a hurry to get away. I say that the Attorney General said to the Senator from Pennsylvania, if the public press can be believed, that it was a question of justice. Now, did not that occur?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to make—

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the Senator insisted that I should answer. Now, then, let the Senator say "yes" or "no."

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be very glad to make a statement in answer to the Senator's question.

It is true that after calling upon the President at the time to which the Senator from Arkansas refers, when I came back to the Capitol I had the uncomfortable feeling of a man who has been speaking about an associate behind his back, to his disadvantage, to his superior officer; and it is a fact that I sat down and in yonder cloakroom with my own hand, and without keeping any copy of it, wrote a letter to the Attorney General telling him that I desired that he should hear from me before he heard from anyone else what in substance I had said to the President of the United States. That thing did happen. I did write such a letter. I did send it to the Attorney General; and the Attorney General saw fit to write in reply an open letter, which was published in the papers. No one has seen my letter, for I kept no copy, and its nature was such that it could not have been published either by its recipient or by me.

Mr. CARAWAY. Could not the Senator have mailed it? Was it in such language that it could not be put in the mails?

Mr. PEPPER. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said it could not be published.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas will forgive me if I suggest that that kind of levity in the discussion of what is a very great public situation, something like—

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, I do not yield to the Senator if he does not want to answer the question. I am not fixing to yield to another lecture. I have the floor. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am not yielding now to the continuance of that lecture. If he wants to answer the question, I am perfectly willing to yield for that, but I am not yielding to be lectured.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I have no intention of lecturing him; but I think he will recall that his question to me was certainly not one of those to which he could have expected an answer.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I will not wait for one.

Mr. PEPPER. Very good, sir.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to know, and the Senator can say in his own time, what he meant by saying that the kind of a letter he wrote could not be published.

Mr. PEPPER. I am very glad to answer that question, sir. I understand that when a Senator has called upon the President of the United States it is the unwritten rule of this body that he does not state to any third person what occurred at that interview; and if the thing concerns a third person, and he chooses to embody a statement of the interview in a communication to that third person whom it concerns, the writer of the letter is powerless to make the thing public. He is at the mercy of the recipient of it. That is what I mean.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the amiable Senator from Pennsylvania if the Senator said in his letter to the Attorney General that "it is not a question of justice"?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I did say that as part of a longer sentence.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator if he was trying then to make the Attorney General resign, whether it was right or wrong, when he said it was not a question of justice but one of expediency?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will not state to the Senator what I was trying to do. I will answer the Senator's question by saying that I did use the language attributed to me as part of a longer sentence, which I am not at liberty to quote and which I do not propose to quote.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the kind indulgence of the Senator. Of course, if the Senator can not answer it, very well. What was in the Senator's mind when he said to the Attorney General, "It is not a question of whether it is just or not, but that you must get out." What was in the Senator's mind, if I may be permitted to ask?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator may be permitted to ask, Mr. President, I say to the Senator, but I also may be permitted to decline to answer, which I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I hope the Senator will not be so unkind, when we infer from his use of that language in declining to answer, that it might be understood that he said to the President that it does not make any difference whether he is a good Attorney General or not; it is not a question of justice, it is a question of expediency. I think we might reasonably infer that.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the drawing of any inferences by the Senator he chooses to draw, but I reserve the right to point out that in many instances they are baseless, and in this case particularly so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, if the Senator will not tell me what he said, how am I ever to have the information? The Senator from Pennsylvania says I am wrong and then will not set me right.

Mr. PEPPER. Probably, Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas may spend a very considerable time speculating on the contents of my letter to the Attorney General without arriving at any conclusion whatsoever, and I am not sure that the country would be the loser.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not presume it will be, but the Attorney General seemed to understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania was wanting to get him out of office, right or wrong.

I am not so very much interested, Mr. President, in exactly what the Senator from Pennsylvania said to the President, because it was so obvious that the President took no real counsel of it, since he did not act upon it; and if the Senator could not influence the President, and all these other party leaders could not, of course, therefore, I do not presume their arguments were very weighty, and I shall not trouble the Senator or trouble the country with a repetition of them.

I wanted to answer the Senator's statement of a moment ago, that the President gave the Attorney General every opportunity to retire, and, declining, then the Attorney General was properly asked to retire. I am not passing on questions of veracity between Republicans. But in his letter to the President the Attorney General said:

Mr. President, I have twice offered to quit your Cabinet when I could have done it without retiring under fire, and you requested that I do not do so.

If that be true—and I am going to indulge in the belief that it is—of course then the Senator from Pennsylvania will very likely say that the Attorney General is no more well informed than am I. I admit none of us ever hope to rise to that great height of learning to which the Senator modestly admits he has climbed by his devotion to the law and other things. But the Attorney General says:

I tried twice to resign from this Cabinet, and you would not let me do it.

The Attorney General, as I infer from his letter, had sought to get out of the Cabinet, if his remaining in the Cabinet was embarrassing to the President. Why then does the Senator from Pennsylvania say, Mr. President, that the Attorney General had been indulged long enough under the hope that he would get out? They can reconcile their statements among themselves. I undertook to be a peacemaker, and I got the usual result. Whenever you interfere in a family quarrel, everybody turns on you. But now the Senator from Pennsylvania says that the Attorney General had been given ample time to realize. That the previous President, Mr. Harding, had made a mistake in putting him in office, and he would not get out, and therefore President Coolidge was very much to be commended, and all fair people would thank God that he had waked up and put the Attorney General out.

The Attorney General says, on the other hand—and I am just quoting one Republican against the other; I do not have to commit myself to either one of these contending factions, the Lord be praised. I am perfectly willing to attend the funeral of either one of them or take a half day off and go to the funerals of both; but, Mr. President, when the Senator from Pennsylvania, in a more righteous attitude than anybody else has ever attained, shall undertake to set us all right, me in particular, both as to my sources of information and my desire to be fair and candid, I want him to read the letter of the Attorney General and then read his notes, in which he says that the President gave the Attorney General plenty of time to get out, and he would not do it, and then he kicked him out. The Attorney General's letter will be in the Record in a few moments. I believe I will ask for it back and read it while the Senator from Pennsylvania happens to be present. I want to show that the Attorney General said to the President twice that he was ready to get out, and the President said, "You make such a splendid officer, and the affairs of your department are in such splendid shape that the country can not spare you."

That is not the exact language, and I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not take me to task for putting a period where he put a comma, because he is more learned than I. I want to read the letter, and then I will trust to that great sense of fairness which the Senator from Pennsylvania has insisted everybody should have, and he alone possesses, to withdraw his remarks that the President waited on the Attorney General long enough for him to get out, and then put him out, because the Attorney General in his letter, which is open to scrutiny, while the letter of the Senator from Pennsylvania is denied the public, said this, and I apologize to the Senator from Pennsylvania for reading this, because it shows a little feeling upon the part of the Attorney General. I am reading now from page 5 of the Attorney General's letter, the last paragraph:

I am aware, Mr. President, that the suggestion has been made to you that my retirement from the Cabinet would serve the ends of party expediency.

Who made that suggestion to the President? The Senator from Pennsylvania said, "I talked to the President, but what I said to him I am not going to tell." The Attorney General says in his letter:

I am aware, Mr. President, that the suggestion has been made to you that my retirement from the Cabinet would serve the ends of party expediency.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says he is one of those who told the President something about the Attorney General, but he will not tell us what he said. The papers report that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was another of those who had made representations to the President, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was the third. The Attorney General is the only witness I have. The Senator from Pennsylvania a moment ago said there were a lot of scurrilous witnesses testifying about backstair rumors.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. That was one of the grounds which the Senator from Idaho suggested, and he is very glad to state it publicly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am delighted at the candor of the Senator from Idaho. He is always candid. The Senator from Pennsylvania said it does not make any difference whether it is right or wrong, Mr. Daugherty ought to go; or that is the inference I got from reading the letter of the Attorney General to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but which the Senator from Pennsylvania did say nobody dare publish. I do not know, I just want to make this sweeping apology to the country, that when I am quoting one Republican against another I am never certain when I am correct. But as nearly correct as I can read, I am reading the evidence. I read again that statement:

I am aware, Mr. President, that the suggestion has been made to you that my retirement from the Cabinet would serve the ends of party expediency.

Then he continues:

Had I believed this I would have retired when this contention was first raised.

Now, may I have the attention of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania? Here is what the Attorney General says. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that the Attorney General ought to have had the decency to get out. I am not quoting his exact language, but I am trying to interpret what the Senator said in more scholarly language. This is what the Attorney General said:

Twice since you became President, and when I could have done so without criticism, I have offered to retire from your Cabinet, and you have in each instance requested me to remain.

Why?

Because, as you were kind enough to say, of your entire satisfaction with the splendid accomplishments of the Department of Justice under my administration.

Well, I am going to leave the waiting country now to determine between the President, the Attorney General, and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania just what happened, and I beg everybody's pardon for intermeddling in a family row. I have been actuated by what I thought everyone would concede was an entirely disinterested motive. I intended to try to set forth the view that the Attorney General at least had the courage, which the Post intimated some of the Republicans did not have, to stand up and fight, and since none of them would come to his rescue, since now he is down and out, I wanted to speak this word of kindness at his obsequies.

Only a few short weeks ago the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] rose in his place and said that if anybody wanted to go to the mat with the Attorney General, he would have a real fight. I am not quoting his exact language; I am hoping that I may be permitted to put a rather loose interpretation upon the scholarly enunciations of Republican Senators. He said that the Attorney General was as clean as a hound's tooth, and they were not going to let him be lynched. And when, believing he could rely upon their promises, he stood up to fight, they drew the mat from under his feet. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to admonish the galleries that another manifestation of either pleasure or displeasure will result in clearing the galleries, under a rule of the Senate which the Chair must enforce.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, they were not manifesting approval. They were just weeping over a corpse, and they ought to have been allowed to mourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into the very interesting controversy between the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and this new and powerful champion of the former Attorney General. Nor shall I at this time enter into any discussion of the respective merits of the position of the President of the United States and that of the former Attorney General. Those are great questions that will have to be judged and determined in the forum of public opinion, and, so far as any discussion or defense of the former Attorney General is concerned, that can be had when the committee now investigating this matter makes its report. All I wanted to do, Mr. President, was to call attention to what I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say in one respect, not meaning to quote his exact language—

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to suggest that the Senator had better be careful. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to express the idea that the Attorney General had been given a fair chance to present his case before the committee which is now investigating the case.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator misunderstood me. I made no reference in that connection to proceedings before the committee. I spoke merely of the relations between the President and the Attorney General as Chief Executive and a member of the Cabinet, entirely without reference to anything that happened before the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield just a second?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will not get reckless and call on me if there is another family difference over there, because I want to get out of it.

Mr. WILLIS. I am glad to have the explanation or the statement—if it did not need explanation—made by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think perhaps the statement he made might have been understood by the country in the way that I indicated before, but his disavowal of that meaning is sufficient.

At all events, without at this time criticizing or defending anybody, I simply want to call attention to the present situation. A committee was appointed to investigate the Department of Justice. That committee is now proceeding with its work. It has heard a number of witnesses. I do not at this time comment upon the hearsay testimony that has been reported in the papers nor upon the character of the witnesses. That would probably be improper at this time. All I want to call attention to now is the fact that up to the present moment there has been no opportunity, so far as I have observed, for the Attorney General, or those before the committee speaking for him, his counsel there, to call any witnesses in the Attorney General's behalf.

There has been but slight opportunity for the cross-examination of witnesses. In other words, it can not be truthfully said that the Attorney General has had any opportunity to present his case. The fact is that whatever case there is against him has been presented, but there has been no hearing thus far of the other side of the case.

I do not now criticize the committee because of the procedure it has adopted. No doubt full opportunity will be given for the summoning of witnesses and for the cross-examination of those who have already testified. All I want to call attention to is the fact that up to the present time the proceedings before the committee have been in the nature of a prosecution, and there has been no opportunity thus far for a defense. I make that statement so the situation may go before the country in its true light.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. As I understand the Senator, he makes the claim that no opportunity has been given for cross-examination.

Mr. WILLIS. Only in very small part. I do not criticize the Senator or his committee for that. They simply have not proceeded that far.

Mr. BROOKHART. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that full opportunity has been given as to every witness except one, whose testimony, it seems, has not been completed. While much was said in the newspapers about cross-examining certain witnesses, when we reached the cross-examination there proved to be very little of it. It was not because we did not permit it.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not now criticizing the Senator, nor am I criticizing his committee. I am simply calling attention to the fact that in the proceedings thus far they have not perhaps come to the place where it was thought desirable to subpoena witnesses that the former Attorney General might desire to have called. In other words, the proceedings are by no means complete, so it can not be said strictly, until the committee has completed the hearings and made its report, that the former Attorney General has had opportunity to make defense.

I want to read one other paragraph from the letter which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] placed in the record. I think it is rather an important paragraph in what the former Attorney General said, on page 2 of his letter:

Your suggestion that an attack upon a Cabinet officer disqualifies him for further official service is a dangerous doctrine. Mr. President, all the pretended charges against me are false. But whether true or false, if a member of the Cabinet is to be incapacitated or disqualified by the proferment of charges against him, no matter how malicious and groundless, and he is compelled to give up his responsible position and sacrifice his honor for the time being because of such attack, no man in any official position is safe, and the most honorable, upright, and efficient public servant could be swept from office and stable government destroyed by clamor.

I think there is much wisdom in that paragraph upon which Senators and the country may well ponder.

A. W. MELLON, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent out of order to submit a resolution, which I ask may be read.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, it will take only a short time?

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take only a very short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as requested.

The principal clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 200), as follows:

Whereas section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows: "No person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, or first comptroller, or first auditor, or treasurer, or register shall, directly or indirectly, be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State or of the United States; or take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury Department other than what shall be allowed by law; and every person who offends against any of the prohibitions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and forfeit to the United States the penalty of $3,000; and shall upon conviction be removed from office and forever thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States; and if any other person than the public prosecutor shall give information of any such offense upon which a prosecution and conviction shall be had, one-half the aforesaid penalty of $3,000, when recovered, shall be for the use of the person giving such information."; and

Whereas section 3168 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows: "Any internal revenue officer who is or shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production, rectification, or redistillation of distilled spirits, shall be dismissed from office; and every officer who becomes so interested in any such manufacture, or production, rectification, or redistillation, or in the production of fermented liquors, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000"; and

Whereas it appears from a letter from A. W. Mellon addressed to KENNETH McKELLAR, dated March 5, 1924: "The refunds to the Gulf Co. and its subsidiaries were charged against three appropriations depending upon the year in which the taxes refunded were originally collected. The payments were $766,112.29 out of the appropriation for 'Refund of taxes illegally collected, 1918 and prior years'; $1,350,884.63 from a similar appropriation for 1919; and $1,211,143.07 for 1921"; and

Whereas it appears that in April, 1921, after A. W. Mellon had become Secretary of the Treasury in March, 1921, the Treasury refunded to the Gulf Refining Co. sums in amounts shown by excerpts from said letter; and

Whereas it is further shown in said letter that an abatement and settlement has since been made with the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co., a company in which said A. W. Mellon is interested, in the sum of $2,631,351; and

Whereas other settlements made with other companies in which the said A. W. Mellon is stockholder or otherwise interested; and

Whereas it appears that the said A. W. Mellon is interested in the Overholt Distilling Co.; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be and is hereby requested and instructed to hold hearings by itself or by a subcommittee and report with the least delay practicable: First, whether the said A. W. Mellon is directly or indirectly concerned in carrying on the business of trade or commerce. Second, whether he is the owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel. Third, whether he is holding the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in violation of section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or any of the laws of the United States. Fourth, whether he is holding the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in violation of section 3168 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BURSUM. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment to submit a request?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table, so that it can come up to-morrow. I shall call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the resolution be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HEFLIN. The resolution would go over until to-morrow, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What the Chair supposes the Senator from Tennessee desires is that the resolution shall go over under the rule.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; let it take that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

HARRY M. DAUGHERTY, LATE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I read from the Washington Post of to-day a report about the committee investigating Mr. Daugherty and the Department of Justice. After telling what was going on, the article says:

Meanwhile the Attorney General's continuance in the Cabinet again became the subject of speculation throughout official Washington.

Further proceedings of the inquiry committee brought out a qualified refusal from the Attorney General to allow the committee's agents access to his department's files for "a general fishing expedition," additional testimony concerning prosecutions of war-time frauds in aircraft with the possible passage of bribe money to "block" their continuance, the day was concluded with Chairman BROOKHART preparing to appeal to President Coolidge for the files the Attorney General was refusing.

Mr. President, for more than a month I have been calling on the President to remove Mr. Daugherty. I said that he was in possession of all these files and correspondence and that the committee could not get to the files in the Department of Justice. I did not know then that he would refuse outright to permit the Senate committee to go into the department to look into the Government files to see what they wanted to use in investigating crooked and corrupt practices against the Government. But the newspapers this morning tell us that on yesterday he flatly refused to permit the committee to have and examine certain files.

An Attorney General of the United States, at the head of the Department of Justice, refuses permission to a Senate committee, another part of the Government that he is supposed to serve, to come in and look into the files of the Government's Department of Justice. Why, Mr. President, it seems to me that any honest Attorney General would say, "Gentlemen, come in. Just help yourselves. Go through the files. I am innocent. Anything that you can find out about me and my conduct of this office I want you to find out. I will help you to find it out. Every agency in this department is at your service." But what do we find him doing, this man who talks about "stable government" perishing from the earth? We find him sitting tight and refusing to let the committee come in and investigate the testimony, and he calls it a "general fishing expedition."

When I read that, Mr. President, I thought of Mr. Gaston B. Means, on behalf of the Department of Justice, going through the private offices of Senators, reading their correspondence from their constituents. That was a "general fishing expedition," carried on in the nighttime. When the Senator was at home asleep his office was unlocked by somebody and an agent of the Department of Justice permitted to go in and examine his private papers and all the secret correspondence he might have from his constituents, perhaps regarding patents that they wanted to get, confiding to the Senator, as they frequently do, something of great value to them and to the country, a patent of an invention of some kind. The Attorney General permitted his detectives, or had them do it, to go through all of those private papers.

For what purpose? To get something against the Senator, in order, if he ever opened his mouth against him, that he might say, "Now, you be quiet; I have got something on you." So, instead of the Department of Justice being a department to enforce the law and to do justice between man and man, I find it using its instrumentalities to prevent justice from being done and to harass and embarrass and intimidate some Senator on whom they might find something. These detectives went through the office of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and they read his correspondence; they went through the office of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]; and God only knows how many other offices they went through. That was a "general fishing expedition"; it was fishing in the night, when Senators were at home asleep; but the Department of Justice was awake, and its smooth and alert detectives were quietly going through the offices of United States Senators.

That mercy I to others show,

That mercy show to me.

It is coming home to roost in the case of Mr. Daugherty, who has used the instrumentalities of the secret service to intimidate men who have sworn to do their duty and who are seeking to safeguard the institutions of their country. He finds that, in spite of all the cloaking and covering up that he can do, we have created such a wave of public opinion in the country, as evidenced by the returns coming in from South Dakota, that altogether a marvelous effect has been produced upon the President in the last 24 hours. So Mr. Daugherty is out.

Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] will take his cause to the President and ask the President to give him an order to go into the Department of Justice and secure whatever files the committee thinks they need in this investigation.

I am glad that the Attorney General has gone, and that the American people can now have access to that testimony, and that the agents under him will be free and unfettered now and permitted to testify without the fear of being removed from office by Mr. Daugherty. It is the most outrageous thing that has come to my attention in a long time that the President has permitted him to stay in office in the face of all these ugly disclosures. A letter was read here in which the President told Mr. Daugherty that he was just doing things magnificently; but now the President says, "The time has come when the trigger has got to be set under you and you have got to be offered up."

The political leaders on the other side had already been up to see the President. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] went to see the President. I once before related here that the Senator from Idaho was talking to the President, as the story goes, and the President said, "Tell me again the reason why you think Daugherty ought to be removed." The brave Senator from Idaho commenced, and the President asked, "Do you not think that Daugherty ought to be present?" The Senator from Idaho said, "I have no objection." So a button was touched, and Mr. Daugherty walked in from another room. He was already hard by.

When Mr. Daugherty came in, the Senator from Idaho proceeded to repeat to the President just what he had previously told him. But what was done? Nothing.

Then the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], we are told, went up and talked with the President. Then they had a talk with Mr. Daugherty, I believe, and they wanted Mr. Daugherty to resign, and, if I correctly remember the story which was printed, they were of the opinion that the presence of Mr. Daugherty in the Cabinet was hurting the Republican Party. There was a political reason, it seems. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania talks this afternoon about somebody trying to make political capital out of this thing. Mr. President, it comes back to what I said a few days ago—and others have said the same thing—it is the duty of one political party, if that party is out of power and the other party is in, if the party in the minority finds the officials of the other party unfaithful and corrupt in office, they owe it to themselves and to their country and to their party to expose that crookedness and corruption and to demand that the guilty officials be put out. If that were not the case, there would be no disclosing of these facts to the country. We are here to look after the interest of the people of the United States. It is our duty to protect from pillage and plunder the rich resources of the Nation.

I heard Governor Pinchot this morning before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry talking about our forest lands and our timber rapidly disappearing and suggesting how we should protect and conserve these great natural resources.

When these resources are gone they are gone forever. The coal lands that belong to the Government and the timberlands that belong to the Government are turned over to those in charge of the Government for safe-keeping, and ought to be honestly guarded. The coal lands ought not to be turned over to rich coal kings for campaign funds, and the timber kings ought not to be permitted to go into the forests and cut these resources away and make their millions in lumber.

There are some men in this country who care nothing for any political party except as that party will let them go in and gobble up the resources of the country. Mr. President, that kind of men have fastened themselves onto the ship of the Republican Party like so many barnacles. They are all over it. That old ship has got to be brought in; it has got to be worked on; it has got to be scraped; the barnacles have got to be removed before that old ship will ever sail smoothly again in the political waters of the United States. The Senator from Pennsylvania had just as well get that into his head.

I have here an editorial from the Wilkes-Barre Telegram, which is an independent paper, and which says:

The country is in a state of "hysteria"—admit it and applaud it as a healthy sign. But hardened indeed in the ways of corruption must a nation be which can contemplate, without a sense of outrage, the shameful disclosures of the last two months without the dismissal of a single culprit and without any indication of criminal proceedings.

That is how some of the people in the country are looking at these terrible disclosures; and yet there are Senators and those outside who would like to have these investigations stopped; who would like to pull the curtain down and say, "We have had enough of investigations." Have we had enough until we have uncovered every crooked act on the part of officials of the Government? Have we had enough until we have removed every corrupt man from Federal office? Certainly we have not. This editorial goes on:

The spectacle of Daugherty returning from Florida within the last 10 days, jauntily and cynically, to take his place in the council chamber of the President of the United States has not been lost upon the country. LODGE sees it now, and BONAH sees it, and PERRIN sees it, but the President does not see it yet.

Daugherty is a barnacle, and he sticks.

But he fell off to-day, Mr. President. I am glad that the President has at last taken some action.

It is a serious thing to have in office an Attorney General as to whom all the terrible disclosures have been revealed as they have in the case of Mr. Daugherty. It is a dreadful thing to retain a man like that in the Cabinet. It is a terrible thing to have a man like that sitting over the testimony that is expected to be used against him and refusing the constituted authorities of the Nation the right to go in, examine, and get that testimony.

On yesterday I understand that Mr. Daugherty's brother, a banker, declined to permit the committee to see the bank's books, in order to find out about the deposits of Jess Smith, Daugherty, and others that Roxie Stinson told about. The brother of the Attorney General said, "No; I will not permit these books to be examined." And on the very same day his brother, the Attorney General, said "No; you can not come into this department on a fishing expedition." I think it was high time that the President should act, and I am glad he has acted. He has waited too long about acting. When such facts come out as have come out in this case, disclosing crooked conduct, the American people want quick action so as to teach others not to follow the wicked footsteps of others.

Mr. President, before I sit down I wish to say that I want to see the President appoint a man to the office of Attorney General who has backbone and courage and unimpeachable integrity. The New York Times said in an editorial not long ago that Mr. Daugherty was not fit for the position of Attorney General either by training or by character. The Senator from Pennsylvania has practically said the same thing to-day. I want to appeal to the President on behalf of the whole people—and I believe the whole people feel that way—that he appoint an Attorney General with no strings tied to him by the big interests, one who will go into office standing with head erect, free, and unfettered to act, not in behalf of Doheny and Sinclair and other violators of law, but who will go in there to act on behalf of this Government, to see that the laws are enforced and so conduct his office that no charge of scandal can be laid at the door of the United States Government's great Department of Justice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hattigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 29 and 33 to the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 7449, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

March 28, 1924.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 29 and 33 to the bill (H. R. 7449) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: "Provided, That the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated for 'miscellaneous expenses, United States courts,' shall be available for expenses properly chargeable thereto when authorized or approved for payment by the Attorney General."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, to save the status of the other bill, I suggest that we lay it aside temporarily by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. BURSUM. With the understanding that it is only a temporary laying aside of the bill, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22.

Mr. WARREN. That will close up the matter entirely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that that completes the deficiency appropriation bill. The items that were objected to by the House are now out of the way.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section (8) 11, on page 11, line 8, after the word "increase," to insert "in the rate"; in line 7, before the word "day," to strike out "first" and to insert "fourth"; and in line 13, after the name "Bureau of Pensions," to insert "after the approval of this act," so as to read:

SEC. 11. That the pension or increase in the rate of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the fourth day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions after the approval of this act in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (8) 11, on page 11, line 15, to add to the section the following:

and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check, and it shall not be canceled, but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, to strike out section 10, in the following words:

Sec. 10. That no claim agent or attorney or other person shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under this act except in claims for original pension, and in such cases no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any such claim, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall for each and every offense be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after the section stricken out, to add an additional section as follows:

Sec. 18. That no claim agent, attorney, or other person shall contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting claims for the increase of pension provided for in this act; and no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for such services in other claims thereunder, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall directly or indirectly otherwise contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall for each and every such offense be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (11) 14, on page 13, line 11, to strike out the word "repealed," and to insert: "modified and amended only so far and to the extent as herein specifically provided and stated" so as to make the section read:

Sec. 14. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby modified and amended only so far and to the extent as herein specifically provided and stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at the end of section 9, intended to give the nurses who served during the Spanish War the same hospitalization privileges which have been given in other pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of section 9, page 8, the following:

Provided further, That any and all laws, whether relating to pensions or any other subject, applicable to women who belonged to the Nurse Corps of the Army after February 2, 1901, shall apply equally to any woman who served honorably as nurse, chief nurse, or superintendent of the Nurse Corps between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1902.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, a provision similar to this was provided in the widows' pension bill at the last session of Congress. It is nothing new. It merely applies to hospitalization, giving them the same rights that members of the Nurse Corps have.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain just what this amendment is intended to cover, and what objects it has in view?

Mr. BURSUM. It covers a few contract nurses who served in Cuba, giving them the same status as is provided by law for members of the Nurse Corps in the matter of privileges and hospitalization. It is nothing new whatever. It is not new legislation.

Mr. KING. Let me understand the Senator. Do all persons who served as nurses in the various wars—the Spanish War and other wars—obtain pensions and hospitalization privileges?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, no; this has no bearing on their pensions. They do receive pensions under certain conditions. They receive disability pensions under the bill which was passed at the last session of Congress; and by that legislation it was provided that contract nurses who served in Cuba should have the same privileges as those belonging to the Nurse Corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to suggest that there must be a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment at the close of line 7, in section 9, was agreed to before the amendment now offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be in order.

Mr. DIAL. I made that motion, Mr. President. I renew the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment to section 9 was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, before we went into the last war a great scandal had arisen in the United States in regard to pensions. Those who were in control of our Government at the time we went into the war tried to prepare for the future and thereby prevent the recurrence of more scandals in the United States in regard to pensions. They provided for insurance upon the lives of the soldiers, and thought they were thereby avoiding the payment of pensions in the future so far as soldiers in that war were concerned; and it was thought that at an early date pensions of other wars would cease.

Mr. President, with all due respect to my colleagues, I do not believe that they fully realize the viciousness and the injustice and the robbery of this bill. Some in the past have been bad, but they are not to be compared to this bill. I do not believe that many people in the States where these pensions are paid would sustain any such principle as is embodied in this bill. It seems to me that it is nothing short of legislative robbery; and, with all due respect to my colleagues, I can not understand the workings of their minds, after they have been elected by people, many of whom are burdened down with taxes, many of whom are deprived of the comforts of life, when they come in here and dish out, almost without any consideration, I might say, $55,000,000 of the people's money annually, and perhaps a great deal more.

This bill is not in intelligible shape. It is necessary to look to the Revised Statutes of the United States to discover who are intended to be pensioned by it. It is loose and ragged and rough and disconnected legislation.

Mr. President, it is well to be charitable. That is a quality to be commended in the hearts of all people; but people ought to be charitable with their own means and not put upon other people burdens which they cannot bear.

It is a very easy matter to vote taxes, and those who vote the taxes can soon step from under; but when you once vote taxes and pensions, they remain upon the people and some one has to pay them or the Government will fail sooner or later and we will have to go into repudiation.

I have been an optimist all of my life. I have had as much energy, if you will excuse me for saying so, as a steam engine; but I must say that I believe this country has gone beyond the limit in the burdens imposed upon the people. This bill, without a semblance of justice in it, proposes to pick up people who served in a war or whose names were on the roll 60 or 90 days only, who perhaps were not within a thousand miles of a battle or a bullet, and just simply because their names were on the Federal roll it is sought now to make them a selected class and give them a great gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States.

I yield to no one in my respect for a true soldier, for a man who really fought; but here you go and look up all of the deserters, all of the camp followers, and all of the stragglers that followed the Union Army during the war and get them on the roll. You have been adding them on for years and years and years. You added 5,000 at one time a year or two ago. Last year, I am thankful to say, I defeated that crowd—about 1,360 of them, I believe.

We do not know what this bill means, Mr. President. I do not. I hope my colleagues do, but I question it.

For instance, on page 6, beginning at line 13, the bill says:

That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War; and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906—

And so on.

There is nothing here to show who those people are, how many there are, and how much pension will be paid them. The bill ought to be redrawn, and the beneficiaries ought to be enumerated or designated so that the bill itself would show who was entitled to the benefits under it. I call that loose legislation, careless legislation, and I am amazed at the little interest being taken in it.

It does not require that an applicant should have been wounded. It does not require that he shall be in straitened financial circumstances, or anything of that sort. As a matter of fact, I believe that since I have been a Member of this body it has been developed on this floor that a man drew a Federal pension at the same time he was drawing a salary as a United States Senator, and perhaps a salary as an ex-United States official, and when he died his estate was worth $7,000,000. Yet the people of this country were taxed to pay him a pension.

I do not see the force, the strength, the honesty, the justice of such a bill as this. History tells us that there are only about three generations from shirt sleeve to shirt sleeve. Yet this is a bill to set people up with magnificent support, that is to be handed down to those comely women who married them late in life. That pension is to be handed on down to posterity, like the operation of the law of primogeniture in England. In 1923 we paid out $253,000,000 in pensions, the largest amount that has been paid out in pensions since the Civil War.

Where are we going, Mr. President? When are we going to stop? I can not forget the people at home, who labor 12 and 14 hours a day on the farm, and who have a hard time making ends meet, and whose property now is being sold for taxes. Yet we come here and allow people to take money out of the Treasury simply because their names were on the roll 60 or 90 days during the time when they ought to have been doing their duty, if they did not.

If the people of the United States understood this bill, and how loosely we legislate here, I venture to say there would be almost an uprising in this country.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DIAL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator think that the Congress would cause an uprising by expressing its gratitude to those who fought to save the country and defend the flag?

Mr. DIAL. Not for expressing it in a proper way.

Mr. NEELY. What better way is there to express it to those who are in need and tottering on the brink of the grave than to grant them such pensions as will enable them to live in comfort?

Mr. DIAL. If my friend had read the bill he would not have asked me the question. I raise no point as to those who were wounded or disabled. I say that it is the duty of the Government, as I said yesterday, to take care of the wounded and disabled, to support them, and support their dependents. But this bill does not refer to them alone. It refers also to people who did not have a scratch on them and not a diseased bone or muscle in their bodies.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator again yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Then my good friend, the distinguished Senator, thinks that in order to entitle a soldier to compensation, regardless of his financial condition, he must have been seriously wounded? I wish to assure the Senator that I have not only read the bill but that as a member of the committee that prepared the bill I made the motion in the committee by virtue of which the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] favorably reported it to the Senate. I hope it may be passed without further loss of time.

Every Member of this body knows that it will pass eventually, so why not pass it now? Every Member of this body knows that those who are opposing the bill are not voicing the sentiments of a majority of the Democratic Members of the Senate. They are speaking for themselves alone. I do not believe there are more than four on this side of the Chamber who are not heartily in favor of the passage of the bill. I find no fault with my distinguished friend from South Carolina or any other Member for conscientiously opposing the measure, but inasmuch as it is a foregone conclusion that this bill will become a law during the session why should we not vote on it immediately and grant the relief it contemplates without delay?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, it is not a question with me as to what the Democrats or what the Republicans think about a bill. I am not here to play cheap politics, to try to get votes by paying money out of the Treasury of the United States. That is not commendable any more than it would be commendable to try to buy a vote with money out of your own pocket. In fact, it is less commendable than trying to buy votes with money out of your own pocket. I believe I am talking in the interest of the people of this country. I care nothing about the effect it will have on politics one way or the other. Somebody has to sound a warning sooner or later. President Harding himself would not approve this bill. I said on the floor of the Senate when he vetoed it that I had never expected to live to see a Republican President veto a Civil War pension bill, but that President did it, and I wanted to extend to him the congratulations of the people of this country, to which he was entitled.

Mr. NEELY. Will the able Senator from South Carolina further yield?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator states that President Harding vetoed this bill. I wish to inquire if the Senator thinks that President Harding's successor will also veto it?

Mr. DIAL. I have strong hopes. While I am not a spokesman of any Republican, I have confidence in President Coolidge, confidence in his honesty, confidence in his uprightness, and confidence in his manhood; and I will say to my friend from West Virginia that he said the other day—so I saw in the papers—that he did not believe in an increase of pensions at the present time, and if the Senator will allow me, while I am not in communication with the President, I interpreted that to mean he was against this bill.

Mr. NEELY. Is the Senator from South Carolina sufficiently strong in that conviction to let us submit the proposition to the President at once?

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely.

Mr. NEELY. And let the President determine the fate of the bill without further debate?

Mr. DIAL. No; it is one of my privileges to debate questions on this floor, and I take up about as little time as any man here. I do not talk just to hear myself talk, or to please the galleries. I try to have something to say, and when I get through saying it, I quit.

I am not like the man spoken of by the little boy down in the South. A gentleman was on the outside of a hall waiting to carry a speaker home, but he became very tired waiting. The speaker was long-winded, as some other speakers sometimes are. At last a little boy slipped out of the back door of the hall and went around to the front, and the gentleman in the automobile said, "Say, bud, is that man in there through speaking?" The boy answered, "Gee, mister, he's through, but he won't quit." [Laughter.] When I get through I usually quit, Mr. President. If it were within my power, I would speak to the end of this session to kill this bill, but I realize that is physically impossible, and I am not going to attempt it.

Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood. I have nothing to say against the Government taking care of the wounded and disabled soldiers of any war, but when they go around and rake over this country to hunt up and bring in people just simply to get them on the pension rolls to draw pensions, I am totally opposed to it. It is not a question of politics; it is simply a question of common honesty and of common decency and of common right.

I venture to say there is nothing in the world to be compared to it. So far as politics is concerned, I would not be afraid to make it an issue in any State in the Union, and leave it to a vote of the people as to whether they approve paying an enormous sum monthly to able-bodied men.

Mr. President, I have here a good many amendments that I want to offer.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Is the amendment which I offered to section 9 disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the committee amendment as amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he will not let us complete the amendments to section 9?

Mr. DIAL. I thought they were all completed.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if, after he has completed his amendments, he will have a reprint of the bill made so that when we meet on Monday it may be before us?

Mr. BURSUM. The bill is all printed except this one little amendment.

Mr. KING. I understood that there had been one reprint and a number of amendments had been submitted since.

Mr. BURSUM. No amendment except this one amendment, which is a minor affair. The other amendments were printed in the bill, and the language of the bill as originally drawn appears with lines through it where it has been stricken out, so that the bill as now printed represents the bill together with the amendments as agreed on in the committee. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit a vote on this one amendment?

Mr. DIAL. I understand I can offer mine later?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Carolina desires to offer an amendment to section 9, the amendment to which has already been agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. I did not so understand.

Mr. DIAL. Not to the last amendment, but to section 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Once the committee amendment as amended is agreed to, the matter will be closed until the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. I do not want that to be the case.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator want to amend section 9, or some other section?

Mr. DIAL. Section 9. There are a lot of other sections that I want to amend, but I want to amend section 9 in several respects. I do not know about the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico has pending, but I do want to amend section 9.

Mr. BURSUM. I would like to have the amendment now pending disposed of.

Mr. DIAL. Then, before section 9 is passed I can move to amend it, as I understand.

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to section 9 has been agreed to, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. KING. I suggest that the Senator from New Mexico, having made disposition of his amendment, the Senator from South Carolina can tender his amendment and have it pending.

Mr. BURSUM. He can either do that or have a vote on it. I do not know that the Senator is much interested in section 9. It is a different section that he desires particularly to amend, I believe.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I am interested in section 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from South Carolina send to the desk the amendment which he desires to offer to section 9?

Mr. DIAL. I have several amendments to offer to section 9, the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment to section 9, the committee amendment, as amended, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 6, the Senator from South Carolina moves to amend by striking out "$50" and inserting "$40."

Mr. DIAL. I want to state that this has reference to Spanish-American War veterans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. I now offer the next amendment to section 9, which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 6, strike out "$20" and insert "$30."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina to the committee amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 15, strike out "$30" and insert "$40."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee is on page 9, line 16, to strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee is on page 9, line 18, to strike out "$50" and insert "$60."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina proposes to amend the committee amendment by striking out the proviso, beginning in line 18, in the following words:

Provided, That all leaves of absence and furloughs under General Orders, numbered 150, August 29, 1898, War Department, shall be included in determining the period of pensionable service.

Mr. DIAL. It is a very indefinite proposition that is contained in the proviso. There is no telling how many it includes. There is nothing to show the pertinency or relevancy of it. I hope that it will be stricken out.

Mr. BURSUM. I will say that it is in accordance with the present law. There is no change from the present law in that respect. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ALFRED J. PEARSON, MINISTER TO POLAND.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations the nomination which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

To be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Poland, Alfred J. Pearson, of Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, March 31, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 28, 1924.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Alfred J. Pearson, of Iowa, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Poland.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 28, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the Lord God, our strength and our redeemer. Speak to us again through the presence of Thy Spirit, and do Thou truth and wisdom give. Oh love divine, man's strength and support in every time of need, be Thou our stay and comfort. Wherever duty leads, wherever responsibility directs, Oh let Thy guidance lead the way and direct our course. Come to all our homes with rich blessings of happiness, take care of all loved ones who may be far away, and bless all of us with great peace of mind and rest of heart. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT'S APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, presented for printing under the rule the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL, 1924.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the deficiency bill, H. R. 7449.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report on the deficiency bill, H. R. 7449. Does the gentleman desire the report to be read?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the report. I think the report is all right.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 15, 18, 23, 30, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, and 52, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For payment of expenses incurred by the Sergeant at Arms on account of attendance of the committee of Senators at the funeral of the late President Warren G. Harding, $5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

"For expenses of the Public Buildings Commission, $10,000, to remain available until expended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the sum "$70,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the headstones furnished hereunder shall be of such design and material as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Battle Monuments Commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 22, 29, and 33.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report; as to each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10: Appropriates for expenses of the Senate in the amounts proposed in the Senate amendments.

On No. 11: Appropriates $10,000 for expenses of the Public Buildings Commission, as proposed by the Senate, modified so as to eliminate the allowance for an automobile.

On Nos. 12 and 13, relating to the Senate Office Building: Appropriates $12,000 for the construction of an additional suite of rooms and $12,500 for the purchase and repair of rugs, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 14: Strikes out the authority, inserted by the Senate, for the construction of a temporary central power plant for the Navy and Munitions Buildings and the temporary office buildings in that vicinity.

On No. 15: Strikes out the appropriation of $4,500, proposed by the Senate, for the employment of special legal services for the Public Utilities Commission, District of Columbia.

On No. 16: Appropriates $1,600, as proposed by the Senate, for additional rent for the office of the recorder of deeds.

On No. 17: Appropriates $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, for maintenance of public convenience stations.

On No. 18: Strikes out the appropriation of $200,000, inserted by the Senate, for the purchase of land for the Klingie Valley Boulevard and Highway.

On Nos. 19, 20, and 21, relating to the Department of Agriculture: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: $3,500 for repair of damages done by typhoon at the agricultural experiment station in Guam; $11,000 for the protection of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands; and $70,000 for preventing the spread of moths in the New England States, New York, and New Jersey.

On No. 23: Strikes out the appropriation of $200, inserted by the Senate, for refund of immigration fines assessed and collected from the French Line, New York City.

On Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, and 32, relating to the Department of State: Appropriations, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: $4,311.31 for the relief and protection of American seamen for the fiscal year 1922; $1,675.74 for the fiscal year 1923 for transporting remains of diplomatic and consular officers, consular assistants, and clerks to their homes for internment; $5,939.76 for expenses of the International Radiotelegraphic Convention for the calendar years 1922 and 1923; $150,000 for the acquisition of embassy property at Paris; $575 for the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration; $154.29 for the International Sanitary Bureau; and $136 for the Cape Spartel Light, coast of Morocco.

On No. 34: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for traveling and contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

On No. 35: Appropriates $242,000, as proposed by the Senate, to enable the Internal Revenue Bureau to refund rejected offers in compromise.

On Nos. 36 and 37: Strikes out the legislation, inserted by the Senate, providing for the appointment of additional temporary warrant and commissioned officers in the Coast Guard.

On No. 38: Appropriates $300, as proposed by the Senate, for incidental and contingent expenses of the Boise (Idaho) assay office.

On No. 39: Appropriates $5,500, as proposed by the Senate, for additional water supply for the marine hospital at Key West, Fla.

On Nos. 41 to 45, inclusive: Appropriates for the payment of judgments of United States courts certified to Congress after the bill has passed the House.

On Nos. 46 to 50, inclusive: Appropriates for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 51: Appropriates $1,190,204.64, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of claims allowed by the General Accounting Office and certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 52: Corrects a section number in the bill.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments:

On No. 22: Relating to the payment of expenses chargeable to the appropriation "miscellaneous expenses, United States courts."

On No. 29: Relating to the appropriation of $400 for the International Railway Congress.

On No. 33: Relating to the appropriation of $15,045 for the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,

D. R. ANTHONY, JR.,

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. The amount of the bill as it passed the Senate was $156,876,285.50. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $154,679,317.00. The amount added by the Senate was $2,178,968.44. The Senate recedes from the following items:

Klingie Valley Park, $200,000; counsel for Public Utilities Commission, $4,500; and refund of immigration fines, $200; making in all $204,700.

The House recedes on items covering the following:

Audited claims, $1,190,204.64.

Judgments, Court of Claims, $176,542.40.

Judgments, United States courts, $12,624.30.

Refund of offers in compromise, $242,000.

Paris Embassy, $150,000.

Spread of moths, $70,000.

Senate expenses, $39,300.

Senate Office Building, $24,500.

Public Buildings Commission, $10,000.

Rent, recorder of deeds, $1,600.

Convenience stations, $3,000.

Guam experiment station, $3,500.

Protecting Oregon and California railroad lands, $11,000.

Relief and protection of American seamen, $4,311.31.

Transporting remains, State department, $1,675.74.

International Radiotelegraphic Convention, $5,939.76.

International Bureau of Permanent Court of Arbitration, $575.

International Sanitary Bureau, $154.29.

Cape Spartel Light, $136.

Farm Loan Board, $5,000.

Boise assay office, $300.

Key West marine hospital, $5,500.

The audited claims, as will be observed, take up a large part of the amount, namely, $1,190,204.64, added by the Senate. These claims, coming in from past years, are audited by the Comptroller General, and there was nothing to do but to appropriate for them.

The judgments of the Court of Claims, amounting to $176,542.40, were filed after the House had completed its work on the bill.

The refund of offers in compromise amounts to $242,000. That is where people had fines assessed against them by the Treasury Department for infractions of the law and sent their checks on offers of compromise. These checks go into the Treasury of the United States, and if the Treasury refuses to accept the amounts offered in compromise then it becomes necessary to make an appropriation of the amounts deposited to enable them to get their money back. This item embraces transactions of that kind.

The people in the District recorder's office are crowded one on top of the other. They have not space enough to do their work, and the work of the recorder of deeds is a year behind. It seems to me that not only this $1,600, but a larger sum should be provided for the present fiscal year in order that the recorder of deeds may properly perform the duties of his office.

As to the relief and protection of American seamen, all these obligations are placed on the consuls of the United States located in various countries, and these consuls are required to furnish relief and transportation home for stranded American sailors. This item covers these obligations already incurred by them. The next item is transportation of remains of foreign officers, $1,675.74. These are obligations that have already been incurred.

The item for the International Radiotelegraphic Convention, $5,939.76, is for the calendar years 1922 and 1923.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON THE BONUS BILL.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to ask a question of the whole House?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, indeed, sir.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. My question is that the whole House shall grant unanimous consent that the ex-service Members of this House may be permitted to extend in the Record their remarks in reference to the adjusted compensation bill. I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. MADDEN. I have yielded to the gentleman to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent that the ex-service Members of the House may extend their remarks on the adjusted compensation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I would be justified in failing to object at this time on account of the absence of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. BRAGG], who feels strongly on this subject.

I will have a talk with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAGG] on Monday, when he returns, and then I think it can be settled once and for all. So, Mr. Speaker, for the time being I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield any further.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, objection having been lodged, I rise to a point of no quorum.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of no quorum.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I can not yield. The gentlemen here are denying to the ex-service men—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order—

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. And to other Members the right to extend their remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must observe the rules of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I yielded to the gentleman as a matter of courtesy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Nebraska made a point of no quorum, and I want to ask him to withdraw it, if I may. I yielded to the gentleman as a matter of courtesy while I was proceeding with the consideration of this conference report, and I hope the gentleman will not take advantage of that, and that he will not make his point of no quorum until we finish the report.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. If the gentleman thinks I am taking advantage of anybody personally, I would not have him think that. I am lodging no objection against any personal request.

Mr. MADDEN. And I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of no quorum. I was courteous enough to yield to him when I did not have to while I was considering this report.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I believe the gentleman is right and I think I ought to withdraw it now but not for long.

Mr. MADDEN. At least until I get through with this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska withdraws his point of no quorum.

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL, 1924.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the items which the Senate added amount to $1,058,823.44, to which the House conferees have agreed.

The items brought back for separate vote, the total House recessions, if these two items are concurred in, and the amount of the bill, if those items are incorporated are as follows:

Items brought back for separate vote:
International Railway Congress	$400.00
International Institute of Agriculture at Rome	15,045.00
	15,445.00

Total House recessions, if these two items are concurred in by the House	1,074,268.44
Amount of the bill if the two latter items are incorporated	150,671,535.50

I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker, on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31 of the bill, amendment No. 22, line 12: After the word "years" insert "and amounts heretofore and hereafter appropriated under this title shall be available for expenses properly chargeable thereunder authorized or approved by the Attorney General."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated for 'Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts,' shall be available for expenses properly chargeable thereto when authorized or approved for payment by the Attorney General."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 29, page 39, after line 12, insert:

"INTERNATIONAL RAILWAY CONGRESS.

"To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress, $400."

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNES] both deserve the commendation of every Member of this House for the manner in which they have handled this deficiency bill in conference. Nothing too large or too small has escaped their attention. [Applause.]

They have knocked out of this bill a legislative item carrying over $200,000 for something which ought not to have been in it, and have knocked out another small item, even so small as $4,500—

Mr. MADDEN. Four hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I refer to the $4,500 to pay a man as special counsel who was not entitled to a cent of it. And I think the House ought to know about it and commend them. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I thank the gentleman. This $400 is to pay the yearly quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress in The Hague. There is no law authorizing this, but America, through the State Department, accepted membership in the institute for five years. This is the fifth annual payment due, and I hope the House will concur.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33, on page 40 of the bill, line 4, insert:

"INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE AT ROME, ITALY.

"For expenses of delegates to the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, to be held at Rome during the year 1924, $10,045, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, and for the payment of additional quotas of the United States incident to the admission of Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands to membership in the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, $5,000, in all, $15,045, to remain available until June 30, 1925: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for travel pay of any person unless said person travels on United States ships."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede and concur.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on that I would like to explain about the item. There are 64 nations as adhering members of the International Institute of Agriculture. The headquarters of this institute are at Rome, Italy. The United States has one permanent director on the board. England has 20 votes in the institute. The United States has 6. France has 19. It is customary for the nation having the largest number of votes to deal with problems in which they are most concerned, and frequently it has happened that the United States has not been able to get action on agricultural problems in which it has been most concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering whether the gentleman from Illinois could give us the names of the nine men who are going as delegates.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I took particular pains to get that information and I will give the gentleman all the information I have about them because I was very skeptical about this. Let me first explain a little further.

The proposal here, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, is to put Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands into membership of the International Institute of Agriculture and to have the United States pay the entrance membership fee, which amounts to $5,000. This will give the United States 16 more votes and give it the largest vote of any nation in the institute.

The question then arose, how many delegates should be sent, and I was also skeptical about that. I thought one delegate was all we perhaps ought to have, but I have made a very thorough investigation of the situation and I find one delegate could not perform service on the various committees which are in the general assembly of the institute. All of these committees are in session concurrently, and so the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of State believe that the interests of the United States would be best served by sending nine delegates, in order that we may be represented on each of the important committees. The reason they wanted these delegates was to avoid the necessity of waiting a year or two for the statistics after the transaction is complete and to have their information supplied by telegraph.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. I have been over there twice, but not as a delegate. Is it not a fact that unless you send seven or nine delegates, the American Government would not know anything about what is going on in the various subcommittees?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is what I understand. That was the result of my investigation and I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Let me make this statement first, and then I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I simply wanted to make one observation in that particular connection. We will have nine delegates to represent the various sections of the country and the various departments of agriculture—for instance, cotton, dairying, wheat-growing, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. The main thing, however, about the number of delegates is that we can have a man on each one of the important committees over there. It is in the committees that the questions originate and are acted upon. The whole thing depends entirely upon how many votes you can cast and how many men you can have on the various committees, and I think it has been clear to everyone that the United States has been more or less discriminated against in all the actions of this institute up to now, and hence the importance of adopting the suggestion now made in this conference report.

But to get back now to the delegates, if the gentleman from Texas will give me his attention I will tell the gentleman who the delegates are to be.

Mr. BLANTON. I already know.

Mr. MADDEN. All right; then I will put their names in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; in just a moment. Some gentlemen want me to read these names and give information about them, which I am very glad to do. In response to my inquiry as to who these delegates were to be and as to their qualifications, the following statement is submitted to me by the State Department and the Secretary of Agriculture:

Mr. O. E. Bradfute, president American Farm Bureau Federation, Chicago, Ill.

Prof. William M. Stevenson, vice director Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa.

Dr. A. W. Gilbert, commissioner of agriculture, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Charlotte B. Ware, secretary American Committee on the International Institute, Boston, Mass.

Mr. E. L. Harrison, manager Farmers' Union Cooperatives, Lexington, Ky.

Mr. B. W. Kilgore, director cooperative extension work, Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. Chester Davis, commissioner of agriculture, Helena, Mont.

Mr. Charles Holman, secretary National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Tait Butler, Old Schmitz Building, Memphis, Tenn.

The qualifications of the delegates to the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome are—

1. Mr. O. E. Bradfute is president; represents the American Farm Bureau Federation interests.

2. Prof. William H. Stephenson. He is vice director of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station. Professor Stephenson was former permanent delegate of the United States at the institute, 1921 to 1922. Represents the central agricultural section.

3. Dr. A. W. Gilbert is secretary of the Association of Agricultural Commissioners of the United States; chairman of the American committee of 100 for the International Institute of Agriculture. He also represents the grange.

4. Mrs. Charlotte B. Ware is secretary of the American committee for the International Institute of Agriculture. She was American delegate to the general assembly of the institute in 1913. She was American delegate to the general assembly of the institute in 1922.

5. Mr. E. L. Harrison, Lexington, Ky., represents the cooperatives.

6. Mr. B. W. Kilgore, Raleigh, N. C., who is familiar with the extension work, will have general charge of this line of work at the assembly.

7. Mr. Chester Davis is agricultural commissioner of Montana and secretary of the Northwestern Farmer Group. He represents the wheat-growing districts of the Northwest.

8. Mr. Charles Holman, Washington, D. C., represents the dairy interests of this country.

9. Mr. Tate Butler, Memphis, Tenn., will have charge of cotton at the general assembly.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Which one of the delegates represents the dirt farmer, or is there a dirt farmer in the list?

Mr. MADDEN. I represent the dirt farmer.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman is not going to Rome. I wish he were.

Mr. MADDEN. No; but I think they are thoroughly represented.

Mr. KING. I know the gentleman from Illinois is some farmer.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when one of these agricultural doctor experts came to me the other day asking that I withdraw opposition to this appropriation that was expected to come up in a legislative bill in the House where it belongs, as a legislative matter—this was before it was put on this appropriation bill in the Senate as a rider—I told him this: I said "We are spending every year seventy-odd million dollars as an annual appropriation for the Agricultural Department for you doctor experts to dissipate, if you please." I said "We are spending more money to send you doctors over to this place, and that place, and elsewhere in the European world than we ought," but, I said, "If you will do one thing for the farmer, one practical thing, I would never interpose any objection against any appropriation you want." He said "What is that? We will do it." I said "If you will find some relief for the farmers that will kill the grasshoppers, the common old grasshopper that eats up their crops every year in certain places in the United States, if you will find something to exterminate the grasshoppers you will have earned your money. But until you find something that will give the farmer relief from the common, ordinary grasshopper, I am going to stop voting to send you to Europe."

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can explain what advantage there is in this to the farmers in my district who are out to-day plowing their ground for corn.

Mr. BLANTON. Not a bit on earth, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], whose crops are being eaten up by grasshoppers, not a bit on earth. It is not of any benefit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE], the whip of the House that was to be—it is no aid to his farmers, not a single bit, to send these doctor experts to Europe to spend there $15,000 every year.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Does not the gentleman know that we are approaching the trout season, and does he not know the value of grasshoppers as a bait to catch trout? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. In my district in Texas and in the district of my distinguished colleague [Mr. HUBERT], the finest trout fishing and bass fishing on earth is found there. But they do not bite at grasshoppers. I would like to be there now. I know a place on the ranch of my distinguished colleague, Devils River, where you can pull bass out as fast as you can throw your hook in. As I say, I would like to be there, but I must stay here and work to keep the expert doctors in the Agricultural Department from spending all of the money of the people out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman made the statement that the institute of agriculture would do no good whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it furnishes amusement for these experts.

Mr. ASWELL. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does it not do some good to the actual farmer to get definite, dependable, real information from the institution?

Mr. BLANTON. The farmers of my part of the State are more interested in getting a solution of this grasshopper problem, which in 50 years the doctor experts have not yet solved, than in the solution of foreign questions abroad. If the Agricultural Department will get down to work and find some practical way to exterminate this grasshopper pest that eats up the corn and the cotton every year, they will have benefited the Nation.

In to-day's mail I have just received the following letter from my constituent, Mr. W. J. Moore, cashier of the Moore State Bank, of Llano, Tex., inclosing me a letter he had received from Mr. Charles H. Gable, a specialist from the Bureau of Entomology, United States Department of Agriculture, which I quote:

MOORE STATE BANK,
LLANO, TEX., March 24, 1924.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The grasshoppers wrought great damage to the crops of this section and that further north last year. I have been trying to get in touch with the right people to give us intelligent assistance in fighting them should they reappear this year, and I am handing you herein a copy of a letter from Mr. Charles H. Gable, of San Antonio, thinking you might be interested in that part of same in which he states there are no funds for traveling expenses for his department. We have already written him that if matters get threatening that we want him to come and that we will pay his traveling expenses. It seems to me that in a matter of such grave importance that he should be furnished with the funds on which to get to the seat of trouble. In many places in this, Mason, San Saba, Brown, Coleman, and other counties the grasshoppers simply made complete failures of the crops last year. They hatch out now over small areas in immense numbers, but seem to either be destroyed or go into hiding, only to break out anew in another place.

The matter might become very serious. I am getting our people who deal in poisons lined up to the end that we can get cheaper poison this year and in quantities sufficient to go round, and trying to get these scientific people lined up so that if the trouble comes we can fight effectively.

If you can help in the matter it will be appreciated by me as well as all our farmers.

With kindest regards, I am,
Very truly yours,

W. J. MOORE, Cashier.

[United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Entomology,
Washington, D. C.—Cereal and Forage Insect Investigations.]

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.,
March 21, 1924, Box No. 1077.

Mr. W. J. MOORE,

Moore State Bank, Llano, Tex.

DEAR SIR: I was very glad, indeed, to receive your letter of March 19, with the assurance of the hearty cooperation of your people in meeting the grasshopper outbreak this year.

Since writing Mr. Watkins we have been notified from Washington of the fact that the funds for our division are almost depleted, owing to the heavy expense of meeting the unusual severe outbreaks of insects in other parts of the country. It is certainly very unfortunate that our allotment for the balance of the fiscal year, July 1, is so small that we can not meet the expense of transportation and subsistence incident to field trips.

The situation is seriously unfortunate. If the entire burden is thrown on the extension division of the A. & M., it will probably be physically impossible for them to render necessary to know that something like 60 counties reported grasshoppers last year. Some of these were not injured seriously, and the outbreak may not occur in alarming intensity in every county this year. It is probable, however, that in many places there will be urgent demand for help. I am stating these facts so that you may appreciate the difficulties of the problem confronting us, since we are practically helpless through lack of funds, and the extension division probably unable to cope with the entire situation owing to lack of men and probably also limitation of funds.

Besides an earnest desire to give aid wherever such is needed, I have a very special interest in the people of Llano and Mason Counties, owing to the pleasant associations and helpful cooperation received from them last year. If there were some way of meeting the expense of transportation in the form of mileage—we have an auto but no money to run it—and subsistence, it would be possible to get in very close touch with you people, and, I believe, prevent any serious loss from the hoppers.

I am not sure but that the best way would be to get in personal touch with a large number of the individual farmers just as soon as the weather warms up a little—possibly in the next week or two—and show them just how this mixture is made and distributed. I do not believe it is necessary to wait until the hoppers actually appear in numbers before this instruction is given. Your people already realize the danger of the hoppers, and such a move would help to establish their confidence in planting and stimulate interest, so that they would be willing to provide themselves with the necessary material before it is actually needed and thus gain the advantage of quantity prices.

If there is any possible way for us to secure 7 cents a mile for the use of our machine and subsistence, which would probably be a comparatively small matter, since I might be able to sponge on some of my friends in that section, I would be only too glad to give you whatever assistance you may desire.

Yours very sincerely,

CHARLES H. GABLE,
Specialist in Charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that before we send these expert doctor scientists to European meets across the water we ought first to provide our suffering constituents back home with relief from these destructive grasshoppers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement I made before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in regard to a bill to prohibit the pollution of navigable streams, and with that a statement of General Beach on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statements made before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on the pollution of navigable streams:

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. ROSENBLUM, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, you have heard a great deal more discussion with regard to oil pollution of ports and harbors than any other kind of water pollution.

The bill that I have introduced (H. R. 690) is intended to prevent the pollution of our navigable streams from the deposit of acid and acid wastes that are turned into the streams by various industries.

In beginning my remarks, I wish to state that there is no intention on my part, or on the part of those advocating this bill, and I am certain there is no intention on the part of Congress to embarrass or injure our industries in any way. That is as far from our thought as it is from the thought of those who are at this time objecting to this legislation. We are all very anxious of course to concur in the suggestions of our Secretary of Commerce, and we do not desire to enact legislation that will retard or impair the regular processes of business development.

At the same time we stand here as legislators, to safeguard the rights and privileges of the public, generally—more than persons whose specialized interests give them a sufficient incentive to send representatives here in person, or who send communications in opposition to the proposed legislation.

In other words, I regard this committee and the Members of the House as the paid lobbyists and representatives in Washington of the hundreds of thousands of people living in the districts we represent.

When a matter of this kind comes up for consideration, it seems that those opposing this remedial legislation appear in the greatest force and the greatest number. But that is not by reason of the greater right that they have to consideration, because they have specially centralized interests in the matter. On the contrary, we should never lose sight of the fact that—in my particular case, for example, I am here representing and speaking for all of the 218,000 people in my district, with the exception of those who have been heard from in opposition to this bill. And I believe the same situation is true as to every Member of Congress. The public, whose rights are being violated, do not require these special representatives to plead their cause.

I am certain it is the view of the Members of Congress, that it is our purpose to represent all the people of our districts, whether in the industries or in their private capacity as citizens.

The conditions that this bill undertakes to remedy are not new. They have been in existence practically since the beginning of our commercial development of the country. But they have not become acute until within the last few years, largely because of the fact that the industries have developed so rapidly; so many factories have been built, and so many coal mines have been opened, that the refuse matter handled has increased to an enormous extent.

Another consideration is the fact that the streams that are being contaminated—and there has never been a denial from any of these industries objecting to the legislation that this pollution does not occur—are streams running through country that is populated practically from one end to the other. Navigable streams, of course, attract commerce, and are responsible for the building of cities, because of the streams, which furnish an immediate water supply.

At the hearings held by this committee in connection with this bill (or a similar bill) introduced at the last session of Congress, Secretary Hoover appeared and made the statement that his department was not in a position to recommend legislation at that time, because they had not given the matter sufficient consideration. But at that time, you will recall—those of you who were members of the committee then—that he did recommend legislation to prohibit the oil pollution of the coastal waters.

At that time I asked him if it was not a fact that the waters of the navigable streams should receive the first consideration of his department, prior to coastal waters. The pollution of the water of the harbors, while it affected the life of the fish in the harbors, and also, to some extent, the beaches and operation of the ships, was not of nearly so great importance to the people of this country as the protection of the inland navigable streams from pollution; because, in addition to their being used for the purpose of commerce, in a great many instances that stream is the only available water supply that the people have for domestic purposes and for home consumption. Therefore, I contend it is a much more important matter to engage the attention of the Department of Commerce than ocean water, which is not used for domestic purposes, and does not have direct and immediate effect on the health of the people and their well-being.

I was very much surprised when Secretary Hoover appeared at the hearings here a few days ago; and I asked him if they had given the matter of inland stream pollution any consideration, and he stated that they had not been able to do so, as they had no appropriation available therefor.

I had hoped to be able to refer to his remarks, but I find that the report of Secretary Hoover's statement before the committee has been sent to the printer.

Mr. NEWTON. Do the cities along the river use the water as it comes out of the river for domestic purposes?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. A great many of them do, except those that have filtration plants; and those that have filtration plants use the water after it has come through the filtration plant. I will refer to that later.

Now, Secretary Hoover in these hearings stated that he would recommend that legislation be enacted for the prevention of pollution of coastal waters by oil and oil wastes, although his department did not have an adequate remedy at hand to suggest. But he said he was of the opinion that legislation on this subject would so sharpen the wits and stir the minds of those who are causing this pollution as to produce some incentive for them to devise something that would adequately take care of the situation before the law was actually put to operation.

Now, in this bill that I have introduced, while there is no hard-and-fast rule that can be adopted to force these industries that bring about this condition that has been so much complained of, I can not see why, in view of the fact that this legislation undertakes to meet a condition that is resulting in a great deal of discomfort, injury, illness, and damage to the people living in these centers, the same logical reasons that Secretary Hoover has presented to the committee with regard to oil legislation would not apply with even greater force to this bill in connection with the pollution of inland waters. An indication from Congress that they recognize the dangers and the damage arising from the present conditions, to the extent that they are willing to give to the War Department and the United States engineers the authority and the power to promulgate certain rules and regulations governing the discharge of the deleterious matters into the waters of the navigable streams, should be equally effective in this case.

If you will examine this bill (H. R. 690), you will find it is not nearly as drastic as one would suppose from the protests that have been filed here. It undertakes, as it states in the bill, to give the Secretary of War the right to adopt such measures—the purpose is, of course, to amend section 13 of the present statute—

Mr. LINDBERGH (interposing). That is the law of 1899?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; the act of March 3, 1899. The provisions of my bill are practically the same as those contained in that section, with this exception: That it undertakes to provide a penalty; and without a penalty the law is useless. If we really want to safeguard the interests of the Government in its property along these navigable streams and to safeguard the health and lives of the people, there must be a penalty provided in order that the orders, when promulgated, may be carried into effect.

There has never been, as I have said before—and I will repeat that—a single statement filed with this committee or with any Member of Congress so far as I know from the industries who are the principal offenders denying the fact that the operation of their business creates a waste, which is turned into the waters, which is harmful to the health, property, and even endangers the lives of the people of that community.

And while there is no desire to hamper their business in any unnecessary way, there is a desire—on my part, at least—to undertake to safeguard the property and the rights and the lives of these people who are dependent for their water supply on the navigable streams.

There are, of course, two rights involved. The right of the business to proceed in its regular way, and the right of the great mass of the citizens. I do not see where those rights are in any wise antagonistic. It would be different if, in attempting to prevent the deposit of this waste matter into the streams, we took drastic action which would cause these industries to go out of existence, or even seriously injure them. But nothing is further from the truth. We can preserve both rights. We can have our industries in full operation, and we can have the safeguard thrown around the public that they are entitled to.

There can be no question but that this situation requires relief. There can be no question of the fact that it must come from Congress. It would be futile for the State of Ohio to pass laws, as they have done, in reference to this matter; and across the river from the State of Ohio is the State of West Virginia, with a different set of laws; and then there is the adjoining State of Kentucky; and they have a different law, and so on. It is absolutely necessary that Congress, being given control of these streams by the Constitution, should enact legislation.

Of course, in order to belittle this bill, the chief allegation made by the opponents of the bill as to the purpose of the legislation to prevent the harmful results of this pollution of the waters of our streams, is that it is done merely for the purpose of preserving the fish and to help the fishermen.

Nothing, of course, is further from the truth.

At the hearings held during the Sixty-seventh Congress, in a statement which I presented in the record in opening the hearings on the subject, I stated:

"The discharge or deposit of free acid, acid waste, or any material which will become acid after being in the water is responsible for the following injury and damage:

"It constitutes a constant menace and is a source of injury to the health of persons residing along the stream and using the water.

"It is damaging to the steel structural parts of Government dams, resulting in hindrance to navigation."

In that connection, I want to say that General Beach, who is the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and who is in charge of the Government improvements on these streams, is present, and will tell you that, either Congress should prohibit this acid from going into the waters and destroying the metal parts of the dams, or the Government should stop spending its money in the erection of the dams; because it is a waste of money.

I also stated in my address before the committee during the last session that—

"Acid water corrodes and deteriorates plumbing in homes and buildings.

"It is destructive to boiler tubes in plants located along the river and as well in steamboats operating thereon.

"It annihilates all fish and kills all manner of vegetation.

"It jeopardizes the health of stock on the farms.

"The acid causes injury to clothing washed in the water.

"The chemicals make the water dangerous to bathe in.

"At some points along the Ohio River, which river has come under my personal observation, and in which I am particularly interested, the bathing beaches were deserted because of the odor from the decaying fish.

"It is therefore obvious, gentlemen, that the preservation of fish life is entirely incidental, viewed from the standpoint of public importance."

I might save the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, if I could get permission to incorporate in this hearing my statement made during the last session of Congress. The argument has not been changed since that time, except that there has been more time for this destruction to develop. I would like to incorporate that in the record.

Mr. FREEMAN. All right; that statement may be inserted in the record.

The statement referred to is as follows:

REMARKS OF HON. BENJAMIN L. ROSENBLUM, OF WEST VIRGINIA, AT A HEARING BEFORE THE RIVERS AND HARBORS COMMITTEE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DECEMBER 7, 1921.

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I listened intently to the remarks of the Secretary of Commerce, who preceded me, and was impressed with his statement that legislation to correct conditions of pollution at ports and in harbors is imperative. Although Mr. Hoover described the present condition of the waters at ports and harbors as damaging to property and destructive to fisheries and the fishing industry, I regret greatly that his investigations were not of sufficient scope to observe the condition of navigable streams resultant from the deposit of noxious acids. In view of his recommendation that nothing in the way of legislation be attempted until after a thorough investigation has been made of navigable inland waterways, with your indulgence I will submit comprehensive reports and studies which have already been made, and which, I believe, will convince you, gentlemen of the committee, that something must be done to correct existing conditions.

"Apparently the only consideration which the Department of Commerce has given this question, according to the statement of Secretary Hoover, was from the viewpoint of the successful operation of fisheries and the preservation of fish life.

"While the preservation and propagation of fish is an incidental object that we hope will be accomplished by the enactment of the bill which I introduced, it is by no means the primary consideration. While it may be the fundamental object of the Department of Commerce to secure legislation which will afford required protection to the fishing industry at ports and harbors, I am actuated by many considerations in my effort to prohibit the contamination of inland waterways.

"The discharge or deposit of free acid, acid waste, or any material which will become acid after being in the water is responsible for the following injury and danger:

"It constitutes a constant menace and is a source of injury to the health of persons residing along the stream using the water.

"It is damaging to the steel structural parts of Government dams, resulting in hindrance to navigation.

"Acid water corrodes and deteriorates plumbing in homes and buildings.

"It is destructive to boiler tubes in plants located along the river and as well in steamboats operating thereon.

"It annihilates all fish and kills all manner of vegetation.

"It jeopardizes the health of stock on the farms.

"The acid causes injury to clothing washed in the water.

"The chemicals make the water dangerous to bathe in.

"At some points along the Ohio River, which river has come under my personal observation, and in which I am particularly interested, the bathing beaches were deserted because of the odor from the decaying fish.

"It is therefore obvious, gentlemen, that the preservation of fish life is entirely incidental, viewed from the standpoint of public importance.

"In my opinion, legislation tending to overcome the present condition of navigable inland waterways is of far greater importance than the legislation which the Secretary of Commerce recommends. The water of inland rivers in many places is the only source for human consumption, and is used everywhere for domestic purposes. Ocean water is not extensively used for these purposes.

"In my home city of Wheeling, W. Va., located on the banks of the Ohio River, we do not have any system of filtration, and the polluted water from the river is served to the public for every domestic use. This is true of other cities in this country. While it is true that people who can afford to have pure water delivered to them for drinking purposes do so, it is also true that many of the people in less fortunate circumstances must drink the water which is sufficiently contaminated by this acid pollution to exterminate fish life.

"The United States Government is annually spending millions of dollars in constructing locks and dams and in making other improvements of navigable waterways, and the acid which is deposited in the water is destroying this work, so that Congress should do one of two things, viz, either discontinue the appropriations for improvements or protect the improvements that have been made.

"The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment, Mr. ROSENBLUM. You take the lower Mississippi; they are having a very prosperous season there in shipping. I do not think there is any pollution interfering with navigation or with the water in that part of the stream. I do not think that is true, probably, of the Ohio.

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. I will say, frankly, that this pollution does exist in the Ohio, virtually all the way from Pittsburgh to Cairo. The water is so highly charged with acids from the factories and mines along the river that it is eating out all the metal work on the dams, and General Beach will tell you that it is only a question of time before all the metal superstructure will be eaten out and will have to be replaced.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is what I called attention to in the present act. I think the present act does apply in a broad way to navigation. It does not apply simply to the ability to run the boats?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. The condition of the water is such that it interferes with navigation. On the navigable streams the life of the boilers on steamboats is so short that it is unprofitable to operate them. The public is interested in the development of steamboat transportation. The Government is interested in it to the extent of improving the waterways. Both the Government and operators of steamboats will be discouraged by the destruction of their equipment, due to this acid in the water.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think that the enforcement of the present law would cover that?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; for the reason that while it allows the War Department to have control of the streams, there is not sufficient authority vested in the War Department to carry its orders into effect.

"The principal reason for the introduction of this bill, which is always the reason for the introduction of bills in legislative assemblies, is the almost universal demand, not only from the constituents whom I have the honor to represent, but as well from people all along navigable streams everywhere. I have introduced this bill to rectify a condition which can not be remedied in any other way.

"The people who live in the Ohio Valley and who are taxpayers owning their own property do not understand why certain individuals should be permitted to dump acids into the river which corrode and deteriorate the plumbing in their homes, causing them annoyance, inconvenience, and expense. The farmer is indeed reticent to offer water to his stock that is sufficiently contaminated to cause the destruction of all animal life which would be present in pure water. Women complain that the acid in the water has a very destructive effect on the clothes which are washed in it, and they have no other water to use except that from the river.

"After a period of commercial inactivity, extending until the past summer, the Ohio River had again stocked itself with numerous fish. For the first time in many years men had an opportunity to secure an article of food of great value without cost. During the industrial depression when many families were financially crippled many men availed themselves of the opportunity of providing a meal for their families by fishing along the banks of the river. As I have previously stated, the mere preservation of fish is only an incidental consideration for the enactment of the bill which I have introduced, yet at a time such as I have mentioned the relief afforded by food provided as a result of catch of fish was indeed welcome to the family in dire circumstances.

"The item of fish preservation is not to be ignored. Fish do not require hay, oats, or corn on which to survive, nor do they require care or attention from anyone. It consumes nothing that could otherwise be utilized by mankind, but is always available as a source of food supply. The Government annually spends a great deal of money stocking streams with fish, mainly on considerations such as I have outlined. Again I say that Congress ought either to discontinue appropriations for this purpose or adopt legislation which will protect the streams after they are stocked with fish.

"Following the industrial depression some of the mills resumed operation, and after the first deposit of acid into the Ohio the surface of the water for many miles was covered with dead fish. The combination of the acid in the water and the dead fish made the water unfit for every purpose, and the odor from the decaying fish was so intense, particularly in the hot summer weather, that for a considerable period of time people living adjacent to the river were greatly annoyed.

"I contend that these people are entitled to relief from similar conditions, which will continue so long as the streams are defiled. I submit, further, that no individual or group of individuals has the right to create such a nuisance against the mass of the people.

"I am offering for your inspection letters and petitions of protest against these conditions. I have also received many resolutions of indorsement of the bill which I have introduced from the people who are affected. I call your attention to communications which I have from New Cumberland, Wellsburg, Wheeling, New Martinsville, Marietta, Parkersburg, and Louisville, all located along the Ohio River and all complaining of the conditions which I am endeavoring to portray and asking for relief.

"Mr. LATON. As a matter of fact, for public information, how much fish have you in the river?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. I mentioned the fish not for the purpose of propagation but as showing the condition of the water.

"Mr. LAYTON. As affecting public health?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. As affecting the public health. Even the manufacturers who are located along the river are compelled to treat the water chemically before they are willing to use it in their boilers.

"Mr. LAYTON. I should judge from your remarks that 75 per cent of the water was pure sulphuric acid.

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. I would not say that it was quite that high. I would say it is over 'one-half of 1 per cent.' [Laughter.] It is an unlawful content; I am sure of that.

"Speaking seriously, however, I regret that the only consideration which the Department of Commerce gave this subject was from the viewpoint of the protection of fisheries. I think I have made it clear that the problem which confronts us is of vastly superior consequence. While I realize that there may be some Members of Congress who are interested primarily and entirely in prohibiting the pollution of ports and harbors, there is not a Member in Congress who is not interested in the object of the bill which I have introduced—to keep the streams in this country uncontaminated, pure, and undefiled.

"The district which it is my privilege to represent is a busy hive of industry. Practically every foot of the shore line is occupied by a factory of some kind. It also has many coal mines. In justice to these manufacturers and to the operators of these coal mines it is only fair for me to state that I have not received an objection to the legislation which I proposed.

"The conditions of which I speak are unusually acute in streams where the Government erected dams. These dams naturally retard the normal movement of the water, retaining sufficient in the pools to insure a certain depth or stage. This aggravates the condition.

"Some of the gentlemen who have preceded me argue that water purifies itself. This was probably true at a time when the population residing along the streams and the industries located on the banks were not congregated so thickly as they are now. On the banks of the Ohio River industrial plants are so congested that the water does not have any chance to purify itself, and the flow being interfered with also adds to prevent natural purification.

"This is a matter that well deserves the attention of this committee, gentlemen, as the question can only be solved by the enactment of national legislation. Sixteen separate States have already passed laws undertaking to eliminate this condition. It is evident that it would be of no avail for manufacturers and coal operators in one State to endeavor to remedy the condition when similar industries in adjacent or contiguous States were not compelled to exercise the same precaution.

"Mr. LAYTON. Do I understand that in using the water of the river for commercial purposes they are estimating to do it by means of purifying the water?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir; to put it in condition for use in the boilers.

"Mr. LAYTON. To get rid of the acids by reason of which they can not use it in the boilers or for other purposes?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is correct.

"Mr. LAYTON. And your idea is that by having that process extended to this flow into the stream, polluting the stream, it would not cost very much more than the other?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. It will not cost as much, as will be demonstrated here. From some of these other gentlemen you will hear the objections from the manufacturers and coal operators. If this legislation were to entail any great burden or seriously interfere with or embarrass industry in any way I would not advocate its enactment.

"Mr. LAYTON. Just another question. You do not believe that all of the refuse that goes from every kind of mill into the stream is necessarily a detriment to fish life or harmful to Government work?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; that is a decision which, under the bill, will be left to the War Department.

"Mr. LAYTON. Do you not think that before any legislation is enacted there should be an absolute investigation of the chemicals to find out just exactly which are deleterious and which are simply neutral? That would be the most scientific way.

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. We must have the law passed before any offense has been committed. It has been demonstrated that certain acids and alkalis are harmful and deleterious. The mere discharge of harmless waste matter into the streams would not be an offense which can be punished. Under this bill the offender has the right to call in and consult with the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, who is in charge of this stream. It gives him that power. While he may have the power under the present law, there is no way of compelling compliance with his advice, as there are no 'teeth' in the law. The act I propose, taken along with the act regulating the harbors of this country, would undertake to place this matter in charge of those who would be able to enforce it.

"Before introducing this measure, I, of course, considered carefully the effect it would have on industry. I think I have previously stated that I would not conscientiously advocate any measure which would encumber the manufacturer or the coal operator. I expect to be able to show by General Beach and some other gentlemen who have made an intensive study of this problem that these conditions can be corrected at an inconsequential cost. I earnestly believe that suitable legislation is imperative, and can not see where anything can be gained by deferring or delaying the matter.

"We men, as I take it, are here representing those who are not of sufficient means and whose individual interests are not great enough to enable them to come here or to hire attorneys or experts or lobbyists to secure beneficial legislation. We are the paid lobbyists of the people back home, and in my district I probably have 100,000 or more of them, and none of them are here on either side of this question. If the interests represented here who object to this legislation will bear with the demonstration we have here and will listen to the statement of General Beach, they will be convinced that the question must be considered, and should be considered at once.

"Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes.

"Mr. CLOUSE. Under the act of March 3, 1899, which is the existing law, does not that act prohibit the discharge or deposit of any substance or material in any navigable stream or any of its tributaries that will impede or obstruct navigation? Is not that the substance and meaning of that act?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is correct; yes, sir.

"Mr. CLOUSE. Then the act further provides that the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers of the War Department may permit a deposit into any of the navigable streams of the United States or their tributaries when, under certain conditions, he may deem that it is not an impediment or an obstruction to navigation. Now, if that be the existing law, why have we not the power, and why have not the people in your district and along the Ohio River and every other navigable stream the power to do the very things that you suggest by your bill?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. For the simple reason that there is no penalty provided.

"Mr. CLOUSE. I would like to know whether or not an amendment of the existing law adding a penalty for the violation of the act would not reach the end you seek by your bill?

"Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is all this bill does. This bill simply adds a penalty, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, if his orders fail to be complied with."

Mr. NEWTON. Can the acid be filtered out of the water when the water is used for drinking purposes?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No. That is something I wanted to speak about. My city is spending $2,000,000 on a filtration plant.

Mr. LINDBERGER. What city is that?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Wheeling, W. Va. That money spent on that filtration plant will be absolutely wasted if this condition continues. The cities of Cincinnati, Parkersburg, and Moundsville have been using this water, after sending it through their filtration plants; but it has deteriorated the plants to such an extent that they have practically gone out of operation; the acid in the water eats the metal parts of the plant away.

I have a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Parkersburg, and numerous other communications, from Cincinnati and elsewhere, and expect to have here Doctor Monger, head of the Health Department of the State of Ohio, who will tell the committee about the conditions along the Ohio River.

Now, I am going to close my remarks very shortly. But I feel that the committee should get this angle of this situation: That it is not the comparatively unimportant matter of preserving the fish that is alone involved. That is not the purpose of the author of the bill, or of those advocating its passage. We do not wish in any way to injure industry. No Representative in Congress, I believe, has as many industries, individual industries, in his district that would be affected by this act if it should be enacted as I have in my district; because this pollution practically all comes from steel mills and coal mines, and I suppose I have more of those in my district than there are in any other district, which, of course, makes the question more acute in my section.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Have you more than the Pittsburgh district?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir. You see, we do not have so many factories, but we do have a great many coal mines.

Mr. NEWTON. What could be done to prevent the pollution that would not interfere with the manufacturing industries?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Well, this bill, as I stated, names no specific act the commission of which shall constitute an offense. It gives the authority to the Secretary of War, in conjunction with the Chief of Engineers, to promulgate rules and regulations after investigation.

Now, the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are not going to issue orders or regulations that can not be fulfilled.

For instance, my idea of the operation of this bill is that if they should find out that—so far as the purpose of protecting the Government property is concerned and so far as the health of the people is concerned—that if these plants should install, for instance, a seepage bed, fill it with lime once in six months, and allow the waste water to percolate through that, it would neutralize the chemical action of that waste material. The War Department would request that factory or that coal mine to treat their waste water in that manner. That would be a regulation that certainly would not destroy the industry. It might cost them a few hundred dollars a year; but unless there was a penalty prescribed, they would pay no attention to that order.

Mr. LINDBERGER. You propose to have them apply to the courts to enforce these penalties, do you not? They can not be applied administratively?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; of course, the orders would be administrative, but the violations of them, of course, would have to come up in the courts.

Mr. LINDBERGER. The courts would pass upon those?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; the courts would pass upon those.

Mr. SEGER. What do you do with the sewage of those cities?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. It is running right into the rivers; but the sewage does not present the menace that the acid does.

Mr. SEGER. Do you not think the action of the sewage is neutralized by the injection of chemicals?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; it may be to some extent. I am not a chemist; but I know that the actual results we have had out in our section are that sometimes the river smells so bad that you can not endure it, and if you attempted to drink it it would make you sick.

Mr. NEWTON. Does that apply to sewage also?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; in a way and to some extent it applies to sewage. But the sewage is not eating away the metal parts of the dams, or causing the other injuries of that kind. Conditions are so bad along the Ohio River that sometimes steamboats going up and down the river have to carry a barge along with them filled with chemicals, so as to neutralize the action of the acids.

Mr. LINDBERGER. In that connection, I think that sewers are referred to in section 13 of the act of 1899; and your bill is simply to supplement section 13, by adding to it a new section, 13a?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. What act is that that you referred to?

Mr. LINDBERGER. The law as it now exists, section 13 of the act of March 3, 1899. I find in it these words, after referring to the various refuse matters which are prohibited by the law as now existing:

"Any refuse matter of any kind or description whatever other than that flowing from streets and sewers and passing therefrom in a liquid state."

I was mistaken; that is exempted under the present law?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINDBERGER. And it is not covered by your amendment?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; and I do not know about that. Of course, some of the public health officials may give you more light on that than I can. The conditions that bring about the request for this legislation are largely based on the commercial proposition, the sulphuric acid, and so on, that are dumped into the waters.

Mr. HULL. Where do those chemicals come from—the glass factories?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; largely from the galvanizing plants; they have a pickle that they put this steel in to galvanizing it; and they work that pickling tank as long as they can, and then dump it into the river. You can always tell when it has been dumped, because there are a few thousand fish floating on the water with their bellies up; and the moment the mills open up those acids are dumped.

Now, I would be the last person to ask for this legislation if it was going to bring about the result to the industries, both coal mines and steel mills, that has been indicated by the protests against the legislation. But the only result will be that it will cause them to spend a few hundred dollars. And they will not pay any attention to regulations—some of them, at least, unless there is a penalty.

But some of them have approved of this legislation. I know that two of them have approved of it—Hazel Atlas Glass Co., the Warwood Tool Co., and others. But a lot of them take the position that there is no use in their undertaking to take care of their waste as long as their neighbors on the stream do not take care of theirs, but continue to send the acid water down from the stream above.

And I make the statement absolutely that it would cost these industries less money a year if they should all be compelled to treat this waste matter in some way to remove the objectionable features than it does at the present time to operate their industries, because the water that they now use in their boilers and the operation of their plants they have to treat chemically before they can use it in their business. And I believe it would be cheaper for them to work it the other way around.

Mr. MORGAN. Are you familiar with the cost of equipment necessary for taking care of this waste matter in the plants?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; I am not. But I feel this way about it—and my viewpoint on this matter could not be better expressed than it has been expressed by Secretary Hoover at the opening of these hearings. Were you present at that time?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Well, is that an important matter now, so far as the industrial plants are concerned?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; but how are you going to find out how much it will cost, unless you compel them to investigate this matter and find out a remedy? They have made no effort to do so. Now, the public necessity requires that something be done so that this pollution will be prevented.

Mr. MORGAN. Might not the conditions imposed by the bill be difficult to meet?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. It does not impose conditions. It gives authority to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers to impose conditions.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, that means the same thing?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; I do not think it does. Because we do not have any expert knowledge of the subject; whereas the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have that knowledge. We undertake to provide a remedy; and our lack of knowledge is such that we might work a hardship upon the industries if we undertook to impose specific conditions.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, it is not highly important that we appraise ourselves of the effect that it would have upon the industrial plants?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Well, it depends upon the viewpoint. I think we are aware of the actual effect it has upon the health and the lives of the people of our districts. We have absolute knowledge as to that.

Mr. NEWTON. Is there any information available, or has anybody considered the matter at all, as to the practicability of devising some method of doing this?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I understand—of course, I can not state it positively—that one of the largest steel concerns in my district several years ago, anticipating that this might be done, engaged an engineer, an expert from New York by the name of Doctor Peacock, and that he has given them a method of overcoming this; but that they have not installed it, because there has been no occasion to install it; but they have it in their possession when the time comes to install it.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, does it not seem to you that the Lineberger bill, which provides for a study of these conditions, is a practicable procedure in order that we may have information to act intelligently on conditions that may be found? Is that not a practical procedure?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Well, of course, that is always practicable; and that was suggested at the last session of the Sixty-seventh Congress. But the statement made by Secretary Hoover at the opening of these hearings, at which he advocated the enactment of legislation to prevent the oil pollution of the waters, although he had no remedy to suggest, but gave as a reason for recommending that legislation that the passage of the legislation would create an incentive on the part of the people who were offending in this way to find a solution—that statement should be borne in mind in connection with the legislation proposed in my bill. You gentlemen will doubtless remember his statement.

I thought the statement was not quite as strong a statement as should come from the department that had all the necessary equipment and assistants, I might say, to investigate these things. And it is not a new question. It has been before Congress for many years; and what is feared by those who favor action to prevent this evil is that, under the Lineberger bill, the matter will continue to be pending in Congress for many years to come.

If this bill that I have introduced undertook to set up certain rules and regulations, the violation of which would be an offense, of course that would be too drastic. If it undertook to say that the deposit of waste materials in these navigable streams should be a criminal offense, that would be too drastic and might seriously interfere with industry.

But this bill undertakes to do only this: It gives to the Secretary of War, after advising with the Chief of Engineers, the right to issue orders and regulations governing the disposition of these waste materials.

Now, I am satisfied that if we confer that authority upon the Secretary of War it will not be abused in the way that is feared by those who are now offending, and it may at the same time bring some relief to the people whose rights are being violated by these offenders. And I represent both the offenders and the people, and I think something ought to be done, and the longer it is delayed the worse the conditions will be.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, if you impose conditions now, might it not work such hardships upon certain industries that they would be unable to meet them?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No. I have confidence enough in our Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to believe that they would not issue such regulations unnecessarily. I will say this, that where they are offending and the proper regulation is adopted, although it may possibly cost them more than they should spend to comply with it, I would be in favor of enforcing it, because the general public has rights that offenders should be forced to respect. The sole right in this matter is not with the offenders in the industries.

Mr. KINDRED. I do not know whether you have studied the important phase of so-called "land pollution"—that is, how will your bill affect the hundreds of thousands of people who live in cities which up to date have no proper sewage disposal or prevention of pollution from sewage that is being deposited in the navigable waters?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. This bill in no way changes the present disposition of those matters. But the bill does give to the Chief of Engineers of the United States the authority, under the Secretary of War, to issue such orders and regulations as may be necessary.

Mr. KINDRED. Pardon me—to do what?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. To establish such rules and orders as shall be necessary. It does not make any specific provision as to disposition; but I am satisfied that those gentlemen who will be granted this power will not abuse it. The power should exist somewhere to deal with this matter.

Mr. NEWTON. Does not your bill impose on the War Department the duty of stopping this contamination?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. It does not impose it; it gives them authority to do that. And in order to have that power, which must exist somewhere, placed where it can be effective at all, it must be placed with the National or Federal Government, because the individual States can not regulate this matter. One State will adopt one law and the State across the river will adopt another law and destroy the effect of the first one.

Mr. NEWTON. If this bill is enacted, however—and thus far we have not any evidence as to the practicability of the methods to be adopted—and the Secretary of War does not stop the pollution, will he not be subject to a charge of dereliction of duty?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Well, I can not agree with you as to that. If he can not find a suitable method of doing this, there is nothing in the act that would compel him to do it.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, do you not think you could bring before the committee some such proof as that of the doctor from New York, who you say was employed by one of those companies, to show the committee whether or not it is feasible to do it without destructive injury to the manufacturing plants?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I still do not seem to have made myself clear. If I were to do that, and this method that this doctor has suggested to this steel company appeared to the committee to be a workable proposition, and economically practicable, it might prove to be so, as far as that industry was concerned; it might cost them very little to adopt that method because they were a large company. At the same time, it might be destructive to a smaller industry, if that should be the method which Congress should require for taking care of the situation.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, we would not have to adopt a particular method?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No.

Mr. NEWTON. But can you not bring proof as to the practicability of such methods—generally?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I would feel that it would safeguard industry to a greater extent to allow that to be decided by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, to make such regulations as they might see fit. I am satisfied that they are not going to go in and stop any industry because of the violation of those rules that they may adopt; and that unless it is a practicable, workable proposition for that industry, they will not adopt such a regulation.

Mr. NEWTON. But if we impose a duty on them to stop the contamination, will they not have to act?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. We do not impose a duty on them, in my opinion, so much as we give them authority.

Mr. NEWTON. But I understand your discussion of your bill, you impose the duty, and then you rely on the Secretary of War not to obey the law unless he finds a practicable method?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I can not follow your logic as to that. I have not made any such suggestion.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. ROSENBLUM, I would like to ask you a question. You have referred to the testimony of the Secretary of Commerce, and you have made an observation here that you can not see why the same logic which he uses regarding oil pollution should not be applied to your bill?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. To acid pollution.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; to acid pollution. Have you taken into consideration that at the time the Secretary of Commerce made this statement, and as a part of his statement, he said that the major source of water pollution was oil, and that the major portion of all oil pollution was floating craft, and that one remedy would practically meet that entire situation? I do not know whether he said, but he certainly intimated, and the testimony which followed has developed, that the other sources of pollution present a much more intricate and involved problem. For instance, a remedy to meet a pollution by a certain kind of plant making acid pollution would not fit another plant; and you have a variety and an intricacy in meeting the acid-pollution problem which does not exist in the oil-pollution problem; it is a question of relativity, if you get my point?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I think I get it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Have I made it clear?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I think you have.

Mr. LINEBERGER. That is my thought. That you can with practically one remedy meet the major source of pollution at this time; that the other sources of pollution involve and embrace various kinds and degrees of industry, and therefore must embrace a varied and intricate method of dealing with them. Your logic would be perfectly tenable to me, if that fact did not exist. But I think that is a coordinate fact that must be considered in connection with the whole pollution problem.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is true, with the exception of this—I just want to make myself clear—that is true as to the consideration of all the various angles of this situation. But I still emphasize the view that Secretary Hoover gave—and he is supposed to be an authority on this matter—and that is that in reference to this oil pollution he was willing to have this law enacted to prohibit it, absolutely prohibit it, which goes much further than my bill proposes to go, without at the same time being able to suggest a remedy. That is the point I tried to make.

The chief objection, as I take it, to the enactment of this bill, which would cause the discontinuance of the acid pollution, is that we have no proper remedy at hand to apply.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yet one remedy would meet the whole oil situation, whereas one remedy would not meet the whole acid situation.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I can conceive that it might require 40.

Mr. LINEBERGER. That is just the point; whereas one remedy would meet the oil situation.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; but the logic that I undertook to interpret from Mr. Hoover's statement and to emphasize here is that, even without being able to offer a suggested remedy for the oil pollution, he deems it wise to legislate absolutely prohibiting the oil pollution without suggesting a remedy.

Now here, while we have no remedy to offer on this matter, my contention is that we do not prohibit the deposit of this waste material in these streams except in violation of the orders to be issued in the future by the Chief of Engineers in connection with the Secretary of War. We do not make the deposit of the waste acids or acid-creating materials an offense, whereas the bill with regard to oil pollution does make it an offense.

Mr. NEWTON. Do you not think that while we are following the policy provided in the Lineberger bill as to oil waste on the seashore we ought to apply the same principle to your bill as to the inland waters of the United States?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; I can not see that there is any difference.

Mr. LINEBERGER. You recognize the fact that acid pollution is a much more intricate problem and much more expensive?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And that 40 remedies may be necessary for that evil, whereas one or two remedies will meet the evil as to the oil pollution?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is correct.

Mr. NEWTON. But I think Mr. ROSENBLUM's idea is that while we are proceeding to remedy the oil pollution and while only one remedy may be necessary as to that we should make an equal effort to meet the problem of the acid pollution on the inland waters?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Exactly.

Mr. KINDRED. In that connection there is a different situation in regard to oil pollution from oil wells, etc., inland than that which exists with regard to meeting the conditions of oil pollution from craft within the 3-mile limit or beyond the 3-mile limit on the ocean?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINDRED. And does not that also bring up a question which is applicable to plants which will cause pollution by chemicals?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINDRED. And that brings up the question of the mechanism, or of adopting some means of disposal which will not be so costly as to amount to a confiscation of the plant?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is true.

Mr. KINDRED. Now, is it not a fact that up to date some plants have actually had to expend—those which have undertaken the big problem of disposal—as much as $300,000?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Probably $1,000,000. Take the silk works, for example, up in the New England States.

Mr. KINDRED. And that would drive out of business a great many small factories, would it not?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; it would not.

Mr. KINDRED. And destroy the means of living of the people employed by them?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Not at all.

Mr. KINDRED. It would, if you destroyed the plants?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. It would not do that.

Mr. KINDRED. Well, would it not if you required them to spend $300,000?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. We are not trying to pass a bill undertaking to make them spend $300,000. All we are undertaking to do in this bill is to authorize the War Department, which is charged with the protection of the Government properties on these streams, to issue orders for the protection of that property. Now, they are not going to issue an order that would compel a small factory to close up. They are going to issue an order to require them to take the water to a lime bed, to neutralize the acids that are in it, at a cost which these people can afford to pay without any hardship. Then, if they do not obey that order, in the interests of the thousands of people who are drinking that water, and using it every day for cooking and washing, a penalty is provided—that is, if they do not spend a couple of hundred dollars to make it safe to use that water.

Mr. NEWTON. The cost of the method adopted would be governed by the amount of the pollution; and that would depend upon the size of the plant, would it not?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; I think that would be true. But you take a very large plant. It might have very little waste matter that is harmful; and then, again, a small plant might have a large quantity of waste matter that is harmful.

Mr. MORGAN. That theory would hardly apply; because, is it not a fact that plants which use galvanizing material have great deposits of acids; and might not a small plant, that manufactures galvanized roofing, or galvanized products of any character, be driven out of business because of the expense of applying the method prescribed?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; there is no chance of putting them out of business; because we do not say that the doing of that will be an offense. We leave that to the engineers and to the War Department to issue their orders.

But I want to say this to the gentleman: That if a plant is operated, the operation of which is a menace to the life and the health of the people who are dependent upon their water supply, because of the by-products of that plant which go into the water, I think it is our duty to act in the interest of the people.

Mr. KINDRED. I agree with you as to that. If life and health are affected. But let me ask you this question: Suppose discretionary powers were given to the War Department such as you suggest, and they go forward and put the act into effect, would they not have to answer any criticisms that might come up—General Beach and the other representatives of the department, if they are given that discretion—and where there were two factories, one operating alongside of the other; and the War Department officials used the discretion given them to let one factory go on and pollute the water, because it could not stand the expense of disposal, and the other factory, because it was able to stand the expense, was ordered, in a mandatory way, to meet and obey the law—you would not be stopping pollution under these circumstances after all, would you?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is a matter that we will have to leave to those charged with the duty of carrying out the law. All we are asking is that they be given the authority to do what you fear may not be done.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. ROSENBLUM, you say nothing about the question of State sovereignty over some of these subjects that are involved in this bill. Are you clear in your mind that Congress has the power to vest, or rather to delegate such powers as you propose to delegate, to any department of the Government, whether it is the War Department or the Department of Commerce—carrying with it the police powers that it necessarily carries?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I have no doubt of that at all. That, in connection with the custody and the preservation of Government property, we can readily take steps—

Mr. BOYCE (Interposing). Probably I have not conveyed to you what I intended to convey.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; but I say that as to Government property—

Mr. BOYCE (Interposing). What I meant to convey was this: In your proposal, or in your bill, you do not undertake to declare the law itself, which Congress has a right to do; but, instead, you undertake to delegate the powers of Congress to this department. Are you clear in your mind as to that?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The power to legislate.

Mr. BOYCE. To delegate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I say, to delegate the power to legislate.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes. In other words, I am trying to draw to your attention the question, not of our right to legislate, not of the right of Congress to legislate, but of the right of Congress, or the power of Congress, to delegate its right to the department in the manner which you have tried to do by this bill.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I want to say that in the act of 1890—and it has never been questioned, so far as I know, as to the rights that have been conferred—it provides in the concluding paragraph as follows:

"That the Secretary of War, whenever in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers anchorage and navigation will not be injured thereby, may permit the deposit of any material above mentioned in navigable waters"—

Mr. LINDBERGH. What are you reading from?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Section 13 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1890.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is the existing law?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is the existing law.

Mr. MORGAN. Will you read that again, please?

Mr. ROSENBLUM (reading):

"That the Secretary of War, whenever in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers anchorage and navigation will not be injured thereby, may permit the deposit of any material above mentioned in navigable waters, within limits to be defined and under conditions to be prescribed by him."

Mr. BOYCE. Before you proceed, let me call your attention to this: In the act of Congress approved March 3, 1890, Congress undertook to make certain things unlawful and then vested the War Department with certain discretion in relation to the law which Congress enacted. Now, you do not do that in your bill, as I understand?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. As I understand it, the bill does that very thing.

Mr. BOYCE. As I understand, you delegate the whole thing to the War Department?

Mr. NEWTON. As a matter of fact, as I understand your bill, you define the purpose to be accomplished and delegate to the War Department the power to make the regulations to carry out that purpose. Is that the effect of your bill?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is correct.

Mr. BOYCE. Well, I may be wrong.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, let us have that cleared up.

Mr. ROSENBLUM (reading):

"An act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.'"

Now, that is the title of the bill. It is to be a new section added to that act, which the title says is for the preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors. And predicated on that, you see, I figured that Congress has the right to do this and to delegate this power for the preservation of the public property; and that that gives us the unquestioned right to legislate in regard to this matter as against any question that there might be as to the powers of the States—that is, as to Government property. Now, there might be a question in a stream that did not have any Government property on it; but so far as rivers that have the dams of the Government on them I do not think there is any question about it at all.

Mr. NEWTON. Your theory, as I understand it, is that Congress has the right to legislate over navigable streams which are under the control of Congress?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; and that it may delegate the power to deal with conditions that prevail there when there is Government property there.

Mr. BOYCE. Well, it may be that, not having repealed or not proposing to repeal the act of March 3, 1890—it may be that your contention is right.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. No; it is not proposed to repeal that; this is to be added as section 13a of that act.

Mr. KINDRED. It is a fact that Congress has a right to legislate with regard to pollutions, or anything else, where it involves or interferes with navigation and commerce. Under those broad powers of Congress, and considering also another fact, based on judicial opinion, that the fish and the game in a State belong to the State, is it clear in your mind that that is commerce—that is, as to the fish—as to which Congress would have power to legislate, if the fish, for instance, belong to the State?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. There is no question in my mind that it is an interference with commerce, as is specifically set out in the bill; this acid is eating away the metal work of the dams.

Mr. KINDRED. Well, I was speaking of the killing of fish and to the great loss arising from that.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is one of the incidental losses, of course.

Mr. KINDRED. Well, it is a very big one, according to the testimony which has been presented.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Not so much in navigable streams.

Mr. KINDRED. Yes; there are many thousands of tons of fish destroyed.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; I would say millions of tons; but at the same time—

Mr. NEWTON (Interposing). But at the same time could Congress interfere to prevent the destruction of the fish that belong to the State?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. It does not interfere for that purpose, while that may be one of the resulting benefits. The real purpose is to protect public health and public property, as well as to prevent obstruction of navigation by the injury to the boilers, etc., of steamboats, and also protect the health of the men who operate the boats.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, this bill is calculated to preserve the fish; there is no question about that.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That is correct.

Mr. KINDRED. Well, I want to get your opinion on this; the constitutional question is involved here as to the right of the States in the fish, etc.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I can not see where that is really involved.

Mr. KINDRED. Well, the constitutional question is involved, is it not?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I think you are right in the proposition that the fish belong to the State. I can not concede the rest of it.

Mr. DEAL. In the case of streams in a State that are not navigable streams and hence are under the jurisdiction of the State, do you think that Congress has a right to legislate with respect to them?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That would be a question that I think could probably be answered on this theory: That the waters of that stream empty into the navigable streams and bring in this deleterious matter, which injures the Government property. On that theory I think the Federal Government might be able to regulate that.

Mr. DEAL. The question is, Does it injure the Government property?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I understand that, but it is said that those streams bring chemicals down into the navigable streams and cause damage to the Government dams in those streams, and therefore it might be held that we had that power.

Mr. NEWTON. Your theory is that if they put deleterious matter into a stream, knowing that it will injure the navigable streams, it could be dealt with by the Federal Government?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. An order might be issued to stop it, or suggest a remedy.

Mr. SWEET. What about the theory that running water purifies itself in a certain distance?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I covered that subject in my statement last year, and in a navigable stream—

Mr. SWEET (Interposing). Very well; but I suggested that in regard to the point made by my colleague.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. These dams and other works are formed in order to make the river navigable. Take, for instance, the Ohio River; the natural flow of that river has been retarded. And the stuff comes down in the water, and the river does not have the same opportunity to clear itself that it had prior to making these streams navigable.

Mr. SWEET. But the point that my colleague made was that when such substances are deposited in a stream which is not navigable and finds its way into the stream that is navigable, what would you say as to the theory that running water clears itself in a certain distance?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I imagine that the Chief of Engineers, who is present, would be familiar with that question, and he would issue no orders as to that particular stream in a case of that kind. You see, the mere dumping of harmful material into the river does not become an overt act under this bill, such as the dumping of oil waste would be under the bill as to oil suggested by Secretary Hoover; in that bill the act itself is the offense. In this bill that I have introduced the act is not the offense; the offense would be the failure to comply with the order of the War Department, in conjunction with the Chief of Engineers.

Now, that, in my opinion, has to be done in this matter on account of the delicate situation as to interfering with industry on the one hand and on the other hand protecting the people along the stream. So that the bill confers authority on somebody that is competent to look into it and to suggest the remedy.

Mr. NEWTON. As a matter of fact, what you are doing in your bill is giving the War Department power to make a regulation, and after the regulation is made it has the authority of law; and if a person violates that regulation after it is made, he is guilty of violating the law?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. In other words, it is addressed to the good judgment of the men who are in these positions of authority and trust, to be guided, like you or me or anybody else would be, by the conditions.

Mr. NEWTON. But, as a matter of fact, your bill confers on the Secretary of War authority to make regulations which will have the force of law?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes; unless they are harmful. General Beach will explain that.

Mr. FREEMAN. We will now hear General Beach.

STATEMENT OF MAJ. GEN. LANSING H. BEACH, CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

General BEACH. Mr. Chairmen and gentlemen, I would like to explain at the very beginning the question that has just been asked by Mr. NEWTON.

You spoke about a stream purifying itself within a certain distance, probably. That theory of a stream purifying itself arose before the industrial development of the country had reached the point where it now stands, and when the material deposited in the stream was domestic waste, so to speak. Now that is organic matter.

Now, organic matter thrown into a stream is dissolved, a good portion of it. It is thrown in contact with the oxygen in the water, and ordinary animal wastes and other organic matter coming from the households, or the factories, is oxidized and becomes purified within a certain distance, depending upon the amount of fresh water thrown in and the character of the material. It used to be said that any stream would purify itself within a distance of 150 miles.

That is entirely different, however, from the question of a mineral pollution of the water. You take acid, and you can not destroy that acid unless you bring it into direct contact with an alkali.

Now, a great many streams are what we term "hard," because they come from limestone sections and carry a certain amount of dissolved lime.

Now, those streams would purify themselves from that acid in a certain distance, depending upon the amount of lime and the amount of acid. But acid pollution is more difficult, as a rule, to get rid of than the organic-matter pollution.

Mr. NEWTON. As a matter of fact, the acid when once dumped into a stream will remain in it until it comes in contact with an alkali, will it not?

General BEACH. Absolutely.

Mr. SWEET. What about magnesia?

General BEACH. Magnesia is an alkali. If you are in a gypsum region you will find that the acid would be neutralized by the magnesia. But the acid remains acid until it comes into contact with a material which will neutralize it. Of course, all streams, as the water flows, have tributaries added to them. And if the tributaries are not polluted, they bring in a quantity of fresh water, which dilutes the pollution, at the same time that they might bring in alkalies which would neutralize the acid. So that, unless you get a continued supply of acid, the farther down the stream you go the less acid you would find in a given quantity of water.

Mr. NEWTON. You mean, the less percentage of acid there would be in a given quantity?

General BEACH. The less percentage of acid in a given quantity of water.

Mr. SWEET. Provided the evaporation of the stream is not equal to its influx?

General BEACH. I do not think you will find any streams in this country where the evaporation is in excess of the additional supply.

Mr. HULL. If a stream was 500 miles long and it was just the natural waters, without the qualities of neutralization, would the acid remain to the end of the stream?

General BEACH. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. In a more or less dilute form, however?

Mr. HULL. Am I to understand that it would be diluted?

General BEACH. If additional water has come in.

Mr. HULL. Of course, I am raising the question of whether, if the water should be the same at the end as at the beginning, the acid would be the same at the end as at the beginning?

General BEACH. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. That is, with no intermediate tributaries?

General BEACH. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Have you made an analysis of the principal navigable rivers?

General BEACH. Not personally. But I have had them made of nearly all the streams in the country.

Mr. MORGAN. What do they show?

General BEACH. They show vastly different results at different times, depending upon the stage of the river—I might say, the accidental circumstances of the river.

Mr. MORGAN. I was speaking of the average condition—as a general proposition?

General BEACH. I hesitate—I always do—to give averages; because averages are what is ordinarily understood as a mean point between extremes. Now, 51 is an average between 50 and 52; it is also an average between 1 and 101. So that when you speak of averages you ought to have the accompanying circumstances explained to understand what the average really represents.

Mr. MORGAN. What I am trying to get at is an indication of the pollution and its character.

General BEACH. Now, with regard to that, Mr. ROSENBLUM has explained to you a few minutes ago that on the upper Ohio you might have a really normal condition of stream until one of those manufacturing plants dumped its surplus of acid into the stream.

That is shown by a case that occurred, for instance, last spring. The plants had been shut down. The stream was well filled with fish. One of those plants cleaned out its vats and dumped the contents into the stream, with the result that a quantity of fish were killed; that polluted that stream for miles, and people from various towns around there complained to our office that the stench was so great, the dead fish were so numerous, that it was a public nuisance.

Now, I do not know how you would answer a question as to the average condition of that stream.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, to make it more general. Do you consider the principal source of pollution oil?

General BEACH. Let me explain about acids. Now, I can explain the average condition of the Youghiogheny River, which is a tributary of the Monongahela, near McKeesport, Pa., and state that the average condition of that stream is so acid that a vessel can not even charge its boilers once with the waters of that stream without doing damage. The average condition of the Monongahela below the Youghiogheny is such that our metal work in our dams is always in danger and we have to renew it at very frequent intervals.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Our waters normally, when there is no acid pollution, are base—they give a basic reaction, do they not?

General BEACH. The waters of our streams generally percolate rocky soils, lime, and magnesia; so that the natural state of the waters of our streams is alkali, and they do not become acid, except from the works of man.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And the degree of acidity depends upon the varying conditions to which you have alluded; in other words, at certain times of the year, if you put in a piece of litmus paper—I just use that for illustration—you would not get an acid reaction; but on the same stream later, you might get a discoloration?

General BEACH. Yes; decidedly an acid reaction.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It varies, and there really is no normal condition or average condition anywhere; it is a varying situation, is it not?

General BEACH. I would put it a little differently; I would say the acid condition is an abnormal condition.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; caused by the works of man?

General BEACH. Caused by the works of man; and the degree of abnormality which would vary from time to time.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. SWEET. General Beach, what would you term the water that is free from alkaline material but charged, by reason of its source and flow, with organic matter; what would that water be—soft water, free from lime?

General BEACH. It would be very soft water, and you find that in some localities, especially those localities where they have streams termed "black" rivers.

Mr. SWEET. Yes; that is what I mean.

General BEACH. Where they flow through forests or over pine needles, and they do take up a certain amount of tannin and other organic matter, the coloring matter ordinarily stays in those streams, although the organic matter is changed.

Mr. SWEET. Would that base condition necessarily be acid, if it is not alkaline?

General BEACH. I do not think it would be acid under those circumstances.

Mr. NEWTON. The streams of the country generally that are not corrupted were they originally alkaline?

General BEACH. More or less. I think you would be safe in saying that in ordinary cases the streams are alkaline, unless they have been changed by the work of man.

Mr. MORGAN. General Beach, have you made a study of the character and the extent of industrial pollution?

General BEACH. We have been studying that in a general way for some considerable time.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, in that connection, is it your judgment that the conditions are such that it would require a study of conditions in order to enact proper laws providing for the correction of the injurious conditions, and that it would be difficult now to enact a law covering industrial conditions without imposing hardship?

General BEACH. I do not see why legislation could not be enacted at the present time without further study; and it has been the result of our observations that legislation is badly needed at the present time.

Mr. NEWTON. You think you have gone far enough with your investigations to justify the War Department in recommending legislation from the facts that you have now?

General BEACH. Unquestionably.

Mr. LINEBERGER. General, do you approve of the Rosenbloom method of putting this legislation into force, to wit, by amending the present statute, section 13 of the rivers and harbors act of March 3, 1899? Do you think that is the proper way to meet this acid-pollution situation to which you refer and, as I assume, to which you are addressing your remarks in the testimony you are giving?

General BEACH. Well, I would like to say that it is not—I would not like to be put in the position of saying that I approve or disapprove of action to be taken by Congress.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Well, you think the step is along the right line?

General BEACH. Oh, I think that much good could be accomplished by the legislation which I understand Congressman ROSENBLUM to refer to this morning. Now, I would state that I understand that there are various bills before this committee under consideration and—

Mr. LINEBERGER (Interposing). Well, his bill is a little different from the rest of them. It seeks to meet the acid-pollution situation, as I say; he is not attempting to cover the oil-pollution situation or the sewage pollution; he is attempting to meet a situation of which he has complained and which you say is a very serious one. He is meeting a specific thing in a specific manner here, and it covers acid pollution.

Mr. NEWTON. In other words, Mr. LINEBERGER, your bill deals with the pollutions on the seashore, and Mr. ROSENBLUM's bill covers pollutions on the navigable streams?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; there is no conflict between the two bills.

General BEACH. The two subjects are entirely distinct and separate, and the measures which would have to be taken to prevent the pollution of our navigable waters by one cause are absolutely different from those which would have to be adopted to prevent the pollution of navigable waters by the other. And I do not think you will find that the different kinds of pollution are ordinarily presented in the same locality.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And the investigations and remedies required are different, are they not?

General BEACH. Certainly.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, are the pollutions generally acid?

General BEACH. The pollutions that create trouble in many of our navigable rivers are acid.

Mr. NEWTON. Has your department studied the practicability of methods to prevent this pollution, and do you know whether or not such methods are within the bounds of reasonable cost—within the reach of the institutions that pollute the rivers?

General BEACH. We have never made very extensive investigations, because we have never been vested with funds which could be applied for that purpose. We have made a number of investigations of the character and extent which we could incidentally, with the funds at our disposal.

Mr. NEWTON. In your judgment, are such remedial works within the bounds of reason as to cost to the institution or plant?

General BEACH. I think they are. I think in most cases that we could obtain a very material relief and bring the acidity of the stream down to an innocuous degree without imposing any very serious hardship upon the manufacturing plants.

Although, in that connection, I would like to give a little illustration: As far as I know, when I was Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, I was the first one to initiate the plan of marking the exits of theaters with a red light, which was to be kept burning all the time that the auditorium was open for an audience.

I had a tremendous fight in regard to the enforcement of that regulation here in Washington. I was visited by influential men, both in Congress and out of Congress, because my order involved an expenditure of $250 upon the theater.

Now, I give that illustration, because there was a case where my action was protested and fought, because it was claimed that I was unreasonably burdensome upon that theater in compelling it to go to an expense of $250.

So that it is a little difficult to answer your question, because somebody may claim that our regulation is burdensome if it involves any expense to them at all.

Mr. NEWTON. I know; but do you think the expense would be so enormous as to destroy the industries?

General BEACH. I do not; and in regard to that I would say that if the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers were vested with the authority which I understand Mr. ROSENBLUM's bill contemplates the action of the department would be conservative and progressive. We would not start with a plan; we would go at the matter gradually; and one plant might require a different treatment than another, according to the composition of the acid wastes discharged. But I believe that as far as my experience, observation, and conversation with people interested in this subject goes the industrial plants would be the gainers in the end.

Mr. HULL. General Beach, may I ask you a question on the Illinois River, from Chicago to Lockport, with which you are somewhat familiar? Suppose this law was passed, what would be the effect of it on big plants like those of the Argo Sugar Works, at Argo, and the stockyards? What would be the expense in those cases? Would it be very large, or what would it be?

General BEACH. That is difficult to answer. But my opinion would be that they would save more than the cost, decidedly, because in those materials which are organic, they could use them for fertilizers; they could be used to advantage and to bring a return. I was talking on that subject just the other day with people in Chicago, and they said that the people at the stockyards and the people at the Argo plant were both convinced that they could save that material that they were now wasting and save it at a profit.

Mr. HULL. Is there any disposition on the part of those plants to do something of the kind, or do you know?

General BEACH. I understood that the Argo plant were considering it and were having their chemist work on that matter. The question with regard to the stockyards was not answered definitely.

Mr. HULL. One more question on that subject: In your opinion, the waters down as far as Lockport—I will just leave it there—are polluted to a degree that would impair the health of the people along the river to that point by this pollution; is that true or not?

General BEACH. I would not like to say that they are polluted to an extent that would hurt the people living on the banks, unless you tell me how they are going to use the water. As long as that material stays in the water and keeps on going I do not think that it is actually injurious to a man living on the bank.

Mr. HILL. I made a trip down the river and it would seem to me, from general observation, that in the summer time it might be injurious to the health of the people.

(Thereupon, at 12:05 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 12:30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. FREEMAN. Go ahead, General Beach.

General BEACH. As I said awhile ago, I understand that there are various bills before the committee for consideration. And that, therefore, I would rather speak in general terms on the subject and not to be considered as speaking in regard to any particular bill, as I had read none of them, and I would say that with regard to the acid pollutions the situation has become quite acute, especially on the upper Ohio River. The acidity is interfering with navigation, that the water is so acid that it is destroying the bottoms of boats, and it is attacking the metal parts of the Government locks and dams.

Mr. FREEMAN. There are parts of those locks and dams that must be metal, are there not?

General BEACH. We can not get along with any other material. If we did not use steel, we would have to go to bronze or some metal less corrosive, but that would cost more than the steel. As an illustration of the rapidity with which that will act, I would say at Dam No. 8 on the Monongahela River a draw weight was placed in 1908, for the purpose of raising the water at the low-water station, and it was so corroded and eaten by the acid waters when I went out there in 1913 as division engineer that the dam could not be operated, and it has not been operated since. It has been propped up and it stayed in that condition a few years until the metal was so corroded that it could not be used in that condition and it was taken out and refinished with concrete. For seven years—I do not know how much less—the acids of the Monongahela had placed that dam out of commission and destroyed, or, as you might say, wasted all the money that the Government had expended in its installation.

We find that it is attacking the metal parts of our movable dams in the Ohio and we have had to replace several of the horses and props of dams in various localities on that account; and the acidity is increasing. I believe from the study I have made of the subject, or studies that have been made by others of the Engineer Department, that the work can be very largely controlled. I mean the acidity can be very largely controlled.

Mr. NEWTON. Suppose you built a vat for the fluid to go in—the surplus fluid—about how long would it take the contents to be treated?

General BEACH. Well, it would not take a very large vat, because the acid is in the vats to start with.

Mr. NEWTON. Could it be treated in the vats before the alkali is turned loose?

General BEACH. In some cases, yes. In others I understand that the acidity is a little different to counteract. But now I may say that with regard to the acid waste from many plants, because I think they can be very largely controlled. From the abandoned coal mines the acid wastes are more difficult to control.

I understand that is one of the most difficult acids to neutralize that you can encounter, for the reason that there is quite a little iron in it, and if you attempt to neutralize them with ordinary iron, it makes an insoluble compound over the surface of the mine and then your acidity is not affected by the water flowing over it. You have to have a lime solution to run over it.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Is ferric acid a sort of neutralizing agency? Does it precipitate?

General BEACH. Yes; it precipitates on the outside and coats and protects from the acid. The abandoned mines, especially among the Monongahela region, where in the hillsides, and they drift in and as far as possible—they ran their drift in such a way that the water would flow out.

Mr. NEWTON. You could not deal with the owners there. It would be a problem for the Government itself, would it not?

General BEACH. I do not see why you could not in a good many cases deal with the owners.

Mr. NEWTON. Would not the mines be blocked up in that way?

General BEACH. Oh, all you would have to do would be to block the mine.

Mr. MANSFIELD. What, in your judgment, is the principal source of the acid pollution in the Ohio? Is it from the mines or industrial plants?

General BEACH. On the Allegheny and Monongahela, and especially the Youghiogheny River, the source of acidity is the coal mines. On the Ohio, after you get below Pittsburgh, the accretion is entirely from the industrial plants.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If this bill should be enacted about how long, with the information you have upon the subject and with the facilities you have for putting it into operation, in your estimate, would it be before you could promulgate the necessary rules and regulations and put the law into operation?

General BEACH. We could promulgate the rules and regulations immediately, but a certain amount of time or a reasonable amount of time should be allowed to the parties concerned to meet the conditions. You will find, or at least it has been my experience in similar cases at other places, that some property owners will be very helpful. They will do what they can at once, while some will have to be prodded up and pushed into it, and a few probably will not do anything until they are forced to do it.

When I was at New Orleans we had trouble in Bayou Teche. There was very little current in that stream, and the sugar-mill owners were turning the refuse of the sugar vats into the stream, and it changed its character and became acid in a very short while. I went to them and explained the whole situation, and I do not think that we had a single mill owner that refused to either treat refuse so that it would not become acid, or turn it back into the swamp so that it would not come into the water. Everybody on that stream cooperated. We went to them in a spirit of showing what the trouble was and asking them if they would not assist.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then it is your opinion that you could put the law reasonably into operation almost immediately; that is, to a certain extent?

General BEACH. We could start the law.

Mr. LINDBERGER. General, under section 16 of the present law you have certain penalties defined there—under the act of March 30, 1899. Have you encountered any particular difficulty in enforcing the penalties defined under that law?

General BEACH. That is, with regard to what portion of it?

Mr. LINDBERGER. Well, in regard to the point that anyone violating the law shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,500 nor less than $500. I believe that same provision is in the present bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. You mean whether it is too drastic?

Mr. LINDBERGER. Yes; and whether or not there are any particular delays. You know in these last few years the courts have been crowded on account of trying to enforce a lot of legislation, and there has been delay, as is likely to be the case where a law is attempted to be enforced.

General BEACH. I do not recall any particular case of delay at the present time that is of any importance. There is one case in New York where parties built a wharf out beyond the harbor line without authority, and they are fighting the removal or cutting back the projecting portions, and we have had considerable difficulty in getting the Department of Justice to push that case, especially as some people seem to think they had political influence. But, as a rule, I attribute that to the fact that we do not take parties into court unless they are obdurate and we have a very definite court case against them.

Mr. DEAL. General, suppose you had promulgated a rule requiring all plants—if you promulgate a rule you must make it apply to all alike. I suppose you do that?

General BEACH. We have no favorites.

Mr. DEAL. After it is promulgated you find some plants are not inclined to comply with it. What do you do with them? Do you take them into court?

General BEACH. We take them into court after a reasonable time.

Mr. DEAL. Suppose that you find in some instances they are not able to do it—not able to put in these receptacles or vats, or whatever it is—what action do you take?

General BEACH. I can not appreciate any such conditions. I can not understand how any concern which is large enough to make enough acid to be of importance could not find a means to provide the urn.

Mr. DEAL. That is just the fault that I have and the objection that I entertain to delegating to any department of the Government the right to make rules and regulations. You can not appreciate it, and perhaps some others might not appreciate it, but there are numbers of business men who would appreciate it, and with whom it would be a very serious matter. Now, it may be that they are not producing it in such large quantities, but the question is, What is a large quantity? Where is the line going to be drawn as to what is a large quantity or a small quantity? I happen to know of a good many cases where the business men do not own the business they are operating. In other words, they are operating plants on borrowed capital, and if those men had plenty of money they would not go into this anyway.

Those businesses that have grown rich are the ones which have started with small beginnings and have accumulated as they grew. They have money enough to put it into operation immediately. But the person who is operating on borrowed capital and to whom you come along and put in a rule that requires him to put in a vat which may require $40,000 or $50,000, and he has not the money, will go down to the bank and try to get the money, and they will not let him have it. What are you going to do?

General BEACH. I can not imagine any producer coming to a situation like you mention.

Mr. DEAL. Well, I do not know. It applies to all plants, you say. I asked the question if it would apply to all plants and you said yes. I believe Mr. LINEBERGER asked the question as to how much space would be required to take care of this acid waste, and you thought a small space would be sufficient. I would like to call your attention to that pollution from the Du Ponts down at Hopewell, Va., where they turned loose such an enormous amount of acid waste that they polluted a creek tributary to the James River, and it killed all fish life, destroyed all vegetable life, and owners of property have brought suit, claiming it was preventing navigation. I suppose that there were 10 or 15 acres in there which was absolutely filled up with the stuff. It did not fill the stream with solid matter, but the acid that would destroy everything stayed there for 10 or 15 days, maybe more. Take a case like that, where it is a small plant, and if you put the rule on it and clamp it down, it would ruin the owner. I can conceive of conditions where you might not do it.

General BEACH. Well, in the first place, you do not consider the Du Ponts operating on borrowed capital?

Mr. DEAL. No; that is a case of a very large investment.

General BEACH. It is a very large plant, is it not?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

General BEACH. They polluted the stream with a tremendous amount of acid, which amounts could not be produced by a small concern. We would not take the position that a man had no right to come out and throw a quart of acid into the stream, and my interpretation, or at least my policy, in acting on the matter if it were intrusted to me, would be to determine whether the amount discharged was sufficient to affect the acidity of the stream. If it did not affect it, as shown by tests taken at short distances from the outlet below the plant, I do not believe we would be justified in saying that the law applied to that situation.

Mr. DEAL. You say tests were made down there?

General BEACH. I do not know anything about the case you mentioned.

Mr. DEAL. But you do have means of making a test?

General BEACH. Yes. Certainly. We could take samples of the water.

Mr. NEWTON. As a matter of fact, if these manufacturing plants continued to develop, and there is no restraint put on them, it is merely a question of time when plant life, fish life, and community and city water supplies will be interfered with and they will have to take some action.

General BEACH. It is not a case of those that will be interfered with at this time. It is a question of a very short time before they will be forced to take action.

Mr. DEAL. Does the compulsion to act come by reason of the people who use the fish, or from the people who have boats that are affected?

General BEACH. I would say from the general clamor from all causes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Are you familiar with the factory areas of the Rhine, in Germany, and its tributaries where it is very acute, like it is becoming acute in this section? Have you visited that section over there? I have been there and I thought maybe you knew more about it than I did.

General BEACH. I have visited that section there, and while I did not make any investigation—I was not allowed to—I did make a good many inquiries and I found later on that the Germans do not waste anything. They conserve every particle of the material and the acid is reclaimed and taken back and treated and used over again, but they do not pollute the streams.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Do they have any laws regulating pollution? They must have, because Germany, of all European countries, is supposed to have a system of laws covering everything.

General BEACH. They have a very good system of laws.

Mr. LINEBERGER. You do not know what they are?

General BEACH. No, sir.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. This bill that has been introduced here is the same as was introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress. Would that meet with your approval or with the approval of your department?

General BEACH. Yes.

Mr. ROSENBLUM. That bill was drawn after conference with your department.

General BEACH. I would like to state with regard to the question of regulations that the War Department is now—the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers—are already authorized to promulgate regulations on various subjects and I do not think that you will find that that authority which has been given us has been abused in any respect.

Mr. DEAL. It is not a question, General, of having been abused. It is a question of whether Congress has a right to grant you that power to make laws. That is what it does.

Mr. LINEBERGER. They have granted that power in other cases.

Mr. DEAL. I know they have, but has it not been declared unconstitutional?

Mr. NEWTON. I know of cases where there were Federal prosecutions. I prosecuted men for violation of regulations made by authority of Congress, and the courts upheld the right to prosecute for violating the regulations—for instance, the Land Department. The Land Department has been given the right to make regulations, and I think the court has held that if they had the authority under the law to regulate on a matter that they (Congress) had power to authorize the administrative departments to promulgate rules and regulations putting the law into effect.

Mr. DEAL. That is true in some cases, as where Congress has given power to the Internal Revenue Department to make rules and regulations; and the matter of taxation is the most sacred right of human beings. But where is the line to be drawn? The Constitution gives Congress the power to make laws, but where are you going to draw the line of taking away from Congress the right to make the law and giving somebody else that right?

Mr. McDUFFIE. General, I want to get your opinion, if you do not mind giving it, as to where this authority should be lodged—whether in the War Department or in the Department of Commerce? Under the Lineberger bill, as you know probably, the Secretary of Commerce enforces such provisions as the committee may recommend and as the Congress may pass with reference to pollution by oil. That, of course, was largely on the seashore and around the harbors.

Now comes the question of inland pollution by plants along navigable streams. It occurs to me the power to enforce that should be lodged in the War Department under the Chief of Engineers of the Army, because you necessarily have to supervise the navigable waterways of the country, and it also occurs to me that being on the water with your various district engineers and organizations, your department should have supervision over any department seeking to do away with pollution of navigable streams or inland waters. I was wondering if you would give us your opinion as to both methods of pollution—both acid and oil on the sea and in the inland waters, and where the authority should be and what would be the most effective departments to promulgate these regulations.

General BEACH. It seems to me it should be lodged in the War Department, and it can be lodged there much more economically than in any other department, for the reason we already have an organization which covers the entire country and every river is under constant supervision of our department. We are constantly supervising the harbors to see that no physical obstructions to navigation occur—no wreck, no sunken vessel, no deposit of materials that will interfere with navigation or anything else of that kind occurs.

Now, it would not add one cent, you might say, to the cost of supervising the harbors with regard to the deposition of oil or with regard to the introduction of acid into our streams, but the personnel that we already have can attend to that in addition to their other duties, so that I do not understand that any other department could take the matter up to the same extent that we could without having to organize a board especially for the purpose, which would involve considerably more expense, and those people would have work which would take only a small portion of their time, while we could do it as just an additional incident to what we are already doing.

Mr. LINEBERGER. You are speaking now with reference to the policy of pollution?

General BEACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. I was thinking about the fact that the committee might consider a law governing all sorts of pollution and its general enforcement.

Mr. NEWTON. What instrumentality has been created to carry out the enforcement of the law if it is placed in the hands of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. NEWTON. He can not be all over the country.

Mr. McDUFFIE. He may make rules and regulations.

Mr. NEWTON. He must have representatives to do it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The collector of customs, I understand, is authorized under one of these provisions to collect all penalties.

Mr. NEWTON. I know, but who goes out to inspect and detect violations?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not know that that is set out clearly in the Lineberger bill.

Mr. FREEMAN. There has been an amendment offered to the Lineberger bill. It may not be before the committee now, but it provides that the Coast Guard Service will assist the Commerce Department.

Mr. NEWTON. The Coast Guard Service is under the Treasury Department, is it not?

Mr. FREEMAN. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. General, do you know whether there is any diversity of opinion between yourself and the Secretary of War in regard to the enforcement of this law as to pollution of waters on navigable streams and harbors?

General BEACH. No; I have not heard him express his view.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I understand that he has certain views on it, and he has promised the committee to write a letter, which has not arrived.

General BEACH. Please know that we have constant supervision over every harbor in the country. We are constantly surveying and inspecting and looking after the general conditions of every harbor.

You can not find one that we are not already thoroughly and deeply interested in, and we have the whole organization that keeps us posted in regard to all the conditions at each one of the harbors, and I would say that the conditions referred to as oil pollution and acid pollution can be very easily determined. It would not require any increase of personnel, nor would it require any additional boats, in all probability, in addition to what we now have.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Do you think it would be better for Congress to place this authority directly in your command rather than to place it in the authority of the Secretary of Commerce, as provided in my bill—section 8, lines 14 and 15, under the head "Any other department may cooperate with the Secretary of Commerce in enforcing this act and rules and regulations prescribed thereunder"? The point that you make, as I understand it, is that it ought to be directly placed in the hands of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers?

General BEACH. The division that has control of all those regulations now is now in the hands of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. NEWTON. To what degree is your work already affected by the use of oil in the rivers and harbors? You have testified already it was affected by the acid.

General BEACH. The question of oil pollution varies very greatly at different harbors. It is one of the most important at the New York Harbor, where we are already vested by law with the right to make certain regulations concerning it as regards its effect upon navigation. You know the work in New York is so important that Congress created the office of supervisor of the port, who is by law a naval officer under the orders of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. NEWTON. Is it not a fact that your department is directly affected by the deposits of oil that are accumulating in the harbor?

General BEACH. I do not quite understand.

Mr. NEWTON. Do you have to build your harbors differently than you did without oil—with reference to fire, etc.?

General BEACH. No.

Mr. NEWTON. The harbors are all built of concrete, I suppose, now, are they not?

General BEACH. The harbor work consists of dredging and construction of dikes, and the dredging, of course, would not be affected primarily by the oil, nor is the construction of concrete or the deposition of large stones.

Mr. MANFIELD. Probably you have in mind docks instead of dikes.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; docks are built in large cities.

Mr. MANFIELD. If you had in mind dikes there would not be very much damage to those.

General BEACH. Some of the most disastrous fires that have occurred in our harbors have been the fires in oil on the water. That fire which destroyed a million or a million and a half dollars' worth of property at New Orleans awhile ago was directly due to oil on the water. It was started by an electric power wire breaking and falling into the water, and just the electric current that escaped as that wire fell through the oil film caused the oil to flame up and start that fire. One fire that cost two lives and I think nearly $2,000,000—the New Jersey fire—was caused from a red hot bolt being dropped into the water and setting the oil on fire as it went down.

Mr. LINDBERGER. The steamboat inspection laws and those laws affecting navigation are enforced by the Department of Commerce, are they not?

General BEACH. Yes, sir; those are the laws affecting personnel.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Up until now only those things that affect steamboats, construction, and things of that kind are carried before the War Department?

General BEACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Nothing that goes beyond construction goes before the War Department?

General BEACH. No, sir.

Mr. LINDBERGER. And as to the dividing line whether this thing is to be placed over on the other side as obstruction to navigation, or whether it is within the duties of the Department of Commerce in carrying out our navigation laws—in other words, whether it is primarily a navigation proposition or primarily a construction proposition—is a subject of serious debate.

General BEACH. It seems to me it is a matter of whether it affects the personnel of the vessels and relative movements among the vessels or the physical condition of the harbor and the control of the vessels in such way that they will not interfere with navigation. We already have the matter of determination and promulgation of anchorage areas. We have now all matters affecting the physical condition of the harbor excepting the one of oil pollution, and it is believed that the act of Congress of 1899 intended to place this feature under the charge of the War Department.

Mr. NEWTON. In other words, the condition of the river or condition of the harbor is subject to reparation by your department?

General BEACH. Yes, sir. This is a new matter that has arisen within the last few years, and it was not in consideration by the founders of the Government. In fact, it is about like the airplane travel and several other new inventions that are arising in this day of rapid development.

Mr. DEAL. Are there many dams on the upper Ohio River harmed by this acid?

General BEACH. Yes, sir. We find that the Ohio and Monongahela have been acted on pretty badly. In a number of cases we have had to do replacing. We recently had to replace quite a number of places just below Wheeling on account of damage by acid.

Mr. NEWTON. How far down the river have you noticed any bad effects? You have dams way down below Cincinnati, have you not?

General BEACH. I could not give any definite answer to that point, because the dams are ordinarily under the water and we can not tell the exact condition without making a special examination. But so far as we can tell they are being corroded, so we can not tell exactly their condition.

Mr. DEAL. Well, metal will corrode under water anyway, but its corrosion may be accelerated by acid?

General BEACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANFIELD. Does that acid affect concrete works?

General BEACH. I do not think we have any damage to concrete. We have had some cases where we had to replace concrete, but that I attributed more to careless manipulation when it was placed rather than to any acidity. Freezing and drying affect it, too.

Mr. NEWTON. As a matter of fact, does not the chemical penetrate the concrete and affect the reinforced material eventually?

General BEACH. No; we do not use reinforced concrete in the river. We use massive concrete. I am not a believer in reinforced concrete, and none has been placed under my direction, because we are not certain in a few years what the condition of reinforcement is, so I prefer to use the massive concrete where it is used.

THE GERMAN RELIEF BILL.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the German relief bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the German relief bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution reported from the Rules Committee for immediate consideration, limiting the debate to 20 minutes on a side and giving no opportunity to make amendments. The resolution authorizes a gift to Germany of $10,000,000 for German relief.

The evidence of distress or starvation in Germany is very indefinite. Some witnesses testified before the committee that they had recently traveled in Germany and found there much distress and suffering, such as would naturally come as a sequence of the Great War. Others had been recent travelers in Germany and testified that they found very little suffering and distress in Germany on account of food; that Germany was recovering from the effects of the war; that there was plenty of employment; that her industries were being restored; and they saw no evidence of starvation.

However this may be, the first question that comes before Congress, and ought to be the first one settled here, is whether or not Congress has the right under the Constitution to take the money of the taxpayers of the Nation and give it away in any amount it pleases to any and all foreign nations? Because if we have the right to make a present to Germany of $10,000,000, we have the right to give equal sums or even more to a dozen or more nations in the Far East, where suffering is more intense and where the needs are greater than that of Germany to-day. And so we, as representatives of the people, turn at once to the Constitution, which defines the duties and limitations of Congress. The only authority for the Congress to act in the matter of relief and charities is found in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, which reads:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

The only claim to give Germany this money is made under that part of the section I have quoted, which says Congress shall have the power to provide for the general welfare of the United States. Under the Constitution other nations can not have the benefits of our congressional charities.

We have in the past made many gifts to alleviate distress and suffering in the States which have been made unfortunate by droughts, ravages of insects with consequent destruction of crops, floods, and other disasters, and this comes under the clause providing for the general welfare of the United States, and this is the extent of our power and authority.

Every disinterested lawyer admits this. It is not claimed in this matter that we have any constitutional authority for this act, but the claim is made by the advocates of this resolution that we have in the past made here and there some gift or contribution from our Treasury to foreign nations, and that because we have violated the Constitution in the past in these particulars we should again violate it when we now find a case of distress among other nations.

This should be a solemn warning to us in this case. Violations of the Constitution have to-day become precedents for greater violations. Our act to-day in making this gift will be used to-morrow to make greater gifts to other nations from our Treasury, until we stand before the world a pauper to be scorned at.

So far has this disregard of the supreme law of the land proceeded that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], in the course of this debate in his zeal to dispense national charity, exclaimed:

Constitution or no Constitution, I am for giving this money to Germany.

Another gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] in his argument exclaimed:

If we violate the provisions of the Constitution in passing this resolution, we will simply do exactly what has been done by many Congresses that have sat in this Hall before us.

And then he says that, in spite of this violation, he is for giving this ten millions for the hungry little children of Germany.

To show that the end justifies the means, and to attempt to satisfy the conscience of the House in violating the Constitution, many Members argue that while the adults of Germany do not lack food, the little children are suffering for milk. Babies and milk are used for an excuse for violating the law of the land and to spend the money of the people without warrant.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] justifies his vote for this measure by saying that—not one-fifteenth part of milk enough to feed babies can be found in the city of Berlin.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] puts aside the Constitution and says:

This proposed measure is the only way that relief can get where we want it to go—to the babies, the innocent, suffering little ones.

And then the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] talks only of the babies and says:

It costs but 50 cents per month for a starving little baby to give it more milk than it gets to-day, and the testimony shows that in the hospitals they are receiving only a teaspoonful of milk.

This appeal to the sympathies of Members of Congress was not sufficient to pass this resolution, and so they must appeal on other grounds than babies and milk, for it must seem absurd to the majority of the people of this country that while the men and women of Germany have food the children can not get milk. I do not believe that the men and women of Germany are so hard-hearted and inhuman as to obtain food for themselves and neglect their own babies when all they need is milk. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] puts the argument for this charity upon another ground, to wit: That we are responsible for Germany's condition, and therefore we are under obligations to take care of her in her poverty. He says:

Uncle Sam is not without responsibility for conditions in Germany. Was it not he who came to the rescue of France and England, fighting with their backs against the wall, and who finally overthrew the German forces? Was it not he whose word was so potent in bringing about the ruthless armistice and whose pen dictated the harsh treaty of Versailles? Does not Uncle Sam now silently sanction the seizure of the Ruhr by France, well knowing that it is France's purpose to destroy the German people? He certainly has made but a very feeble protest.

Let him beware of self-righteousness and hypocrisy.

Not many proponents of this measure agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON], so they resort to another argument. They say we do not intend to send over any canned milk to Germany. It is wheat we are going to send to them, and they make an amendment to this resolution to send wheat and to buy wheat from the wheat farmers of the West, so as to relieve their suffering and distress which is due to the low price of wheat. They say under this resolution as amended that they can spend $10,000,000 buying wheat at a good price and profit to the farmers of the West and send the same to Germany and so help the farmers.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] well showed the sympathy argument of the poor babies' want of milk when he said this:

Is it not for the general welfare of this country, for furnishing a market for our abounding surplus, that a nation with which we have such social and economic relations should not fall into decay.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] follows him, and his thought is of wheat and not of milk. He says:

There is a surplus of wheat in this country. Somebody must ship that wheat away. The United States Government is going to do that if this resolution is passed.

And then the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] says:

We will at the same time be helping the farmers of our country by relieving them from their present financial straits through the purchase of these food products.

And then the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] says:

To adopt this resolution means to relieve, in a certain measure, our distressed farmers of the Northwest, the farmers who grow wheat and grain, who will be relieved and benefited to the extent of which this appropriation will go. Therefore I urge that we may, without quibbling over constitutional questions and without hair-splitting over the real desires of the taxpayers of this country, pass this measure.

In time of war, when the life of the country is threatened by foreign foes, we can take from our Treasury, as we did in 1917, billions of dollars and loan them to our allies under the war powers of the Constitution, but not under present conditions, in times of peace, nowhere can we find any warrant in the Constitution for the passage of such a resolution as this or the making of a gift to other nations by the votes of those who disregard the supreme law of the land and their duties in Congress. They can thereby take every dollar from our Treasury for charity, to which they contribute nothing but an increase of taxes upon the whole people. To-day we not only embark the ship of state upon an uncertain sea, but to-morrow, without the Constitution as a lighthouse, we are certain to drift upon the rocks that have wrecked the ancient republics.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the amendment to the deficiency bill just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in this deficiency appropriation bill there is included a little item that may have a great meaning in American agriculture. It is the appropriation of $10,045 for the payment of nine delegates to the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, to be held in Rome, Italy, in May, and of $5,000 additional to pay the quotas for the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands in the institute.

Thus equipped the United States will take its full and proper place in the general assembly and in the institute itself. We will be able to cast 21 votes in the determination of the policies to be pursued by this organization. We will be on a par with Great Britain and France, which cast 20 and 19 votes, respectively.

We have laid too little stress on this institution and we have availed ourselves too little of its opportunities. The International Institute of Agriculture is an American idea, evolved by a distinguished citizen of California, David Lubin, who was a farmer and a merchant. Like many others with new ideas, he had to labor long to find acceptance for them. The then King of Italy was among the first to interest himself in the undertaking. He provided a home for it when it was finally established by an international treaty in 1905; but it was not until 1909 that it was put into working order. The United States now has a permanent representative in Rome. The present representative is Mr. Asher Hobson, who is accredited to the State Department.

It is fortunate, indeed, that at a time when we need international cooperation in agriculture we find this world-wide organization ready to serve us. It is not hard to see that through it we may solve some of our pressing problems.

It is not necessary to call attention to the fact that agricultural production has been carried on somewhat blindly. We have taken too little cognizance of the laws of supply and demand. We have produced without profit because we have had no coordination or cooperation among producers. We have piled up surplus supplies and then wondered why prices have fallen. To solve the problems we have invoked the powers of legislation, only to find that laws made by Congress can not be permanently substituted for what we are still pleased to call the higher laws of supply and demand.

Take wheat as an illustration. We laid great stress on its culture during the war, when we feared famine. We converted grasslands into wheat fields the world over. We have continued in these processes. Last year we had not only the largest wheat acreage in the history of the world, but nature favored the whole world with good crops. The result is there is more wheat than the world can absorb under present buying powers. In America we have been seeking to solve the resulting problems. But our local and temporary laws may in the end do more harm than good.

I see more hope of solving these problems through this International Institute of Agriculture. Through the dissemination of information as to supplies and markets and plantings we may eventually, if not immediately, regulate production with respect to profits. We shall not make much headway in cooperation unless we extend such cooperation to production, and such cooperation in production must be world-wide in its scope. It is not enough for the farmers in the Dakotas and Kansas to cooperate in selling, but the farmers of the United States must cooperate with the farmers in Canada and in the Argentine in production.

I know it is going to be hard to regulate agricultural production the world over. But to the extent that we approach such regulation, to that extent will the agricultural world prosper. There can be no profits in selling in glutted markets.

This international institute collects and disseminates information that will enable us to have at least some intelligent idea of supplies and demands. I believe that such information will gradually and eventually influence the agricultural world in its plantings and production.

We are living to-day in a highly organized world. Everything in it except agriculture is well organized. Labor has its unions, which have become international not only in their sympathies but in their powers. Manufacturers have their combinations and agreements. So have financiers. In the face of such an organized world agriculture must find some way and some means toward coordination and cooperation, and these must necessarily be international.

The International Institute of Agriculture is the proper organization to promote these ends. It is an organization pregnant with possibilities.

It is already a well-organized institute. It embraces 62 nations, and in these nations we have 97 per cent of the world's agricultural production, animal and vegetable.

What does it do? It is, broadly speaking, undertaking to do everything that can be done to place agriculture on an intelligent basis. It is seeking to apply scientific methods, not only to production but to marketing of products.

It collects and distributes information as to acreage and as to the weather and its effect upon all growing crops and harvests. It prepares and distributes statistics as to the wages of farm labor, costs of production, and costs of marketing. It discovers and develops markets. It places the United States Department of Agriculture in telegraphic communication with 26 of the leading agricultural countries, and, through the wonderful radio, all essential information may be broadcasted to the farmers of the Nation.

The work of the institute is defined in article 9 of the treaty of 1905, on which this organization was founded. Here are some of the specific purposes:

- a. Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical and economic information concerning farming, plant and animal products, the trade in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing on the various markets.
- b. Communicate to parties interested also as promptly as possible the above information.
- c. Indicate the wages paid for farm work.
- d. Make known new diseases of plants which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective.
- e. Study questions concerning agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit in all their aspects; collect and publish information useful in the various countries for the organization of works connected therewith.
- f. Submit to the approval of governments, there is need, measures for the protection of the common interests of farmers and for the improvement of their conditions.

The institute is supported by small contributions from the member governments, to which the King of Italy adds annually 300,000 lire as an expression of his interest and of his appreciation of the fact that it is situated in Rome. There is a permanent committee, on which the United States is represented by one member.

The management is intrusted to a general assembly, which meets every other year. It is in this assembly that the policies are determined. This assembly considers and disposes of the various proposals made by the member governments; it votes the credits and audits the accounts, and in all ways supervises the work of the institute.

In the general assembly which is to meet in May of this year the United States will be represented by nine delegates, representing what may be called a cross section of agricultural America. All sections and all interests will be represented by men fitted for such work. These delegates will cast 21 votes, to which the United States will be entitled by the admission of the four island possessions, for which provision is made in this appropriation.

We should not begrudge the small expenditures which we are called upon to make for such a great and useful purpose. Of all the moneys we are spending in governmental processes, I believe this is bound to yield the greatest results. The benefits are out of all proportion to the costs.

The International Institute of Agriculture at Rome is in the truest and broadest and best sense an international agricultural forum and clearing house.

It may well be a matter of pride for us that this institution had its origin in the mind of an American, an American farmer and merchant. The vision of it belonged to him. The benefits are beginning to accrue to us. The work is still in its beginnings. Its possibilities are still beyond comprehension. I believe it is destined to become one of the greatest of all the agencies working for the betterment of agricultural conditions and for the greater prosperity of the farmers of America.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7877, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose a point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] was pending. The Chair is ready to rule. Up to this time the Chair has not been furnished with the references to the law authorizing at least two or three of the provisions in the paragraph, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order as to the paragraph.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 77, after line 23, add the following paragraph:

NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE.

QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES AND SERVICES FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the transportation of civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, and their participation in national matches, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $85,900: Provided, That out of this appropriation there may be expended not to exceed $80,000 for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, may I be indulged until I can read the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered is the paragraph to which the point of order was previously made. I have eliminated from the amendment those matters which were covered by the Chair's recent ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has put in language there that has been carried in the bill heretofore in respect to able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, and so forth, but when it comes to these trainees in rifle practice they do not limit them to able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, but they take in men who are 50 or 55 or as old as 60 years.

Mr. ANTHONY. That has been done to some extent.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been done, and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, that is a matter of administration.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the administration is wrong, and we can not rely upon them.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have dropped out of the paragraph under consideration all authority for the employment of instructors, for clerical services, for badges and other insignia, and the $4,000 for the international matches.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the national defense act to authorize the naming, in an appropriation bill of any particular organization to promulgate rules. If the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice can be named in an appropriation bill without authorization in a legislative act, then it may be changed from this to any other organization, regardless of what it might be.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice is the controlling authority mentioned in the basic act which has been set up by the Secretary of War for the purpose of administering this function.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is not correct, but if it were the gentleman loses sight of the fact that the bill now before the committee does not become law until the 1st of next July, and the Lord only knows what organization, if any, may have charge of it during the next year, without admitting that this organization has charge of it this year, and that proposition I deny.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman think that under the authority, the Secretary of War could set up some new body, one each year, if he chose to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not concede that he has that authority. Under the law I do not think that he has the right to do that at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the way I construe it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The only broad authority given to the Secretary of War is that he may send up estimates, and that does not authorize his estimates. It merely permits him to send estimates in regard to this matter without authorizing them. There is no law that authorizes his estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman say that there is no authority in this section 113 for the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I contend that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. There is authorization for an appropriation for the purpose as stated in the act in the subhead of this paragraph, for the purpose of the encouragement of rifle practice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I contend that the Secretary of War may send recommendations to the Congress, but his recommendations thereby do not constitute an authorization. The subhead is no part of any act of Congress. That is written by the printer or the clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the gentleman is there no authorization for the appropriation for the encouragement of rifle practice? If not, then what does this section 113 mean?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It means that for the encouragement of rifle practice certain galleries and target shooting may be established and recognized, and that the Secretary of War may furnish guns and ammunition, if available, with which to practice. Beyond that there is no authorization for an expenditure of public money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to one phrase in the amendment as I caught it read from the desk that makes the whole amendment subject to the point of order under any condition, and that is a provision for international rifle matches.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in the amendment relating to international rifle matches. Section 113 of the national defense act is a provision entitled "Encouragement of rifle practice," and under that heading the act, as it seems to the Chair, attempts to authorize the holding of matches, the establishment and maintenance of indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, and authorizes the Secretary of War to prepare comprehensive plans such as will ultimately result in providing adequate facilities for rifle practice in all sections of the country, and in general to secure, maintain, and carry on these rifle ranges and indoor targets for the purpose of encouraging rifle practice.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] calls especial attention to the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice. It seems to the Chair that an act of this kind ought to be liberally construed to carry out the evident intent of the law itself. If the Secretary of War decides to carry it out through the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, it would seem, without evidence to the contrary, that this would be a proper means for carrying out the provisions of this law. Believing that the provisions contained in the amendment do not go beyond the authorization of the law itself, if properly interpreted, the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules, may I ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How does the Chair know that the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice is the thing mentioned in the general defense act?

The CHAIRMAN. In the view of the Chair it is because the Secretary of War selects it as a proper agency for executing the law, not because it is the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, but simply because the Secretary of War, under his discretion in carrying out the law, selects this as the proper means.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I inquire when that was done?

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary of War would have the right to select this agency or any other.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; he would have the right; but he has not done it, and this is exceeding even his authority when it is proposed to do that over the head of the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is a technical objection only, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, no; it is not technical.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes seem to have it—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the adoption of the amendment. The Chair too hastily announced the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not realize that the gentleman from Kentucky was seeking recognition. Otherwise the Chair would have recognized him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I wanted to address the committee relative to the amendment before the Chair announced the result, but he overlooked the fact that I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman was on his feet, the Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in these days, when the utmost economy is necessary, and when many Members of the House are endeavoring to be economical, we have here before us a proposition that is wasteful in the extreme. When the war came on a gun club conceived the idea of getting Federal aid for the purpose, or at least the alleged purpose, of teaching men how to shoot. This bill carries an appropriation for the Army for rifle practice. The Coast Guard has a like provision; the Navy has a provision for the same purpose. Then there is added to that this provision, which is one of the results of the war which still hangs on, whereby public money is spent to teach all "able-bodied citizens" how to shoot. The testimony before the committee was that almost the only men taught by that organization how to shoot were officers in the Army. Those, at least, were the only ones who were particularly specified as having been taught how to shoot.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield? In my neighborhood—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman use his own time?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I merely wanted to mention some evidence. In my own neighborhood there are several gun clubs. I do not know of any man in the service, but they are all young men there who belong and they get a great deal of education and benefit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I was about to say, the only persons specified before the committee, or particularized rather, who have been taught how to shoot were officers in the Army. Every one of them had places for practice available. I asked the witness before the committee what use an Army officer had for a gun, and he was compelled to admit that an Army officer does not carry a gun; consequently all this money was thrown away to teach a man how to shoot who never would be called on to shoot.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have only five minutes; I trust the gentleman will make his statement in his own time, because I am not going to ask additional time. This gun club has a secretary here who is paid by them $7,200 a year. He remains here within reach of Congress, and he is the spokesman, if not the lobbyist, for this organization. In addition to that, they are now asking 18 clerks at public expense to keep the shooting score and averages for this private gun club. In addition to that, last year—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order; the gentleman is making an important statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I trust this delay will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute more remaining. Does the gentleman ask for additional time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask for more time, but I request the Chairman not to take the delay out of my time until I have the attention of the committee. Order is not being preserved in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to preserve it. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair can do that if he insists long enough.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes additional.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would rather not ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has one minute remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the clock has run a little fast on me. But in the one minute that is left I can only say that which I just this moment started to say, that the United States Government not only furnishes guns to this organization but it gave them $250,000 worth of ammunition last year, and it gave them $100,000 with which they bought guns specially made which they might take with them to Europe when traveling upon a transport to enter into contests over in France and Italy.

If I had time I would show the committee that out of all the men who have been sent across the water to participate in these rifle practices only two of them had the word "Mr." in front of their names. All the rest of them bore Army titles, and they got their experience at rifle practice out of the amount of money allowed for the Army and for the Coast Guard and for the Navy with which to practice, and old men like myself who are unfit to go to war have no business being taught at public expense how to shoot. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the love of rifle shooting is inherent with every American boy. Ever since this country was born it has excelled in the art and skill of handling firearms. In recent years it has become increasingly difficult to give the civilians of America an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the use of high-power firearms, and in these days the range of the rifle used for military purposes is so long and their fire is so destructive that unless the use of these arms is confined to certain ranges, where they can be used with safety and under proper supervision, the average American boy and average civilian has no opportunity whatever to familiarize himself with the modern rifle.

Now, this gun club that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] speaks about is composed of 1,300 different civilian organizations in this country, composed in the aggregate of from 40,000 to 50,000 Americans who are endeavoring to become expert and familiarize themselves in the use of the military rifle. Under the law the War Department is permitted to furnish each one of these 1,300 clubs with two military rifles and two smaller caliber rifles for practice, together with an unlimited amount of ammunition, of which they gave them this year about 5,000,000 rounds. We have a tremendous amount of service rifle ammunition in reserve, so that we might as well use it up in this work of familiarizing the civilians in the use of the military rifle. In my opinion it is a worthy purpose for which we can spend this $80,000 of our money, and I would hesitate a long while before I would strike an item of this kind from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY.]

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 38.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL TROPHY AND MEDALS FOR RIFLE CONTESTS.

For the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, members of rifle clubs, and civilians, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, including the reimbursement of necessary expenses of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $7,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, for the reason that it is legislation and is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the point of order is made on the ground that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will call attention to the fact that Congress passed a law in 1903 authorizing this activity, and it was made a permanent annual appropriation. That act was subsequently repealed, with the idea of placing it in the appropriation bill, and ever since 1904 the item has been carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, could I see the act, please?

The CHAIRMAN. It is incumbent upon the gentleman from Kansas to produce it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is. Will he produce it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE EQUIPMENT FOR RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

For arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories for target practice for issue and sale in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice, in pursuance of the provisions of law, $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item for the reason that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman examined section 113 in connection with this item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; and I will ask the Chair if he can find anything in section 113 which authorizes this gun club to purchase arms? Then I wish to ask the Chairman further if he can find any authority in that act for the words "and sale" in the second line in this bill? Then, when the Chair gets through with that, if he will hear me, I want to call attention to another thing. Take line 20 and the words following:

Except as expressly otherwise authorized herein, no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

I am not dealing just now with the question of whether this is a limitation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, we have not read the paragraph that the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe the gentleman is correct about that. I am inadvertently one item ahead of myself. The item I wished to direct attention to is this:

For the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be purchased and contested for.

That is not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. That has gone out on the gentleman's point of order.

The paragraph that has just been read begins on line 14 and ends on line 19.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, I started off right and read too far, Mr. Chairman. Now, I contend there is no authorization in the national defense act, section 113, which authorizes the purchase of arms or ammunition. The only authorization in that act for arms and ammunition is that which may be provided by the Secretary when it is "available." That authorization appears in the very last part of section 113.

Without being able to get the meaning intended to be conveyed by the two words, "and sale," in the second line, I say I can not tell whether they mean this organization may sell certain stuff or whether it may buy. The gun club is given no authority anywhere either to sell or to buy.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair is called to this provision of the law:

2608. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for use in target practice, target-practice materials and other accessories to rifle clubs organized under the rules of the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice—for the proper conduct of target practice.

And so forth—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, I concede that the Secretary of War has the right to issue them, provided they are available. That is the law in section 113, and the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice is not mentioned in the national defense act, section 113.

There is nothing whatever in the law which authorizes this gun club to "buy" arms and ammunition. Nor is there anything in it which authorizes them to either buy or sell.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman claim that this provision of the bill authorizes the purchase of arms and ammunition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly it does. Ten thousand dollars is appropriated with which they may buy arms and ammunition.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. The language of the defense act authorizes the issue of these arms, and it must be perfectly obvious that before the Secretary of War can issue arms he has got to purchase them or manufacture them. They are the only two ways in which he can acquire them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the Chair read the last part of section 113 and note that it provides that if "available" the Secretary of War may issue them under that act? He can not go into the market and buy for this gun club.

The CHAIRMAN. If the arms are the property of the Government what is the difference between the use of the word "available" and the words "buying them"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The word "available" as used in the act means that if the Secretary of War has these arms and ammunition on hand, and they are not needed for other purposes, then they become available for this club. A thing is not "available" if it is not on hand.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, it might be well for the Chair to take into consideration section 884 of the military laws of the United States:

Sale of ammunition and stores to rifle clubs: That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized in his discretion to sell to the several States and Territories, as prescribed in section 17 of the act approved January 21, 1903, for the use of said clubs, ammunition, ordnance stores, and equipments of the Government standard at the prices at which they are listed for the Army. The practice of the rifle clubs herein provided shall be carried on in conformity to regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, approved by the Secretary of War, and the results thereof shall be filed in the office of The Military Secretary of the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But, Mr. Chairman, the act which it is alleged legalizes this gun club gives no authority whatever for it to purchase with public money anything in the way of guns or ammunition. The Secretary may, under certain conditions, sell to those who have liberty to buy, but this particular rifle club is nowhere given authority to buy guns and ammunition. Last year, as I said, the Secretary of War did give them more than a quarter of a million dollars' worth of ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN. It would seem from section 2608—citing from Barnes Federal Code—that—

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for use in target practice, targets, target materials, and other necessary accessories.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me call the Chair's attention to one distinction right there. That language may authorize the Secretary of War to buy, but the proposed language authorizes this gun club to buy. An authority given to the Secretary of War to buy is no authority to this gun club to buy with public money.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky point out to the Chair wherein the paragraph under consideration authorizes the Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice to buy anything?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The alleged authorizing language does not mention that organization. But the unauthorized language of this bill says, "For arms, ammunition," and so forth, "$10,000." What do they want with $10,000, or even with 10 cents, if they are not going to buy? If the Secretary of War is going to give them these things gratis, what do they want with $10,000?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not given to the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But virtually it is.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to be spent under rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I have said before, this concern is recognized in this bill but not in the law. The Secretary of War to-day or to-morrow or before the 1st day of July comes, or afterwards, may designate another concern, even if heretofore he may have designated this particular gun club. This bill gives authority to a certain concern to make rules for the disposition of guns and ammunition belonging to the United States, when nowhere in the law can be found any such authority. If the provision in this bill passes as it now reads the Secretary of War is deprived for the year 1925 of the authority conferred on him by the national defense act. When and where has the Secretary of War designated this gun club as the agency named in said act? He has, as far as we know, done no such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point which bothers the Chair is that which the gentleman from Kentucky makes that the Secretary of War is authorized to issue property which is available, which probably means surplus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do we not know that is what is meant? Last year did not the Secretary of War give them a quarter of a million dollars' worth of ammunition and the Lord knows how many guns?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph in the bill providing for the expenditure of $10,000—

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not want to interrupt the Chair, but I will be obliged if the Chair will permit me to make this statement: That when there was no surplus ammunition—and the secretary of this gun club so testified—the manufacturers of ammunition in the United States gave them all the ammunition they wanted. At that time the Secretary of War had none that was "available" and they got it from the other source. So if the Secretary of War has none now "available," they can get it from the other source. But the Secretary of War can not give it to them unless he has it "available."

The CHAIRMAN. It seems clear to the Chair that the Secretary of War has the right to issue these arms and this ammunition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Only if they are "available."

The CHAIRMAN. If they are available, and that he has the right to sell under the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But this concern has no right to buy with public money, and I challenge the Chair to state where it is given any right to buy with appropriated money.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Kansas supply any authorization for this?

Mr. ANTHONY. For the information of the Chair the word "sale" is used with reference to the sale of these arms into private ownership of members and has no reference to the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice. It means that if any individual member of one of these organizations wants to buy an arm, the Secretary of War can sell it to him the same as he can sell to any other citizen of the country, to you, or to any of the rest of us.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I have the right as an individual to take my own money and buy, but this concern has not been given any authority to take public money and buy.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman from Kentucky probably misunderstands this item. The gentleman thinks the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice is trying to buy these arms out of this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Of course they are.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; they are not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What do they want with the money except to buy?

Mr. ANTHONY. I contend they are not trying to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. It might help to clear up the situation on the point of order if the gentleman from Kansas will state what it is contemplated to spend this $10,000 for. It might help the Chair to get at the facts, which seem to be more complicated than the parliamentary situation.

Mr. ANTHONY. The information the committee has is that almost the entire amount of the item will be spent for targets and supplies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman left out the words from the text "and ordnance supplies." That is the language contained in the Book of Estimates sent to Congress. There is a clear case of it and the Book of Estimates is officially before the chairman of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It would seem, upon a critical reading of the paragraph of the bill under consideration, that it might be expended for the purchase of arms and ammunition, and so on.

Mr. ANTHONY. The information is that the money will be expended for target material, rifle parts, and some ammunition to be issued of the .22 caliber type.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is only the dicta of a witness testifying, but the clerk of the committee is now going to bring you the Book of Estimates, which shows the purpose for which this money is to be expended. You will find there "ordnance supplies." What are "ordnance supplies" except guns and ammunition? If they are not that, what are they?

The CHAIRMAN. Both guns and ammunition are supplied by the ordnance, undoubtedly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is the Book of Estimates, which tells you for what purpose this $10,000 is asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Kansas is able to submit some authorization, the Chair will feel compelled to sustain the point of order on the insistence of the gentleman from Kentucky. If there is any authority of law for this, the Chair would like to have it; and if not, the Chair will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except as expressly otherwise authorized herein, no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item on the ground that the item in this appropriation bill contains legislation which is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Kentucky submit any precedents on that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I have not looked for precedents. The language is so plain, it does not need any. Listen, Mr. Chairman, to the first words of the paragraph:

• • • except as expressly otherwise authorized herein, no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended.

And so forth.

I wish to emphasize the words "except as expressly otherwise authorized herein." Does not that mean that the appropriation bill is undertaking to authorize something which is not authorized by the law? This item on an appropriation pretends to rise above the law. That language authorizes certain things to be done unless they are otherwise directed in this bill, even though they be otherwise directed by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman go further, as to whether this is a proper limitation, whether it is a limitation of the appropriation, or whether it is a limitation on the discretion of an executive officer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss whether it is a limitation or not, because the language, "except as expressly otherwise authorized herein," takes precedence over and repeals existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not contend that this language authorizes anything. It is simply a reference to anything that may be authorized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not say "as otherwise authorized by law," but it makes the language in this appropriation bill supreme and above the law by saying "unless otherwise authorized by this bill."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is entirely unable to follow the gentleman from Kentucky that these words of themselves constitute legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it provides that what follows may be done if it is authorized by this bill. It should be that what hereafter is proposed to be done shall be authorized by law. That is the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entirely correct in his reasoning, but this language does not legislate at all or propose to legislate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why, Mr. Chairman, it does legislate, because it says that certain things may be done if they are authorized in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to be heard a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we had this question up before on this bill. This is the old fight that our friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has been making here for several years.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman first direct himself to the point that the gentleman from Kentucky is making?

Mr. BLANTON. This is the point that the "gentleman from Texas" is making. The gentleman is now making a point of order against the paragraph for the reason that it contains legislation. Under the present law our Secretary of War can buy Army ordnance any place he wants to and is absolutely unrestricted, but if you pass this paragraph the situation is entirely different. He will be restricted. The reason I am directing the attention of the Chair to this point of order is because, if the gentleman from Kentucky does not make the point, I am going to make it myself, for the reason you tie up the discretion of the Secretary of War by this paragraph and say to him that he can not buy ordnance anywhere in the world, no matter how much more desirable it may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order does not seem to be pending now, unless the gentleman wishes to make it.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky stands until he withdraws it, and if that point of order is withdrawn I am going to make the point of order that this is an infringement upon the discretion of the Secretary of War. You will remember that when we had this matter up before evidence was brought here that you could buy Army supplies elsewhere, and sometimes better supplies, that were far more desirable than we could manufacture them in our arsenals. It was an attempt on the part of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to restrict action to the arsenal output instead of the output of the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, for the real meaning of this, turn to page 80, line 17:

Equipment or material purchased outside of the United States from funds appropriated in this act shall be admitted free of duty.

Does not that include guns and ammunition that may be purchased outside of the United States with money appropriated for this gun club?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may be a little obtuse, but will the gentleman from Kentucky state again his point of order. The Chair would like to have it clearly in mind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Line 20, page 79, we find this language: "except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act for military purposes shall be expended," and so forth. Now, as expressly authorized herein, certain things may or may not be done, and this becomes the controlling language regardless of all law. That language makes this the controlling and the highest law.

The CHAIRMAN. Makes what the controlling and the highest law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The things to be done that follow.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman does not confine his point of order to this paragraph alone.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I am contending that lines 20 and 21 give to the provisions in this bill a higher authority than the law gives.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point of order of the gentleman from Texas, and the Chair is ready to rule on it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is a provision that was put on the bill to save the Government money. As is well known, the Government has many facilities for the manufacture of things they need for the Army. At that time we found that many contracts were being placed outside at a price above what they would cost the Government. This was a limitation on an appropriation bill. It was introduced in 1916, and Mr. Saunders of Virginia was in the chair. A point of order was made against the provision. It was submitted, and he overruled the point of order and said that it was evident from the language of the amendment that it would save money to the Government. It has been exercised a great deal and in all cases it does save the Government money. In fact, it is not utilized at all unless it does save the Government money. It is so apparent that I am surprised that a point of order should be raised against it. There is no question but what if you can make it cheaper than you can buy it, you save the Government money. You might say the point of order has been made several times since then on the provision, and it has always been overruled. It has been carried on most appropriation bills since 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This is merely a question of limitation. The same question has been ruled upon, and, like some of the other questions of limitation, in diametrically opposite directions. The Chair recalls that on one occasion he ruled that this very same paragraph was in order. Somewhat later one of our distinguished parliamentarians, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR], after a carefully prepared decision, ruled it out of order, and this was the last ruling on the subject.

The present occupant of the chair is now inclined to believe that the gentleman from Oregon was right, and that the present occupant of the chair when he made the other ruling was wrong. Preferring to be right rather than consistent, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] will take the chair.

Mr. CHINDBLOM took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL of Iowa) there were 59 ayes and 3 noes.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. TILSON resumed the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. I know it places the Chair in an embarrassing attitude.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the disposition to be made of this point of order the Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Texas or anyone else on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. I want to quote the distinguished Chairman in saying, "Nothing is ever settled until it is decided right."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair only wishes that we knew what is right. I think that we would all decide that way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, may I read what the distinguished Chairman said once on this particular subject?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman need not read it. As the Chair stated a few moments ago, there is nothing else in such hopeless conflict in our rules as decisions upon the question of limitations. This particular paragraph has been the subject of conflicting rulings only quite recently. The Chair is not disposed to add further confusion than exists at the present time. The Chair believes that the decision which he made in the Army appropriation bill a year ago was correct and that it was founded upon good reasoning. Having that ruling in mind and also having in mind the more recent decision made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], who is a recognized parliamentarian and who goes to the bottom of things when he considers them, the present occupant of the chair, he repeats, is not disposed to complicate the situation further by making a ruling at this time upon this point of order. It is the hope of the present occupant of the chair that the Committee on Rules, or some one else interested in the orderly procedure of the House, will at some future time attempt to draft a rule on the subject, particularly in view of the fact that all of the appropriating power is now vested in one committee. A rule should be drafted which would fix the power of the Appropriations Committee in respect to limitations, defining it as clearly as is possible, and relegate the matter of legislation to where it belongs, viz, the legislative committees of the House.

The Chair declines to pass upon the question at this time as to whether the paragraph is in order or not, and will let the committee decide.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, can we not have some discussion upon the matter?

The CHAIRMAN. If it is the will of the committee, certainly. As far as the Chair is concerned, he does not wish to hear any discussion.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that only the other day when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, this same point of order was raised and the then occupant of the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, overruled the point of order. An appeal was taken from that decision, and the decision of the Chair was sustained by the committee by a practically unanimous vote, only one gentleman, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, voting against the decision of the Chair.

I also wish to call attention to the fact that with the exception of the present occupant of the chair, practically every other chairman of the Committee of the Whole has held this paragraph to be in order on an appropriation bill as a limitation. It has been held to be in order by the present leader of the minority party, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT; by that well-known authority on the rules of the House, the late Mr. Saunders of Virginia; by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois for so many years the Republican leader, the late Mr. Mann; by the present majority leader, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, and by a long line of distinguished parliamentarians.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has any Committee of the Whole House or has the House at any time ever held this provision to be out of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When?

Mr. BLANTON. When the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the present occupant of the chair, last ruled it out of order. That was on the Army appropriation bill when it was under consideration last year, and the Committee of the Whole House sustained the decision of the Chair by a 3 to 1 vote.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am surprised to learn that. My impression was that on every occasion when the matter was submitted to the committee or to the House it had been held to be in order. That being the highest authority, it would seem to me that would be satisfying to the Chair.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, with the exception of that one case last year to which the gentleman from Texas has just referred, when the present occupant of the chair overruled himself, as well as all the other previous occupants of the chair, this paragraph has been held to be in order, and I now appeal to the Committee of the Whole House for the sake of consistency to remember that the other day by a vote of 79 to 1 the committee sustained the ruling of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman will make the discussion brief.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to address the committee for only five minutes. I realize that this is election year. I realize that all you colleagues of mine have to go back home to be reelected. I can not condemn you for seeking the path of least resistance, because I think a whole lot of you, and I want to see you all come back. I know from experience exactly what this vexed question means, because I have been through it. When I go down into my district I shall find some fellows from Washington hounding me all over my district because I have stood up and voted for what I believed to be right upon this question. I do not want you to have that experience. I am not going to force you to a roll call on the question, particularly at this time. When we get back next year I am going to do it, because I am coming back. I could have put you on record the other day possibly, but I did not even ask for a roll call the other morning when we voted on the naval appropriation bill. But, as I say, I am going to put every one of you on record on this question after you get back from elections.

Do you know what you are doing by this amendment?

You are refusing to have sane supervision—business supervision—over civilian employees in the arsenals and the navy yards. Men are working there for wages, for salaries, and simply because they belong to unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, which does not want you to vote this out or hamper them with supervision, you prevent the Government from having supervision over them as employees. Is not that ridiculous? There is not a business in the United States that could survive for six months with such a policy. You must have business supervision over business affairs. Oh, I know what it all means. In to-day's paper there is a story about the plasterers here in town belonging to a certain union demanding of the contractors, with housing conditions bad, that they be paid $14 a day—not just $14 a day but $14 a day for six days per week, when they propose to work only five days, having apparently Saturday and Sunday off. It is not that they want to work only for five days, either. In other words, they demand pay for six days and work five days for $14 a day, and then on Saturdays and sometimes Sundays they work and demand double time for those days. They are threatening to tie up all the building construction of this great city if their demands are not met.

We can not let that go on and on forever. I want to see them get good pay. I want to see them lay up for a rainy day, when they get old. I want to see them take some of the luxuries of life to their families; but I do not want them to come into the halls of Congress and control the law-making body and put these union-labor provisions into the law of the land when they are not business provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], the Chair thinks that, in justice to himself, he should make a short statement before submitting the matter to vote. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], with his usual thoroughness, looked up all of the decisions in regard to this matter before he made his ruling the other day. The present occupant of the chair did the same thing when he made the decision he rendered a year ago. Both the gentleman from Illinois and the present occupant of the chair found that no decision had ever been rendered on this particular paragraph or amendment, as the case may be, that had had any consideration whatever as a parliamentary proposition so far as appears from the Record.

The question first rose when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] was in the chair, but before a ruling was made the gentleman who had made the point of order withdrew it so that the gentleman from Tennessee made no ruling on the question. In the next Congress, I think it was, the matter again came up. The same gentleman from Tennessee was in the chair, the point was again raised, and the gentleman from Tennessee, without any argument and without stating his reasoning, said that on the precedents already made he would overrule the point of order.

Another Chairman—I think it was the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Saunders—simply said that the precedents seemed to be against it, and overruled the point of order. Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and later the present occupant of the chair made the same kind of decision, and the question was never considered at any length, so far as the Record shows, until the present occupant of the chair, a year ago, went through the precedents, not only as to this particular paragraph but to others that might by analogous reasoning bear upon it, and ruled that the provision should be ruled out. The other day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], in a well-considered decision, ruled the other way. So the matter stands at present. The Chair is going to leave the question with the committee to decide whether this paragraph is in order or not.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the Chair was in doubt.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 14.

So the paragraph was held in order.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, yesterday I was necessarily absent from this House, I seldom am; but I had to go to the Treasury Department and also to see a friend who is ill, and who lately lost his wife; and while I was absent the gentleman from Colorado was given 10 minutes, in which time he made some attacks on me. I ask 10 minutes—

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. KVALE. In which to answer.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I make the point of order the gentleman is not talking to the bill. We have had several lectures here, both from the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Minnesota, in reference to this subject. I think it ought not to be permitted—

Mr. VAILE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order, if the gentleman from Minnesota feels he ought to make a statement—

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is made, the gentleman must proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KVALE. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman one question. The gentleman really has a question of privilege and could have asked for a hearing this morning. I asked him not to do it, and told him I was sure the committee, having heard the gentleman from Colorado, would be glad to hear him for five minutes, and so I asked him not to raise the question of privilege; but there is a question of privilege in the Record.

Mr. VAILE. I could not admit it has a question of privilege; I do not believe, if the gentleman will read it, that there is. It is a question of a man's patriotism—

Mr. BLANTON. I would like a chance to discuss that, and I hope the Chair—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no option in this matter. Objection is made; the gentleman must proceed in order.

Mr. KVALE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I am going to state now that I am going to make objection to anybody else until we get through with this bill, but I am going to let the gentleman from Minnesota speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I can not cover in 5 minutes what the gentleman from Colorado covered in 10 minutes. I want to say the gentleman from Colorado in the first place slur the church I served, and I do not think—

Mr. VAILE. Oh, how did I slur the church which the gentleman served?

Mr. KVALE. He did. Read the Record where he refers to the church I served; and I want to say—

Mr. VAILE. Please refer to the words wherein I slurred the gentleman's church.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman can read the words. Please do not interrupt; I have but five minutes. I will say to you that the members of that church, while they are not angels—if they were they would need no one to preach to them; I do not believe they have even started to sprout wings—but I say you can take the 600 souls of that church and place them against 600 people belonging to any organization to which the gentleman belongs, and I shall not worry about the comparison. I want to say in answer to the gentleman's inference in his remarks that I have never on the floor of this House uttered one syllable against the make-up of our Army and Navy. The gentleman is mistaken. Others may have done so, but I never have.

I have had my sons in the Army and Navy. They have come back and told me of the conditions obtaining there and they have given expression to the treatment that they received, and while they have described some of the regrettable conditions, the great share of their comment has been highly favorable. They have come out of the Army and Navy clean. I know they have, and I believe that any young man who goes into the Army and Navy, with the right kind of home influence back of him and the right stuff in him will come out of it clean, the same as he can out of any other condition in which he lives. [Applause.]

I do not believe the gentleman should have made the implication which he did, that I referred in any derogatory way to the Army or Navy, because I did not.

The gentleman has spoken about the women of this country, and inferentially he has insulted the mothers of this country by saying that they are less patriotic if they stand for a reduction of the Army. I say it is an insult to the women. I do not impugn the gentleman's motives and I have never questioned his patriotism. I believe in a reduction of the Army. The gentleman speaks of the effect of that as being ruinous to this country. My claim is that a large army breeds war and more war, and that is ruinous to the country.

I believe the way to build up this country is by peace and peaceful measures, and, therefore, I believe in a reduction of the Army. The gentleman says I believe in wiping out the Army. I never made that statement. I believe in an Army for police purposes. The gentleman had no right to make the inferences that he has made.

The gentleman speaks about his own war record, and I infer that it is meant to be put in juxtaposition to mine. Very well. I have no war record to place against that of the gentleman. I can not claim the honor, if such it be, of having shot any of my fellow human beings, in war or out of it. When the gentleman went to the Spanish-American War I was occupying a pulpit, and I had a wife and two sons. I was bringing up sons for future wars. I was in the pulpit, but I do not believe that any man who can preach or engage in any other vocation in this world should be exempted from service to his country. I believe that a man who preaches war either from the pulpit or the platform should be the first to put on the uniform and go in to the front-line trenches. [Applause.]

As for the World War, to which the gentleman refers, I was opposed to entering that war, and I would discuss for a whole hour with the gentleman at any place the question of our country going into that war. But when the country went into the war I dropped that matter. My sons went into that war. My oldest son was finishing his college course when we entered the war. He immediately telegraphed home for permission to enter the Army, and his mother and I, after conferring together for half an hour, sent him a message in which we said, "You have our permission, and we wish you Godspeed in whatever you decide to do." [Applause.] He tried in every way possible to get in, but was rejected time and again. He continued in college, was graduated that same spring, and finally succeeded in entering the Army. After a year on this side he went overseas; and, by the way, he was offered a commission, but the commission involved his going to the Philippines, and he decided he would go France as a sergeant rather than go to the Philippines as a commissioned officer. In France, offered the post of instructor in the machine-gun school of the Third Army Corps, he declined because of his eagerness to reach front-line service.

My second son was in a tubercular hospital for several years, but after being rejected by one board after another he finally got into the Army the day before the armistice. My third son was in high school. He wanted to enlist in the Navy. His mother and I pleaded with him to stay until he finished high school, and he stayed home and graduated. Then he tried to get into the Navy but was turned down. Finally a personal friend of his who happened to have the necessary authority said, "I will take you on." He served with the transport service and crossed and recrossed the Atlantic on board the ships that took our boys to the front and home again, with the ever-present danger from submarines and mines.

I have tried to do my part. I did my part in buying Liberty bonds and in the sale of them. I knew that a large number of people were getting a rake-off on the sale of those Liberty bonds and on the whole war game, but I tried to do my duty. [Applause.]

The gentleman makes this statement:

My great-great-grandmother ran the family pewter spoons through a bullet mold in order to help her husband establish a country which would be good enough for the parents of the gentleman from Minnesota to live in, and I expect to be one of those who are going to hand down that same kind of a country to his children, in spite of his efforts and the efforts of others similarly disposed.

A fine insinuation, indeed, for a gentleman to make. I do not know how many bullets my great-great-grandmother helped make; but, judging by her progeny, I am forced to the conclusion that she would have proved a worthy competitor of the gentleman's ancestry in anything and everything that tended to build and preserve a nation.

I do not know just how strong my ancestors were on bullets and shooting, but I know that my grandparents and all their kin and practically all who came from the land which gave them birth have been among the producers of this Nation and not among its parasites, have been people who in the sweat of their brow have helped transform the wilderness of the West into a Garden of Eden, into a land flowing with milk and honey.

I protest that shooting your fellow human beings is not the only nor the true measure of patriotism. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia: Page 80, line 16, after the word "plant," insert "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government at a price in excess of the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. If the gentleman wants to make a point of order, I wish he would make it now.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to discuss the point of order, but I want to say that this is practically the same language that was written in the naval appropriation bill that we passed the other day. It seems, if we want to take the profit out of war, that is the way to do it. It was for that purpose that the amendment was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that this is substantially the same amendment that was offered a little while ago, when an objection was sustained.

Mr. TAYLOR of West Virginia. It is worded a little differently.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The first two lines of the former amendment are out. This is a pure limitation. There is not any question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call attention to this language in the amendment:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for military purposes shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of ordnance and ordnance supplies at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

The limitation is merely that no part of the appropriation shall be expended to purchase from private manufacturers at a price in excess of the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government. There is no saving in that. If the price is equal, of course there will be no saving.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but there is a limitation on the purchase at a higher price, and the excess covers that.

There is no question about the language. If you pay $100 more and this prevents you from paying it, you have saved $100. It is a limitation, and the same amendment has been held in order right along. The adoption of the amendment must save money.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CHINDBLOM). In view of the present occupant of the chair it is a limitation as to executive discretion rather than as to expenditure or as to the use of the appropriation. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That very point was ruled on the other day when a point of order was overruled on the question of enlisting boys under 21 years of age. At that time that same point came up, that it was a limitation on executive authority. We have a right to some discretion on limitations that will save this Government some money in an appropriation bill. We have always had that right, and if you are going to sweep away the right of the House to limit Government officials in the expenditure of money, then you are going to hamstring the House when it wants to save money in the future, and in doing that you are striking at the very foundations of a limitation which saves money.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] care to be heard?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that all this amendment does is to say you can not spend money in excess of what you can buy this material at Government arsenals, and it does not say it is going to save any money. It simply provides that you shall not spend any money in excess of what you can manufacture this same material at the arsenals. It simply says you are going to have a balance sheet. I claim the amendment does not come within the rule which provides that there must be a showing of a saving of money for the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Here is the point: If one of the quartermasters were to buy something and had an offer at $50 more than they could manufacture it, and they had this limitation staring them in the face, would they not save money?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It is purely discretionary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would not be discretionary if the House considered this a limitation and placed it in the bill as such. The gentleman well knows that, and, in fact, he wrote the same thing in the bill himself.

Mr. JONES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. JONES. Just for a moment.

I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment which was ruled out a moment ago was ruled out because of the first line, which reads "except as otherwise expressly authorized herein." That was held by the Chair to be an indirect authorization as to other provisions in the bill, and the Chair suggested during the ruling that if that first line had not been in there it might have been construed as a limitation. I do not agree with the chairman who was presiding at that time as to the distinction he made. On the other hand, I believe that the paragraph that went out was a pure limitation, but the Chair made that distinction.

Now, the only effect which the amendment now offered could possibly have would be to limit expenditures and to save money. It could have no other effect, because it provides that in purchasing these supplies they shall not pay in excess of what it would cost the Government to manufacture them. It is also a limitation on the scope of purchasing. For this double reason it is in order.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Is it not true that in order to come within the holding it must actually show on the face of the amendment that it will save money?

Mr. JONES. Not necessarily. It may limit the purposes for which the money may be spent, but I assert it does show that on its very face, because it says, in express words, that no part of this money shall be expended for munitions, and so forth, where they are bought in excess of what it would cost the Government to manufacture them. If that does not mean it would save money if a private manufacturer wanted to make a profit above what the Government would furnish them for, what does it mean? If it means anything at all, it means there is a limitation on what the expenditure may be. It not only may serve to save money but it is a limitation on the character of expenditures which may be made. It is purely a limitation, and if the Holman rule means anything it means to cover a case of this kind, and if the rule with reference to limitations is ever to be applied, it is applicable in this case.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, supplementing what my colleague says, this seems to me to be in order outside of the Holman rule, because it is in the nature of a limitation, because under existing law the Secretary of War might purchase these supplies in the open market at any price he might see fit. Now, the effect of this amendment is to limit his authority to do that to only those cases in which the purchases can be made at the Government cost of production, with 10 per cent in addition thereto.

I just say that supplementing the suggestions of my colleague from Texas. It is a limitation on the appropriation within certain specified limits, and in the case of a limitation it does not have to appear that money will be saved. That is the point I am suggesting to the Chair. If it is a limitation, it is immaterial whether it saves money or whether it does not, if it be a limitation on the appropriation within the scope of the law authorizing the expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair can see no substantial difference between the proposed amendment and the provision in the bill beginning on page 79, line 20, to which a point of order was sustained only a little while ago by the gentleman who then occupied the chair, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

It is true that the words "except as expressly otherwise authorized herein" occurred in the text which was then ruled upon by the Chairman of the committee, but aside from that the language appears to be identical and the Chair presumes it will be conceded it is identical.

In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is subject to the same reasoning and the same objection as was stated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] a few minutes ago; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] to take the chair during the appeal.

Mr. DOWELL took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 22.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payments to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am asking for this little time, Mr. Chairman, so that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] and myself can get away to lunch for a few minutes. It seems that after all there is not such a great difference between us, and it appears that both of us believe in national defense. I am sure we all know that he and his family believe in national defense after the statement he has made here regarding the conduct of his splendid sons. The only thing about which we seem to differ is that I believe there should be somebody trained for the national defense before the immediate need of it arises.

And when I said that I would compare the ex-Regulars of my Spanish War Veterans' camp with the members of the gentleman's church I certainly was casting no slur on his church. I think it was a compliment to his church, and also a compliment, a well deserved one, to the soldiers.

I am sorry the gentleman was not here when I made my remarks yesterday. I rose to speak on an amendment offered by our witty friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD], and knowing the gentleman from Minnesota to be very assiduous in the performance of his duties and not knowing of the special emergency which took him away I thought he was here. I did not look around to count noses to see whether he was here or not. I just took it for granted he was here, and a discussion of his remarks came up incidentally to the other subject, the two amendments, generally speaking, referring to the same matter. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] poked fun at the idea of a considerable appropriation for training reserve officers. The gentleman from Minnesota had proposed on the day before to cut the standing Army of the United States in half, cutting it down from 125,000, or about 1 soldier to 1,000 of our population, to 62,500, or about 1 soldier to 2,000 of our population, and it seemed to me then, and seems to me now, that that was so absurdly small a number of trained men to serve in time of a national emergency which might arise, even before the gentleman's splendid boys could get into action again, that a man who held those views, no matter how noble his intentions were, held views detrimental to our peace and safety.

The gentleman may not be so sensitive after he has been here a little while. Many of us think that certain propositions are dangerous to the United States. Some of us thought the Garner tax plan would ruin the United States, and I think it would if it had been adopted. Some gentlemen here on the floor think the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law ruined the United States. The gentleman from Minnesota and myself are both of the opinion that if it had not been passed the United States would have been ruined, and so when I said that a total lack of a regular standing Army of trained men would ruin the United States—and a total lack is really what the gentleman in his heart is working toward—well, pardon me, I see the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] shakes his head—at any rate, the gentleman from Minnesota said he would cut it in half, and that he would hope for a further reduction later, and in doing that he at least reduces it to a vanishing minimum, then I think that such views if adopted would involve the ruin of our country as soon as the emergency of war should arise again. I am sure the gentleman in time of an emergency, as well as his family, would respond to such an emergency, but I want somebody able to respond immediately when the emergency arises, with special training for that job. If it is a duty to defend the country, it is a duty to be ready to defend it.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. I do.

Mr. KVALE. We have 4,000,000 men trained to spring to arms the moment there is danger.

Mr. VAILE. Whose arms?

Mr. KVALE. Ready to spring to arms—the gentleman understands that.

Mr. VAILE. Whose arms?

Mr. RANKIN. The same arms his sons sprang to when the last emergency arose.

Mr. VAILE. And where would they have been if we had not had our allies with a large number of men who had already been trained, a thin line of khaki holding the western front until these men could be trained? It was 14 months, I believe, before we got a single soldier to the front.

Mr. RANKIN. But the soldiers the gentleman from Minnesota is talking about, the 4,000,000 men, are ready to fly to the defense of the country when called on, and in addition to that we have the National Guard. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. But in 10 or 15 years many of those magnificent youths will be beyond the age of active service.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CHINDBLOM). The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think we are now sufficiently enlightened on the views about the Army, both of the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Colorado, and have had their personal history put on record, and I hope now we may proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Under what circumstances are these two items carried in the bill which have just been read, the first two paragraphs on page 81?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It is my understanding that this is for the men or the widows of the men who subjected themselves to experiments for a cure of yellow fever down South somewhere. It is my understanding that one of them died, and this pensions his widow. The other one was rendered an invalid and for a number of years has been an invalid by reason of subjecting himself to the experiments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thought that was the case, and what I am wondering about is why this is not carried in the pension bill. It is a pension appropriation.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. The law directs that it shall be carried in this way—the law of October 2, 1911, as I understand. I think this is carried strictly in accordance with the provision of the original act as passed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I had no doubt that was true. It really does amount to a pension, does it not?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; indirectly, I would say, although I think it would lapse if we did not make an appropriation for it; and, of course, it would lapse if it was a pension if we did not make an appropriation for it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: For interment, cremation (only upon request from relatives of the deceased), or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, cadets, United States Military Academy, acting assistant surgeons, members of the Army Nurse Corps, and enlisted men in active service, and accepted applicants for enlistment; for interment or preparation and transportation to their homes of the remains of civilian employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone, or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field; for interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; for interment and shipment to their homes of remains of enlisted men who are discharged in hospitals in the United States and continue as inmates of said hospitals to the date of their death; for interment of prisoners of war and interned alien enemies who die at prison camps in the United States; for removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910; for expenses of the segregation of bodies in permanent American cemeteries in Great Britain and France, $93,654: Provided, That the above provisions shall be applicable in the cases of officers and enlisted men on the retired list of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while on active duty by proper assignment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, when I was discussing the iron-shod method by which General Wood was undertaking to train the Filipinos in the gentle art of self-government, some one asked me about the experience of General Wood in Cuba. I became interested, and went back to search the records as to whether or not there were any complaints of the military management of affairs by General Wood in Cuba. I found a great number of complaints. In fact, it appeared that everywhere General Wood has been sent as a governing officer he has been a storm center and a trouble maker. I want to refer to a speech made by Senator Mark Hanna, and reinserted in the Record, on the subject in 1912, in which he produced a number of witnesses to the effect that General Wood was interfering with the orderly processes of the court and exercising legislative, executive, and judicial powers in Cuba. Also, with reference to affairs just before General Wood took charge and while he was serving as a subordinate, General Brooke made a charge that General Wood was guilty of insubordination; that he interfered with the civil courts of Manzanillo, where General Brooke charged that he took a prisoner out of custody charged with murder, put him aboard a ship, and sent him out of the country.

There are a number of things I would like to read if I had the time, showing the characteristics of the man, which I contend bear out the proposition that no military man should be placed at the head of the Philippine Government or any other civil government. [Applause.] More especially is that true of General Wood.

General Harrison remained in charge of the affairs in the Philippines for several years and only found it necessary to veto some six or eight bills. Here is a clipping from a paper asserting that General Wood vetoed 30 bills during the last session, almost at one clip.

Now, I think the experience with General Wood in the Philippines and his record, wherever he has been sent as a civil governor, effectually bear out the statement repeatedly made by the Filipinos, that instead of encouraging them in the handling of their own affairs, he seizes every opportunity to take away their right to control their own affairs. In other words, he is setting back the matter of self-government in the Philippines rather than encouraging it, and it will take long years to get over the government that he is administering there.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my colleague tell us from what fund or source comes the cost of printing these 70,000 copies of the Wood-Forbes report that are now in the document room?

Mr. JONES. I do not know from what fund it comes; the Wood-Forbes report was made in accordance with the investigation that was authorized by the Congress, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] I will say that that report was printed as a public document under a resolution passed by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. One of those innocent little resolutions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Attention was directed at the time to it, and I will say to the gentleman that it was stated that there ought to be objection to it, and that the report might just as well have been written before Wood and Forbes went to the Philippines as after.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for the information. I want to say, and I want to repeat, that I believe that it is just as unwise to place a man who all his life long has been engaged in a military way at the head of a civil government as it would be to place a civilian at the head of an army on the field of battle.

The nature of the work that a military man is called upon to do is wholly out of keeping with the principles of popular government, and yet that is the kind of a man over there that has been conducting this civil government.

It has even been said that Lieut. Osborn Wood, who has been charged with making a fortune by speculation, went into a cabaret and required the audience to stand and the band to play as he marched in in a spectacular way—some more evidence of military pomp and display.

Now, as bearing out the record of General Wood, I am going to submit to this Congress if you think this is wise when 25 years ago we made a sacred promise, in effect at least, that we were going to release the Filipinos in the course of a few years. Then to place a man of this type and character over them is like snapping our fingers in the face of our promises. I have before me a letter which President Wilson wrote in connection with the question of sending General Wood to France. I will read that part of it which refers to his characteristics:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 5, 1918.

To the EDITOR OF THE REPUBLICAN:

I hope you will not be surprised to know that I subscribed almost in its entirety to the inclosed editorial from the Republican.

I am keenly aware of and keenly sensitive to the implications which will be drawn out of the fact that I am not sending General Wood to the other side, and I want personal friends like yourself, upon whose approval I depend for my encouragement, to know why I am not sending him.

In the first place, I am not sending him because General Pershing has said that he does not want him, and, in the second place, General Pershing's disinclination to have General Wood sent over is only too well founded. Wherever General Wood goes there is controversy and conflict of judgment. On this side of the water we can take care of things of that sort, because the fighting is not being done here, but it would be fatal to let it go on at or anywhere near the front.

I have had a great deal of experience with General Wood. He is a man of unusual ability, but apparently absolutely unable to submit his judgment to those who are superior to him in command. I am sorry that his great ability can not be made use of in France, but at the same time I am glad to say that it is being made very much use of in the training of soldiers on this side of the water, a task for which he is eminently well fitted and which he is performing with diligence and success.

With sincere regard, faithfully yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

This report that I was reading from a while ago in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD also bears out that contention—that while he was in charge at Santiago and supposed to be operating under General Brooke he put in a great station without even submitting the matter, ay, without even reporting the matter to General Brooke. In other words, wherever that man has been he has demanded that he alone control all of the affairs. Is that course of conduct in keeping with inculcating the spirit of autonomy and the principles of self-government in any people? To ask the question shows absurdity of any other than one answer. How can these people be expected to make any progress in the art of self-government so long as he is in control. Every tradition of this country calls for early recognition of our obligation; every proud sentiment of American institutions pleads for an opportunity for these people. In the face of these facts why continue a military man whose whole official history shows an unreasoning, domineering disposition to govern in the face of their expressed wish? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHILOH NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation of superintendent of the park; clerical and other services; labor; historical tablets; maps and surveys; roads; purchase and transportation of supplies, implements, and materials; foundations for monuments; office and other necessary expenses, including maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, $20,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I ask that time in order that I may present to the House what I consider to be a very great injustice.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman does not refer to the failure of the Committee on the Census to report out the apportionment bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; that was no injustice.

I rise to call the attention of the House to an injustice that is being committed relative to the battle field of Shiloh. Some of you seem to have the idea that because this battle field is away down on the banks of the Tennessee River it is not just as close to your people as the battle field of Gettysburg, or any other battle field on American soil.

It has been said by those who have visited practically every battle field of note in the world that the most beautiful of them all is Shiloh. Situated on the banks of the Tennessee River, 20 miles out from the city of Corinth, it has not been disturbed as have those other fields by the building of railroads, cities, and other improvements. Mr. Thomas D. Duncan, of Corinth, Miss., has written a little book called "Recollections of Thomas D. Duncan, a Confederate Soldier," in which he has given the most vivid description of the opening of the Battle of Shiloh I have ever seen. I am going to ask the Clerk to read this marked paragraph in my time, and then I shall discuss the matter a little further.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read. There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Soon after we had left the hill where the enemy had fired on us we met the Confederate line of battle going into action. This was the grandest, most solemn, and tragic scene I had ever witnessed. The sun was just coming up over the hilltop, its bright rays touching the half-green forest with a golden beauty that could not but charm the eye and thrill the heart even in the presence of death. It was one of those rare mornings that in a deep woods cast a charm of mingled silence and wild music. In this sunlit antechamber of carnage there were bird songs and the tongueless voices of whispering waters—timid, blended melodies of uncounted centuries that here had sounded their glad chorus to all the mornings of the springtime since trees first grew and rains first fell, since mosses first floored the virgin valleys, and primal grasses climbed the fresh slopes of the newborn hills.

Mr. Chairman, that gives a vivid description of the battle field of Shiloh as it was on the morning of April 6, 1862. Sixty-two years have passed away. That ground is still untouched except by the hands of those who have erected monuments and laid off walks and drives in commemoration of the great struggle that was once fought there by the best blood of the New World. This field is 20 miles from the railroad; that is, it is 20 miles from Corinth, where the national cemetery is located, where the Federal dead are buried. About 8 miles of that distance is within the State of Mississippi. We charge nothing for travelling over that road, which is a highly improved road, but, unfortunately, after you cross the State line the balance of this road from there to the battle field of Shiloh is a toll road and owned by a private concern.

Every time a Federal soldier, every time a Confederate soldier, every time the wife, daughter, son, or relative of one of those aged veterans visits that historic spot to look upon the most beautiful battle field in all the world he must pay a toll for the privilege of traveling over this highway. I am informed that 60,000 people travel over that road every year. I have tried since I have been in Congress to get the Government to take this road over, and I have an amendment which I am going to offer to that effect. You Members may as well adopt it now, because if I stay in Congress this Government is going to prepare some way to connect those two national parks and make it possible for these old men and women to go there, prompted as they are by patriotism, without paying toll to a private concern. I shall offer the amendment at this time.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CABLE. Was the road constructed by this private corporation or by the State or county?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. CABLE. Has the State done anything at all with reference to constructing or improving the road?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not live in Tennessee. The State of Mississippi has one of the most highly improved roads in the country up to the State line.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. The road referred to is owned by a private corporation. The State has no rights in it. It is a turnpike of long standing.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, Shiloh was the greatest battle up to that time that had ever been fought on American soil.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Is there any other national battle field in this country where you have to pay a toll to get to it?

Mr. RANKIN. I have never heard of one. I do not believe that Members of Congress knew that, and when I made the statement in the House a year ago men on both the Republican and Democratic sides came to me and expressed surprise that this thing had gone on this long. Now we have two national highways crossing at Corinth—the Mississippi Valley Highway, extending from the Lakes to the Gulf, and the Lee Highway, running from Washington to San Francisco, over which thousands of tourists pass. They stop and turn aside, as a rule, and go and look upon these monuments which Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and other States, and also the Daughters of the Confederacy, have erected there to commemorate one of the greatest struggles that has ever taken place among Anglo-Saxon men; and yet everyone must pay tribute before he can get in and out of this great national reserve. I am going to ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the amendment offered?

Mr. RANKIN. I am going to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On page 87, line 18, strike out '$20,000' and insert the following: 'and for the extension of a park through the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, of a strip of land, contiguous to the park, 66 feet wide, to connect the Shiloh National Military Park and the Corinth (Miss.) National Cemetery; such land to be acquired along or near the present main road from the Shiloh National Military Park to the Corinth National Cemetery, located on the battle field of Corinth, the center of such strip to follow as nearly as practicable along the survey heretofore made by Park Engineer Thompson; and for the construction of a hard-surface road and necessary bridges along the center line of such strip from the park to the Corinth National Cemetery; and for the erection of historical markers along such strip to show the movements of troops and other matters of historical interest in connection with the Civil War Battles of Shiloh and Corinth; in all, $70,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended within the incorporated limits of the city of Corinth.'"

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation, not authorized by law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman from Kansas want to be heard first?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has stated his point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I do not care to be heard.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is an extension of the boundaries of this park, and involves, in my opinion, the same question that we had up on yesterday. This is land that is adjacent to this park, and we merely ask that it be extended by this strip in this way. I think the question was thoroughly gone into on yesterday—

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Do I understand under the decisions, and they are numerous, I believe, cited to the Chair by myself and others, that is only a continuation of a Government project?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the various decisions recited held that an amendment which was a continuation of a Government project authorized by law was in order.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, sir; especially where it was contiguous, where the land that was proposed to be purchased or taken over was adjacent to the tract already in operation. Now, on yesterday, or day before yesterday, on page 5189 of the Record this case was cited to the Chair by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's point is based entirely upon the theory that this land is to be contiguous to an existing park. Can the gentleman positively affirm that the land that he proposes to acquire would be a continuation by an uninterrupted strip of land?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would there not be places where a public road would intersect, where land in public ownership would constitute the highway crossing this proposed road, and hence the Government would not need to acquire title?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that that case has also been taken up, but I think the case was in point where the land they proposed to take was on the other side of the road, and the Chair held that the road was an easement. But, I will say to the gentleman, it will be no trouble to get a continuous strip of land extending from the Shiloh National Battle Field to Corinth National Cemetery.

The significance of this strip of land is this. On the night before the Battle of Shiloh on the 5th of April, 1862, Albert Sydney Johnson, one of the greatest soldiers of all time, with his army was camped at Corinth. They moved out this road, engaged the Federals at Shiloh Springs, 5 miles from Pittsburgh Landing, and drove them back to the river. Johnson was killed that afternoon. The next day reinforcements came in and the Federal forces under General Grant drove the Confederates back along the same line, toward Corinth. So this strip of land is to be along the way these two armies went and came, where markers may be placed as a part of this park in order that future generations may know what took place in possibly the decisive battle of the Civil War.

Now, as I said, a case was cited yesterday in point. I will not read it—I do not care to read all these decisions—where they were attempting to take over a piece of land where a road intervened, and they held that the road was merely an easement. Why, if that could interfere and stop these projects we would be hedged in by a network of roads all the time.

Some one has suggested that the size of this strip of land might have something to do with it, but it does not. Let me read from Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, pages 511 and 512. I read:

On February 19, 1901, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Clerk read this paragraph relating to the Hospital for the Insane:

"For the purchase, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, of not less than 145 acres of land immediately adjoining the present building site of the hospital on the south and extending from Nichols Avenue to the Anacostia River, to be acquired by condemnation or otherwise, a sum not to exceed $145,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. Marlin E. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, made the point of order that the expenditure was not authorized by law.

During the debate, Mr. David A. De Armond, of Missouri, called attention to the law of the preceding session, which appropriated for the extension of the hospital on "lands already owned by the Government or upon such suitable lands as may be donated to the Government within the District of Columbia for that purpose." As the hospital could not be extended on the land proposed to be purchased, he argued that the appropriation now proposed could not be in continuation of a public work.

The Chairman held:

"The law which the gentleman from Missouri calls to the attention of the Chair relates to the location of buildings used for hospital purposes, and declares that these buildings shall be erected upon land already owned by the Government, or that may be donated to the Government, in the District of Columbia. In the opinion of the Chair that does not militate against the power of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate a specific sum to acquire additional territory for the asylum. Now, there is a large asylum there that is furnishing accommodations for several thousand soldiers; and it is apparent to all that the land, as well as the buildings, is necessary for this great public purpose, and the Chair thinks that the point of order is not well taken. It is for the committee to say whether the entire 145 acres shall be purchased, or by amendment that number of acres shall be enlarged or decreased; but that it is in continuation of this great public object the Chair has no doubt, and therefore overrules the point of order."

Now, there is a case absolutely covering the point raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. Then, again, I read:

On February 22, 1907, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase additional land in the District of Columbia for the use of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for expenses incident to such purchase, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $25,000."

Mr. James Hay, of Virginia, made the point of order that there was no legislation authorizing the appropriation, saying:

"On page 430 of the hearings the superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane, in respect to the location of the land, says:

"The land is just across the road from our property, at the southeast extremity."

"Well, land across the road is not land adjoining land upon which the hospital is built, and therefore as it is not adjoining this land it is subject, in my judgment, to the point of order."

Mr. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, explained that the land was needed for extending the farm of the institution, and also that the road was a public highway.

The Chairman held:

"Assuming that the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, correctly states the facts in relation to the location of the land—and his statement is corroborated by what has been read from the hearings—and that he also correctly states the facts in relation to the highway being an easement upon the land and the abutters upon either side own to the center thereof, subject to the easement of the way, the Chair holds that the provision is not obnoxious to the rule, and therefore overrules the point of order."

There is a case entirely in point. The Chair properly held that the amount of land to be acquired had nothing to do with the point of order. If it was too much, it was within the discretion of the Committee of the Whole to reduce it; if it was too small, they could increase it.

Now, what have we here? We have the Shiloh battle field, owned by the Government of the United States. It is kept there as a park to commemorate that great battle. We have gone out and invited every State in the Union to place there monuments and markers where soldiers fought and fell. They have done so. Now it is shut off from ingress and egress. There is a road which will be famous for all time to come as the road upon which the two armies surged back and forth in the greatest battle ever fought on American soil up to that time.

They ask that this road be taken over and that markers may be placed there to show what happened, and that this road be provided to give the Government and the great American public ingress and egress, unhampered, that they may go there and look upon those monuments and catch an inspiration from the sacrifices made by those brave men 62 years ago. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is a continuation of this project, and that the amount of land in the strip that we ask for has nothing to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him some questions?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I will be glad to.

The CHAIRMAN. This park was established by law?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And the land referred to is contiguous?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a long strip, not very wide?

Mr. RANKIN. Sixty-six feet.

The CHAIRMAN. On both sides of the road?

Mr. RANKIN. Well, it is along the path on which the armies moved.

The CHAIRMAN. All the land proposed to be acquired is land over which fighting in that battle actually took place?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; either where fighting took place or where the armies moved in going to and from the battle. I am not exactly informed as to just how far back the Federal forces pushed the Confederates on the second day of the Battle of Shiloh, but I think they forced them back to Corinth—or they possibly fell back there to get water and other refreshments [laughter], but, I think, at least they went back as far as Corinth. My recollection is that they fought all the way back over this same road.

Corinth is a battle field also, as perhaps the Chair knows, and there you have this great national cemetery. At Tupelo, where I live, 50 miles south of Corinth, another battle was fought. Another was fought at Bryces Cross Roads, in my county. You gentlemen may learn some day that one of the most brilliant achievements in American warfare was shown in that battle of Bryces Cross Roads. The Federals killed in these two battles are buried at Corinth.

This strip of land connects those two parks, this national cemetery and the Shiloh National Park.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Was the limit of cost fixed in the act establishing the national park?

Mr. RANKIN. I can not say. The park has been there for some time. I will say one thing, and that is if you leave this question to the sentiment of the American people there will hardly be a dissenting voice. If you leave this proposition to the American people and let them understand it, it will carry by an overwhelming majority; I do not care what State you go to to try them out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I understand it is sought to make this in order by merely describing it as a strip adjacent to a work in progress. As I said the other day, it seems to me the present rule, as interpreted by the Chair and by a number of precedents, is a very loose rule; but if we are to amplify that by permitting the building of a road on the theory that this strip of land will eventually touch a work in progress it seems no limit can be had. You could run that road from Corinth to the North Pole under such a precedent.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The length of the road is a matter within the discretion of the members of the committee, and the gentleman does not think we could get a motion through here which would permit of this road being extended that far, although I admit you gentlemen provided for the building of a railroad nearly to the North Pole in Alaska. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not believe the members of the committee would consider a motion of that kind, and I am not discussing the merits of the question or how far it would go. But to adopt a theory which seems to be upheld by the precedents, that we will acquire land merely because it is adjacent to a Government reservation, would result in there being no limit whatever to such propositions. If you are going to extend that theory to mean that you can build a road provided it eventually touches this reservation, it seems to me there would be no limit whatever.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. My interest has been aroused by some of the gentleman's suggestions. In the Interior Department appropriation bill, in which I am interested, we have both national parks and Indian reservations. If the point made by the gentleman from Mississippi is upheld, then our committee has jurisdiction to bring in an item for a road, no matter how long it may be, as long as it finally hitches up with a national park or Indian reservation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Unquestionably, the only qualification being that it touches it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; it must eventually touch it.

Mr. RANKIN. The difference between that case and this case is that we are merely extending the Shiloh National Park in order to take in this strip of land, over which these armies fought. That is altogether different from merely going out and laying out roads.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's own theory would perhaps justify the extension of that road all the way to Michigan, because I suppose there were Michigan troops engaged in this battle.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course it would, unless the committee in its discretion shut it off. The Chair has held that the amount of land is not a question to be decided on the point of order, but is to be left to the discretion of the committee.

Mr. ALMON. I would like to make this suggestion. This national park was authorized by an act of Congress. It is incomplete. Did Congress ever intend that all that great expenditure at Shiloh on the part of the Government should be had and then the people of the Nation have no means of ingress to or egress from it? It is incomplete, and it is just as important that we have a way to get to it as it was to build it in the first place.

Now, my friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] said something about extending the road on up into Michigan. The amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] only provides for a roadway into another road. The Shiloh battle field is on the river, and there is no way to get to it except over this private pike road. This amendment simply provides that the Government, which developed and authorized the Shiloh National Park, provide a way for the American people to get to it from the Corinth, Miss., road a few miles away.

At Corinth, where there is another national park, there is a great national highway extending through Corinth from New York to San Francisco, and as the traveling public going over this great highway, from the East to West and North to South arrives at Corinth, they are unable to go to this national park, a few miles away on the banks of the Tennessee River. All this amendment provides is that the Government will open up a way to get to this park, so that the American people can see it.

If there is any doubt about it in the mind of the Chair, I hope the Chair will give the benefit of the doubt in favor of the amendment, because I believe that will be in accord with the wishes of the American people.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that in California we have some national parks, referred to by the gentleman from Michigan some time ago, and in each case out there the State builds the road up to the national park boundary. Now, why does not—and I am asking this for information—the State of Mississippi or the State of Tennessee build this road?

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer that. The State of Mississippi has built its road up to the State line, and if this part of the road were on our side, we would continue it on to the park. But this is "a condition and not a theory which confronts us."

Mr. BARBOUR. Then why does not the State of Tennessee build the road?

Mr. RANKIN. Well, I am not in Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is this to be said about the road in Tennessee—although it is not in my district—that it is privately owned, owned by a turnpike corporation, and it would be necessary to go through the procedure of condemning the road and taking it over under those circumstances.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is a common procedure and not an unusual procedure.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, just this one other thought: I believe that in legislating we ought to bear in mind the conditions surrounding matters pertaining to the subject as they exist to-day. This is an age in which the people of the Nation are traveling over highways more than ever in the history of this country. It is an age when the sightseers and when the home seekers have quit the Pullman trains and railroads and are traveling in automobiles. There are ten times as many people going into that section of the country to-day over the highways than ever before, and the importance of this road for that reason has been brought to the attention of the traveling public more than ever before, and the needs are greater than ever before. I believe we ought to take that into consideration as far as we can in a matter of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] was not as guarded in his remarks as was the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. It is apparent now that the purpose of this appropriation is to complete the Shiloh Military Park. The gentleman complains that Congress did not originally make as extensive an establishment as should have been made. I submit to the Chair if that is so, and it is the purpose of this amendment to create a larger establishment, a more complete establishment, than Congress had in mind when the original plans were laid, then this amendment is clearly out of order. Contiguous territory might be acquired for the original purpose, but not for a new purpose. This is evidently a new purpose. I am in sympathy with the object. I think if there is not a road leading to this military park, there should be a road acquired by somebody, either by the National Government or by the State government, but certainly it can not be done under the guise of an amendment to an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It appears on the face of this amendment that it is simply an extension of the Shiloh National Park. Shiloh National Park is a park created by the Government to commemorate the great battle that took place on this ground. On the line of decisions, referred to in a similar case yesterday, the Government can expand this park. The question arises whether the land to be acquired is for the expansion of the park. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] the land to be acquired is all land over which troops in this battle passed. If so, it can not be ruled out on the ground that it is not proper land to be added to this park for the original purpose for which it was established, much as the Chair is inclined to limit this principle to where the land to be acquired is a proper extension of the original purposes for which the Government work was originally established. It seems that the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi meets the requirement in this regard. Therefore, in accord with all the precedents that have been made, the Chair feels constrained to hold that the amendment is in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under this ruling of the Chair, would it be in order to build a road from Muscle Shoals to Washington?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a moot question, of course, but the Chair will answer it in this way. If under any Government work already authorized, it were decided to expand that work by acquiring contiguous territory reaching all the way from Muscle Shoals to Washington, then it would be in order, so far as the rules of the House are concerned, to construct a road over such Government property after it was acquired.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me from the reading of the amendment that it is simply a subterfuge to secure the construction of a road 20 miles in length under the guise of making an addition to Shiloh National Park. I do not think the House ought to legislate in that manner and I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that he is sadly mistaken. If you could leave this proposition to those Federal veterans of his own State of Kansas, those men from the State of Illinois who have erected one of the most beautiful monuments there I have ever seen, or those men from the State of Iowa that have a magnificent monument there, or of New York or Indiana or the other States—leave it to those Federal veterans who have gone there to view this ground, and they would say that this is one of the most just propositions that has been before this House.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Assuming that what the gentleman says is true, that a road should be built there, why ask the United States Government to build it? I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the State of Mississippi had built the road to the State line and there it stopped, and, of course, the State of Mississippi would not go any farther.

Mr. RANKIN. I would vote for it if it were in California. So far as I am concerned the Civil War is over, and I believe in commemorating the deeds of those men who fought 60 years ago for what they believed to be right, regardless of which side they were on, and I believe the American people, if they understood this proposition, would be practically unanimous in favor of it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. RANKIN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will not be a single vote on either side of this aisle against this amendment. I just want to say one other word. My good friend from Mississippi took occasion to tell how far the Shiloh battle field was from Corinth, but I want to tell you that you will all be going down to Shiloh before long. There is another very beautiful and very attractive place just a few miles from the battle field of Shiloh, on the same river. Probably you have never heard of it, but it is a place called Muscle Shoals [laughter], and next year, after the appropriation carried in this bill is adopted, the great Wilson Dam will be completed. My friends from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] are both, I feel sure, going to vote for this amendment, as I see that I have them to laughing. I say that when the great Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals is completed, 1 mile in length and 100 feet in height, with the water flowing over it and an artificial lake of 22 square miles above it and a roadway running over it as a part of the Jackson Highway and the Lee Highway, when you go down to Corinth just a few miles below there, you will all want to go to this great battle field of Shiloh. Now, do not let a single vote be cast against this amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman on the other side that my father was in the battles of Shiloh and Corinth and Iuka, and he was down there to help do what he thought was his duty, but I do not think that would be any reason for either him or me coming here and put through a piece of legislation, as you are trying to do now, on the theory that you are perpetuating the memory of that battle by any such procedure. If you want a road built down there, proceed in the orderly way and do not come in here and put it in an appropriation bill under the guise of making an expansion of a park by connecting it with a road that may lead clear to Muscle Shoals, according to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama. If you establish that precedent in this House, there is no reason why you could not build these roads not only 20 miles but 200 miles in length.

I do not know how far the prejudice of gentlemen on the other side is going to lead them in this matter, but I do believe that we ought to have some regard for the precedent you are going to establish with reference to procedure in the future. I sincerely hope that gentlemen will vote against the proposition, because it is not brought up in an orderly way, it is not the proper place for this legislation on an appropriation bill, and you have been fighting against that ever since the organization of this committee. We do not want to take up the question of building additional roads, but keep such legislation off the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I can oppose this amendment without subjecting myself to any charge of sectionalism, even though the expenditure proposed is in the South and my home is in the North. I voted recently for that great project at Muscle Shoals, something that had a real national importance, although its most immediate benefits are for the States of Alabama and Tennessee, and hence I do not think I can fairly be charged with sectionalism in my point of view, notwithstanding my opposition at this time.

I feel that while the proposed expenditure is of national interest, certainly of national interest as far as soldiers are concerned who fought there on both sides, the North and the South, but it is strange to me that after the Federal Government established a national military park in that section where the battle was fought, 30 years have passed since the establishment of the park and there is no evidence of any steps ever having been taken by the communities or by the States to provide a road to make that park accessible.

It is of national interest, and there is always a local interest as well, and it would seem that that would have led the State of Tennessee to construct a road to make this great national military park accessible. The gentleman's amendment looks harmless and has a patriotic appeal, while the gentleman's own personality gives it an added appeal; his amendment only calls for $50,000. What is he going to do with $50,000? Why, next year he will have a real parliamentary basis for his proposition, because next year there will be an honest-to-goodness work in progress. You can not buy 20 miles of road and build an improved highway there for $50,000. That is just a beginning. Next year he can come here for half a million dollars, and it will be in order. He will not have to make any bluff about completing the park, for they will be building a road.

A while ago we heard a good deal about the Mellon plan and the necessity of passing it without any amendment or any change. There never would have been any Mellon plan or any Garner plan or any Longworth plan if we had not had a Budget in the first place that cut the appropriations. Last year the estimates came in $125,000,000 below the appropriations for the then current year, and the estimates this year are $150,000,000 below the appropriations for this current year. This surplus is the basis for possible tax reduction and is the result of the Budget and the support that has been given to its reduction of estimates by this House. Now, if every time some one has a patriotic outburst of spirits finds a park that has been lost for 30 years and wants to bring it up into the outposts of civilization by starting a half a million dollar road comes in, and out of sentiment we overrule the Budget, take out $50,000 here and $100,000 there for something else, in a short time the money you are counting upon for tax reduction, that you are counting upon as a basis for tax reduction, will have been frittered away.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to obtain some information as to the ultimate expenditure for this project.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, as I said before, that so far as this road is concerned in the State of Mississippi I do not believe it will cost the Government a nickel. I think we would be willing to turn over the strip of land and let the Government have it if it takes our road.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman means that it would cost nothing to acquire the right of way?

Mr. RANKIN. If they take the right of way where the road is located, in my opinion it would cost nothing. Of course, I can not speak for the State of Tennessee, but my honest opinion is that if they acquire this road the State of Tennessee would be willing to help keep the road up. It is a privately owned road now which they are using.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the road in such a condition that it would require no improvement?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know whether this survey covers the road as it is now built or not.

I have understood that the people who own this privately controlled road have let it run down very much, and that 60,000 people go over it every year, old people as a rule, who fought in this battle, together with their families. They pay thousands of dollars a year in tolls. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Cramton] talks about our coming in here and asking for a large appropriation to carry on this project. I do not think it will cost any more to keep up this strip of land than it does any of the rest of the park. In fact, I think every man and woman in America ought to visit that battle field, or at least have an opportunity to do so, toll free.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Frankly, I do not quite understand the situation. How long is the road to be?

Mr. RANKIN. About 20 miles. Some one here says 18 miles.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much of that is in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. RANKIN. Possibly 10 miles of it is in the State of Tennessee and 8 miles in Mississippi.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the owners of this road are a private corporation?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is contemplated that the Government should pay them a certain sum?

Mr. RANKIN. Nothing of the kind is contemplated. If the Government wants to take over a strip of land these people will have nothing to do with it. The thing that we want is to give the American people a free road to Shiloh, where they have a right to go, and where we are spending money every year and have been for 30 years. The Government has already placed a few markers along this survey, of course on private property, to show where various events occurred.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman thinks that this present appropriation will be all that will be eventually asked for?

Mr. RANKIN. I rather think so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the gentleman will not come in next year with a proposition for more money?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I would say to the gentleman that I would not want to say that. I might place myself in the position of others in this Government, where it might be necessary to explain later.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to know whether this private corporation which now owns 20 miles of turnpike is going to turn this over to the Government for nothing, or, if we can not get the turnpike, whether the individual farm owners are going to permit their farms to be cut up and turn them over to the Government for nothing. Personally, I think in order to do what the gentleman wants, the Government would have to condemn either the 20 miles of turnpike or the numerous farms and pay for the land through which the right of way would go.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think so. I do not think the right of way would cost the Government a nickel. If they would not be willing to turn this road over to the Government, I believe the people along the way would turn the land over, and the chances are that the land which these armies went over is not all in the present roadway.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what it costs to build an improved modern road in the gentleman's country, but in my country to build a modern improved highway, including the cost of bridges over the streams, it amounts to not less than $50,000 a mile. That would make the cost of this project at least $1,000,000. I refer now to a modern concrete road.

Mr. RANKIN. The chances are that they would not want a concrete road.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It may be that this is a very meritorious proposition. I am not contending that it is not, but it is very apparent from this discussion that we do not know. I am sure that I do not know, and I have heard all of the discussion and know perhaps as much about it as any other gentleman who is now on the floor. This matter should have been brought up in the regular way. It should have been brought before the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department. When that committee was sitting the gentleman from North Carolina, I recall, came before the committee with a proposition to build a road to a military cemetery near the town in which he lives. The committee went into the matter thoroughly, took it up with the officials of the War Department, and inserted a provision in the bill for an appropriation to build the road. It may be proper for the Federal Government to build the road to which the gentleman from Mississippi refers and it may not. I think we ought to take time to go into the matter. As the gentleman from Michigan well suggested a few moments ago, if we are going to legislate under the present system, under the Budget system, let us stay with that system which has demonstrated its value. We should not legislate these appropriations on these bills here on the floor of the House with no opportunity to consider them. In another year the gentleman from Mississippi will have an opportunity to bring this matter before the committee in the regular way and the committee will have an opportunity to go into it. There is no hurry. Another year is not going to seriously affect the project. I think at this time the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. Barbour] I am wondering if it would be agreeable to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to present a substitute directing the Secretary of War to investigate and ascertain the facts and report to Congress before the next session as to what would be necessary and what would be feasible.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; I prefer to go ahead. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this subject close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has not yet expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. If this matter were taken up in the orderly way, I wonder if it would not be possible for the committee that considers it to ascertain the facts about what it would cost to buy this turnpike or to get a right of way through the farm lands and build the road, conceding that it is a meritorious proposition.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to make the statement that this turnpike provides a revenue of $10,000 a year.

Mr. RANKIN. I said I did not know how much, but there are 60,000 people who go there every year, so I am informed by the superintendent of the park.

Mr. BARBOUR. At 25 cents per capita that would be $15,000. If we have to condemn this road, that would be one element of damage that would have to be taken into consideration, and it is a considerable element. A property producing a revenue of $15,000 a year has very considerable value, and that expense will have to be incurred before we even start to build a road.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Five per cent on $300,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. Exactly; and that gives an indication of the cost before we even start to construct the road.

Mr. BROWNING. I will state to the gentleman for his information that a seven-passenger car can go through this on 40 cents, so the revenue would not be anything like what was stated.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know what the revenue is. I was giving an estimate as to the possible value of the road.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does not the gentleman think, regardless of the merits of building this road, that it would be a dangerous precedent to build this road simply on an amendment offered on the floor of the House without any committee attempting to ascertain anything about the facts of what it would cost? In most every State we have some kind of a Government reservation or cemetery, or something, where a Member thinks they would like to build a road.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that this Congress ought to know about these conditions. You have been appropriating money for this park for 30 years. You had a survey made for years. You ought to know the facts. Your people, just as the people in my State, are complaining about this situation, and I submit the facts are before you. There are maps for you to look at if you care to do so; and I submit that, having appropriated money for this park for 30 years and having kept up the cemetery at Corinth, with which this strip of land connects, for the same length of time—I submit that Congress ought to know something about the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I submit the gentleman from Mississippi did not have the floor; the gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not recognized the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from California had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. His time expired. The Chair intended to recognize the gentleman from Kansas, but in order to facilitate the Chair recognized a motion to close debate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be in the position of fighting the gentleman's road, but it seems to me we are embarking on a rather dangerous precedent. Now, as I understand it, it is the gentleman's amendment—

Mr. RANKIN. I offered it; yes.

Mr. TINCHER. And it was not submitted in any way to the subcommittee that has charge of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that when I came to Congress I introduced the bill. I was like most young Members of Congress; I did not know the rules very well. The bill was referred, I suppose, to the proper committee, but we got no action. Last year when this appropriation bill was up the gentleman will probably remember I made a little talk on this proposition, and a great many men on the gentleman's side of the House came afterwards and asked me why I did not offer the amendment, saying that they would have supported it.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to get some facts. The gentleman did not present it to the subcommittee, and he has not ascertained the cost of building the road from the War Department in any way or ascertained what the charges would be for this turnpike or the cost of obtaining right of way through privately owned land. I suggest this: If we adopt this amendment, we ought not to fight any Member's amendment who wants to build a road from or to a Government park or cemetery. I have the very kindest feelings for my friend, and I think last year when he argued this proposition it impressed me. I think the way would have been for him to introduce the bill and then follow it up to the committee, rather than offer an amendment on the floor, for Congress can not know as to what it is going to cost if we start on that policy. The gentleman spoke of the people being dissatisfied because they have not got the road. I suggest this would be embarking upon a line which would entail very much Government expense. The people of the country are dissatisfied with taxes. You are going to have Muscle Shoals, and that is going to cost some money and maybe do some good, but let us not build Government roads unless we find out something about what they are going to cost before we start. This is no partisan question or sectional question. There are as many miles in one section of the country as in another. There are Government reservations in all sections of the country. Members can offer amendments on the floor of the House and start a program and put the Government under obligation. If we start this road, to cost $50,000 a mile and $20,000 will only start it, it would be right for the gentleman to say the Government was obligated to finish the road.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Speaking about appropriations for a road, I want to call the attention of my friend from Kansas that one of his colleagues [Mr. STANLEY] recently offered an amendment on the floor—he never submitted it to the Committee or the Budget—to build a road in Kansas, 4 miles, at a cost, I think, of $30,000 or $40,000, and it was adopted.

Mr. TINCHER. I am not always on the floor. You start out with a 4-mile road, and then you bring in a proposition of a 20-mile road; and what will you do with a 200-mile road?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It never had been submitted to the Budget.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the gentleman from Kansas information as to what it will cost?

Mr. TINCHER. I did not attempt to consume the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WATKINS. You remember the other day when we western fellows attempted to get money for the improvement of a national park and appealed to the boys of the South, and we got the votes? The one situation is as meritorious as the other.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, if you are going to go on that policy of trading off the people's money in that way, it may be that we shall need the Mellon plan, and turn over the Treasury to the control of the Budget. If you are going to swap horses in that way, that may be found necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. RANKIN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, yeas 60.

Mr. RANKIN. I will ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. RANKIN and Mr. ANTHONY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 80, yeas 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ANTHONY. What was that vote, Mr. Chairman? I did not catch it.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighty ayes and 77 yeas.

Mr. ANTHONY. My understanding was that the vote was 70.

Mr. RANKIN. It was 76 on the first report. Then 4 more came in.

Mr. ANTHONY. My recollection was that it was an even 70. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Washington Monument: For pay of employees, $6,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Kansas for a moment, if I may, on this Washington Monument item. I want to ask the gentleman about the pay of employees, $6,000. Does that include the pay of anyone who sells a guidebook at the monument?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. There is no one employed for that specific purpose there, as I understand it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman state just how the guidebook is sold—the one that is sold there now?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the present guidebook is authorized by the Secretary of War to be sold by the Welfare Society. It is a cooperative society organized for the welfare of Government employees and the widows and children and orphans, and so forth. And the guidebook that is being sold is one that has been prepared by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. It is sold for 15 cents a copy, and that goes to the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How long has that plan been in operation?

Mr. ANTHONY. About a year, I think.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Prior to that time, I believe, there was a guidebook sold for which a lady had the concession, if I may term it that. I do not know under what arrangement it was sold.

Mr. ANTHONY. I presume the gentleman refers to the guidebook sold by Miss Emery?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The appropriation bill for 1909 contained a provision to the effect that no advertisement shall be displayed of articles of any kind, or any articles of any kind shall be sold in and around the monument, except by the authority of the Secretary of War.

This is a matter in which the committee felt it had no authority to take action either way, because the present law confers full authority on the Secretary of War, and any guidebook that is sold there is sold pursuant to his authority.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the guidebook sold by Miss Emery was being sold under the authority of the Secretary of War?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Secretary of War withdrew that permission?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is my information.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, as I understand it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He himself is the author of the book now being sold?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is correct. Either Colonel Sherrill or one of his assistants got the book up; I do not know which.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman this, whether there was any reason given as to why this privilege was withdrawn from Miss Emery and transferred to some one else?

Mr. ANTHONY. Colonel Sherrill stated to the committee that he made a recommendation to the Secretary of War to change the sale of the guidebooks from Miss Emery's book to the book to which the gentleman refers, for the reason that the price charged for the book previously on sale was too high, the new book being sold, I think, at about half the price; and for the further reason that the proceeds instead of going into private hands would go into the hands of this charitable organization that I have named.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was there any hearing given to Miss Emery on this question by the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. There was a hearing given Miss Emery. She came to individual members of the committee and was informed—I believe I told her—that it was a matter over which the committee had no jurisdiction whatever; but the committee did extend to Miss Emery the courtesy of a hearing, but intended that it should be an informal hearing, because it was understood that the committee had no authority to act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I notice, however, that in the hearings Colonel Sherrill was heard upon the question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, certainly. Colonel Sherrill is an official of the Government, and we desired official information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand, furthermore, that in the hearings, which the gentleman says were intended to be informal, certain statements were made by Miss Emery that possibly would have put this matter in a somewhat different light before the House. I was wondering why the committee did not have the hearing of Miss Emery published.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will state, for the information of the gentleman, that as far as the committee could see there was no information received from Miss Emery that would throw much additional light upon the question, but there was some personal recrimination in the statements which would not have been proper in the record in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand, of course, that under the rules of the House the Appropriations Committee would not have jurisdiction to legislate upon this question.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the reason the committee declined to go into it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But it does seem to me, this lady having had this concession over a long period of years, that when it was taken away from her and a very meager explanation put in the record her side of the case should, at least, have been permitted to appear in the hearings held before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I just want to supplement what has been said by calling the Chairman's attention to this fact: Colonel Sherrill contended that this Monument book which Miss Emery had prepared herself—she was the author of it and had had it printed—was the only thing of the kind that was sold there for profit. I want to ask the gentleman whether that is not incorrect? Are there not permitted to be sold there now ash trays to a value of $2, are there not hairpin trays to a value of $2, and other things of more than a nominal value? And was the colonel accurate in making that statement?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee has no knowledge of the facts the gentleman enumerates, but if such things are sold there they are sold entirely under the authority of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am reliably informed that they are sold there for profit now.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, they are not sold under any authority of Congress or of this committee.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am informed they are sold there under authority of the War Department. Now, I want to ask the gentleman something else. The gentleman said that the lady's statement was, in a way, an attack on Colonel Sherrill. Is not his statement, in a way, an attack upon Miss Emery?

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope nothing of the kind the gentleman refers to is in the record.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me call attention to what Colonel Sherrill said. He said there were a number of things under Miss Emery's contract "that were very unsatisfactory." Then he says they called on her to reduce the price of her book but "that she refused to lower the price." Did not this good woman deny that before your committee? Did she not say she would have been willing to reduce the price?

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman has not pointed out anything in Colonel Sherrill's testimony of a personal nature.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had a contract with the gentleman and he would make a public statement in a public hearing before Congress that there were things about my contract that were very unsatisfactory I would deem that as a kind of reflection upon the contract I possessed and I would deem I was not fulfilling my contract.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to assure the gentleman from Texas that the committee tried to be very considerate of and very courteous to Miss Emery.

Mr. BLANTON. I was very much surprised when I saw this statement in the hearings, because the gentleman from Kansas is usually very considerate of everybody's rights, and he is one of the most affable men in the House. But in view of the fact that it was a matter not before the House and was a matter with which your committee had nothing to do, why did the gentleman put in Colonel Sherrill's testimony and, so far as the woman's testimony is concerned, insert this paragraph in parentheses:

(Miss Emery appeared before the committee. Her statement was transcribed and left in possession of the clerk, but is not printed, as the matter to which it relates is one beyond the jurisdiction of the committee.)

Usually the distinguished gentleman from Kansas would have been fair enough to say, "Colonel Sherrill, as we will not put in Miss Emery's statement, we will not put in your part."

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that the reason the statement was eliminated was that a large part of it referred to questions of veracity between Miss Emery and Colonel Sherrill, in which the committee felt it had but little interest and no authority whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. That is usually the way. When the veracity of a colonel in the War Department comes in contact with that of an individual the colonel's side goes in and the individual's side stays out, even though she is a woman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Birthplace of George Washington, Wakefield, Va.: For repairs to fences and cleaning up and maintaining grounds about the monument, and for watchmen for the care of the monument and dock at Wakefield, Va., the birthplace of Washington, $400.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 90, line 21, strike out the figures "$400" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$15,300."

Mr. BLAND. Gentlemen of the committee, there was considerable discussion—

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the point of order comes too late. The debate had commenced, and I had spoken, I think, exactly four words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Kansas was not quite as alert as he might have been. Noticing that the gentleman was not on his feet and that the gentleman from Virginia had started to address the committee, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. There was considerable discussion a few moments ago about the construction of a road to a Government reservation. I am asking you now to consider the improvement and construction of a road on a Government reservation.

There was some discussion about the examination which had been made. I am asking you to consider an amendment upon the authority of an investigation that was made by the Chief of Engineers, an estimate of which appears in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1923 on page 2031. There will be found there this language:

Birthplace of George Washington, Wakefield, Va.: For repairs to fences and cleaning up and maintaining grounds about the monument, $15,000.

It is proposed to utilize the increase of $14,900 in the construction of a road within the reservation so as to provide a means of access to the memorial. The State of Virginia has recently completed the construction of a first-class road which touches the boundary of the reservation and it is proposed to make the memorial accessible to this road.

Now, listen:

At the present time visitors to the memorial are required to walk a distance of one-half of a mile from the road to the memorial—

And that walk is on a Government reservation.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the length of that road?

Mr. BLAND. About one-half a mile, so stated here. There is no road there now. The report goes on, "for watchman for the care of the monument and dock at Wakefield, Va., the birthplace of Washington, $390."

Permit me to say for the benefit of the committee that they have not had an opportunity to consider this item. I have not carried the matter before them. It did not come from the Director of the Budget. It did not reach the Director of the Budget because somewhere in the War Department it was kicked overboard. At the time and before the Budget was reported, owing to illness, I was unable to take the matter up further, but subsequently took the matter up with the Secretary of War. The proposition is regarded as entirely meritorious and the only excuse that is given is that it will unbalance the Budget to include this item at this time.

Now, gentlemen, the situation as I see it is this, and the situation as it exists is this: The Government has appropriated for the construction of a monument which marks the birthplace of George Washington. It has acquired 10 acres of property. In order to furnish access to this memorial it constructed some time since a pier at a cost of $15,000. The ice has swept it away. There is no pier there. There are only a few piles on the shore. It was never of any use. It was under the control of the Secretary of War. In order for a steamer to stop there a permit had to be obtained from the Secretary of War. When the passengers went ashore on the pier they were over 6,000 feet from the monument itself. Realizing that this condition was not satisfactory, the State of Virginia has acquired and built its road to the Government reservation. The Secretary and the Chief of Engineers have found that the sum of $14,900 is required in order to furnish reasonable access to this memorial. All that I am asking is that you shall carry this into effect and provide that the people shall have this access, that they shall not be required to get out of their automobiles half a mile away and walk up to this monument which marks the birthplace of George Washington. Why, gentlemen, it reminds me very much of a man who buys the birthplace of some of his ancestors as a memorial, and allows it to grow up in weeds, or some one who has erected a monument to an ancestor and allows the grave to be unkempt and to grow up in grass. I hope it will be the will of the committee to adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND. I want to supplement my statement by saying that a patriotic organization of noble-minded women and also some of the patriotic citizens of the country have formed an association purposing to acquire about 70 acres of land immediately adjoining the Government reservation. They expect to erect on that land a duplicate of the house in which George Washington was born. Just a short distance from the Government property, less than the distance from this place to the Senate Chamber, is the graveyard in which lie the remains of the father and relatives of George Washington. They purpose to acquire that, and this campaign will soon be on. People will be coming down to this section. Gentlemen of the Congress, I wish you to realize that you are only 100 miles from Wakefield. I extend to you an invitation to visit that place, and when you do I want you to ride up to this monument in your automobiles and not be required to get out and walk this half mile in the hot sun. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I presumed the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia was to build a road at the birthplace of George Washington, but from the wording of the amendment, they will not be able to build a road under it.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. In just a moment. Because the language of the paragraph is for repair to fences and cleaning up and maintaining grounds about the monument, and for watchmen, and so forth, so the mere increase in the item from $400 to $15,000 would not accomplish the purpose of the gentleman, and therefore I do not think the House should increase the amount.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. The Chief of Engineers evidently thought it would accomplish the purpose in reporting it in this way, and while I do not claim to be a parliamentarian, I want to submit that this is for the construction of a road on Government property and a continuation of a public work. It evidently being intended that there should be access to this monument.

Mr. ANTHONY. The engineer would find himself in a hole if he attempted to build a road with this legislative authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CALIFORNIA DÉBRIS COMMISSION.

For defraying the expenses of the commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893, $14,950.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This California Débris Commission seems to be a commission that was authorized more than 30 years ago, and I understand there is now no hydraulic mining at all. Does the gentleman have any idea how long this commission and its work will be continued?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee's information is that there is hydraulic mining and that there is work in progress each year.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. From the hearings it seems that all hydraulic mining has been discontinued, except as to debris that is already in existence.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was the statement that General Taylor made to us. He said, "There is very little hydraulic mining at the present time anywhere, but the debris from former hydraulic mining is being worked over," and that is the necessity for a continuation of the work.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Of course, I had no purpose of proposing an amendment, if there is a real need for the commission to continue. It looks as if there should be an end to this work some time. I am wondering if it is not one of these Government commissions which, once created, continue to run forever.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF ROADS, BRIDGES, AND TRAILS, ALASKA.

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of roads, tramways, ferries, bridges, and trails, Territory of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, as amended by the act approved May 14, 1906, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act as amended, $650,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That if an appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, shall not have been made prior to March 1, 1925, the Secretary of War may authorize the board of road commissioners to incur obligations for this purpose of not to exceed 75 per cent of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, payment of these obligations to be made from the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he would not accept an amendment striking out the proviso beginning in line 21. That proviso is a rather unusual item in an appropriation bill. I believe personally it is unnecessary at any time and that it is a very bad precedent to provide in an appropriation bill that if Congress fails to make a subsequent appropriation that the succeeding year they shall have 75 per cent of the appropriation provided in the bill.

There may be some unusual conditions in Alaska, but the fiscal year always runs to the 30th of June, and it is a rare occasion when this appropriation bill is not through well before the 30th day of June. And it does happen that for the next bill the next session of Congress is the short session ending on the 4th of March. There is every reason to believe that while the bill might not be a law by the 1st of March, it would be by the 4th of March.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman knows that in Alaska the working season is less than half of what it is in this latitude, and every other year it would be impossible to prosecute any work at all if they had to wait until Congress passed the appropriation bill, which might not be until June or July.

Mr. CRAMTON. I know there are some reasons for a different policy, but not this. The $650,000 provided for the fiscal year of 1925 is immediately available, and I can see a good reason for that. We have done that in a number of appropriation bills because of the fact the gentleman refers to. It is probable that the larger part of the $650,000 will be used in the coming construction season before the 1st of next January, but the proviso that the gentleman puts in this bill would not make a penny of the 1926 appropriation available before the 1st of July, 1925. That the 1926 construction period therefore would not be affected. They could not start their work on the succeeding year because of this proviso. So the committee is not helping the situation.

On the other hand, this matter of road building in Alaska is one that involves an important matter of policy. I am firmly opposed to any automobile road building in Alaska or the building of any monumental roads, and the building of automobile roads especially to parallel the railroad. There is an important function of the road building, and that is to act as feeders for the railroad. In many cases roads that do not cost very much to construct—trails—will be very valuable as feeders for the railroad.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Practically all the appropriations will be expended for the purpose which the gentleman states.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but the gentleman has no knowledge, no record, and the department has not committed itself, as to how the 1926 appropriation which is provided for in the proviso will be made. I understand—and I would be glad if the gentleman will inform me if I am not correct—I understand that Colonel Steece, who has been in charge of this work, has asked to be relieved from the Alaska assignment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that Colonel Steece has asked to be relieved, so we are to have a new management. There has been an increase in the appropriation. They formerly had not over $250,000, last year they had $400,000, and now $600,000. Mr. Chairman, I move that the proviso beginning in line 21, page 91, and continuing through the balance of the paragraph be stricken out, and I hope the gentleman from Kansas will see fit to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want again simply to suggest that the short session renders it very probable that the next appropriation bill for the Army will be a law before the 4th of March.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think that the observations made by the gentleman from Michigan are correct, and perhaps there is no real necessity for that language this year, but next year when there will be a short session of Congress there will be a necessity for it and it was thought by the committee best to write the language into the bill. But if it is objected to it may just as well go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between the said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation; and for the prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, for pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, crews, and office force, and for maintenance of patrol fleet and expenses of office, $87,250,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make an inquiry. Is there not a large balance that has been appropriated for rivers and harbors unexpended?

Mr. ANTHONY. The figures show that on January 1 last there was approximately $63,000,000 unexpended.

Mr. WATSON. In the event that the Rivers and Harbors Committee should, under the direction of the Secretary of War, authorize new projects, would it be necessary or would it be the policy of the gentleman's committee to make a new appropriation in a deficiency bill, or would there be sufficient in the Treasury to meet those expenses, provided they were within reason?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is intended that the current year's appropriation and the unexpended balance would apply to any authorized project.

Mr. WATSON. I have in view a project recently approved by the Secretary of War, that I understand the committee is going to authorize, which will cost approximately two or three million dollars.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is language in the paragraph which says "of such projects heretofore authorized," and if there was a new project authorized after the enactment of this bill, there would have to be new money appropriated.

Mr. WATSON. After the enactment of bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The act could make this money available.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment in order that I may get a little information from the subcommittee and not with a view of delaying the progress of the bill, however. I notice a part of this paragraph carries an appropriation for the survey of northern, northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and so forth, and then for the removal of the deposits in the harbor of the city of New York. Has that always been one of the activities of the engineering department?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; but it used to be carried in a separate bill, and was not a part of the regular river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The expenses incident to carrying on that work will, therefore, be taken out of the lump-sum appropriation of $37,250,000.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; but a very small sum it will be, however.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is the committee satisfied that $37,250,000 will be ample to carry on such improvements or new work as well as maintenance that may be necessary for the various projects throughout the country?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. We are so advised by the Chief of Engineers, saying that the maximum expenditure per month has been $4,500,000, and that with the unexpended balance on hand they expect to have at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1924, they can expend until the adjournment of Congress, on March 4, 1925, between $4,500,000 and $5,000,000 per month and still have money left; and it is on account of the short session of Congress, and that this covers only eight months' appropriation, that the amount can be reduced to where it is reduced.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is the reason we are carrying so small an amount as $37,250,000; we are appropriating for 8 months' work instead of 12. The next appropriation will be available at least by March 4, 1925.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And the committee understands that next session, during which you gentlemen will doubtless compose the subcommittee handling this proposition, we will have to carry an amount largely in excess of the one carried now.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. We were so advised by General Taylor, and agree with him that next year we will have to make a large appropriation if we carry this amount this year.

Mr. McDUFFIE. My reason for interrupting here is that I noticed the statement of the engineers, in addition to their annual statement, which the gentleman has inserted in the Record, based on an appropriation of $45,000,000, and another statement based on an appropriation of $40,000,000. Under the $45,000,000 appropriation certain amounts were to be expended at various places throughout the country where both new work and maintenance are being carried on, and under the $40,000,000 appropriation there are about 19 major projects omitted, in so far as improvement or new work is concerned.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I noted that.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And that would mean, as the gentleman will readily see, a slowing up of the work in so far as improvement is concerned. The gentleman will recall the testimony before the committee to the effect that some of these projects, proceeding at the rate we have proceeded during the last 10 years, will take many years for completion. One I recall it would take 100 years to complete, another 50 years, and another 30 years. It will take 10 years to complete all the projects as they have been outlined by the Congress and engineers if we continue to appropriate in an amount similar to the one we are carrying in this bill. If the engineers are satisfied and if this committee is satisfied that every project will be properly taken care of, and that the work will be done to the fullest capacity of the Government plants, nobody should raise any objection to the amount carried, and, as an enthusiast on river and harbor work, I do not feel, when it comes to the development of these projects, we should come before the Congress and ask for more money than can properly be expended.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman. I want to say that I am one of the river and harbor enthusiasts.

I believe in progress in this work as fast as we can, and I think there is some legislation now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of which I am heartily in favor.

It may not only require additional estimates next year, but will probably require additional funds to complete certain projects within a certain prescribed time by doing so much within a certain limit of time. I am heartily in favor of that legislation, and I am in favor of giving the necessary funds to complete—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Just to ask one question. Can the gentleman inform the committee to what extent the engineers are letting contracts for new improvements on projects?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean under this item or the Mississippi River Commission?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not mean the Mississippi River Commission. I mean to what extent is the engineering department authorized to let contracts rather than do it with their own equipment?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I understand under this item it is approximately 50-50. They have some equipment that is available to do certain kinds of work, and when they have that kind of work the Government does it itself, and whenever they have not the necessary equipment they let it by contract under this item, and it was practically a 50-50 proposition last year.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I thank the gentleman for the information and the assurance that the next appropriation would be necessarily larger than this one. I have been assured by the engineers that they would endeavor to take care of improvement work wherever possible with the amount this bill carries. Of course, I favor speeding up work on all projects not yet completed. It is economy on the part of the Government to do so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am quite disappointed about the line of inquiry and replies that have just been received in this recent colloquy. I was in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that the reduction made at the request of the engineers from $44,000,000 to $37,500,000 was indicative of a future saving on this river and harbor work. Instead of that, according to the gentleman from Iowa, a member of the subcommittee, it is only indicative of an increased appropriation in the near future. I believe in this lump-sum appropriation, doing away with the log-rolling that we had formerly in river and harbor items, and in the exercise of the judgment of the Chief of Engineers and his efficient staff in the selection of projects upon which to continue this river and harbor work. But I do call attention to one outstanding fact. In my experience on the River and Harbor Committee I always found that the judgment of the engineers was not placed upon the merits of a project. If Congress ever has adopted a project, that ends it so far as the engineers are concerned in the estimates to Congress.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I call attention to the fact that in our hearings there is a lot of testimony in reference to projects that are to be abandoned. The Chief of Engineers was asked to put in a list of the projects on which he thought no Government funds should be contributed in future years. That is put in there with the idea it would suggest to the Rivers and Harbors Committee that if they passed legislation those projects no longer require Government funds.

Mr. TREADWAY. Have they presented any showing that up to the present time that was simply a suggestion—a gesture?

Mr. McDUFFIE. For the gentleman's information I will say the last river and harbor bill discontinued several projects.

Mr. TREADWAY. That may be the case. I do not say they have always been continued, but I say almost always, and when General Taylor, whose testimony is so valuable now, was before the Rivers and Harbors Committee at the time I was a member it was very difficult for him ever to say that, upon the merits of a particular case that Congress had ever adopted, it should be abandoned. In other words, he put it up to Congress to continue if it had ever once gone into the law, and that is one great objection to river and harbor work. I am in hopes that the result of this new method of making lump-sum appropriations on some projects not meritorious, where commerce does not show the benefit to the Government it should and where money so invested is practically buried—absolutely buried—as I say, I was in hopes this new system meant a reduction in river and harbor work and a concentration where it was contemplated there was a material benefit from it. I am afraid that situation has not developed with the expectancy of saving the Government's money.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will say to the gentleman, as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and having attended the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, I have not noticed any hesitancy about the engineers to tell the committee, both the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the Committee on Appropriations, whether the project was meritorious or not.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think undoubtedly they have learned from experience they ought to suggest abandonment of projects having no benefit to commerce.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the Chief of Engineers, in fact, the Engineer Department, composed of splendid intelligent men—

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree with the gentleman fully on that point.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think they are perfectly sincere, and I think the committee is entitled to the benefit of any information they may have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the statement that General Taylor not being sufficiently free in recommending the discontinuance of projects, I wish to cite two instances that have come under my observation where his judgment in that respect has proven to be right.

There are two small rivers in my district that have been locked and dammed. The people on one of those rivers a few years ago asked for the abandonment of the improvement on that river, and I took up the question here for the purpose of having at least one lock and dam discontinued. But when I undertook to get General Taylor's views about it he said, in substance, that if the question had been raised a few years before he might have recommended the abandonment, but now the tonnage through that lock had so increased that if it were not there now it should be built.

Then, on the Green River, which is locked and dammed, the people there asked for the discontinuance of one of its locks and dams. But General Taylor showed us that the commerce had grown so rapidly through that lock that we could not get along without it.

So, just as I said yesterday about the fortification of the Panama Canal, these people in the Army, who are trained for that special purpose, know more about these things than we do, and at last we are not only compelled but glad to take their advice on such propositions.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has not stated the situation exactly as I understand it with respect to the action of the engineers in relation to heretofore approved but now unworthy projects.

I represent a harbor district on Lake Michigan. It has a number of harbors, very important ones, with a large amount of commerce; I mean harbors constructed and maintained by the Government. There are other harbors on the shore of the lake within the limits of my district that were constructed by the Government because their business at one time warranted their construction, and they were maintained for years, harbors which, without the direct action of Congress, have been abandoned, and on which the Corps of Engineers positively refuses to permit the expenditure of money.

I have talked with the Chief of Engineers and other gentlemen of the corps to see if it was not possible to revive their interest in one or two of those harbors on which they recently have not been spending money. They speak of the situation from the legal standpoint; that every project, before money can be expended on it, must be approved by Congress, and that a project having been approved remains on the approved list, and that the engineers may be justified, as far as the law is concerned, in spending money on it. But their policy is that if the business transacted at a harbor is, in their judgment, so little or the prospect of increase of business is so bad as not to justify further expenditure of money, they refuse to spend it.

I know of several instances—more than one, anyway—in my district where they have taken this course. Without anything having been done by Congress to revoke, as you might say, its former action and take those harbors off the approved list, the engineers have refused to continue the expenditure of money.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. You will notice by the hearings that practically the whole information that has been developed here has been on the tonnage basis, showing that they had to have tonnage on the river or harbor in order to have improvements.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes, tonnage; tonnage or early prospect of substantial tonnage only is taken into consideration and determines whether or not a harbor shall be constructed, and also whether or not its maintenance shall be continued. I know of no more practical, skillful, and reliable men than are the officers in the Corps of Engineers. I say this after 17 years of experience with them. I know whereof I speak.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts said also that he has been hoping for a reduction of river and harbor appropriations. While I usually wish to see appropriations reduced, so much work remains to be done, so many worthy projects are yet to be taken care of, that I am not able to see where there is reasonable prospect of a reduction of appropriations, and, in my judgment, there ought to be no reduction. There is and always has been criticism of river and harbor appropriations. They are criticized in Congress and elsewhere. Newspapers carry big headlines and lengthy stories of criticism of the Congress for making these appropriations, and call them "pork barrels" and wasteful; worse than that. I can not remember all the words of criticism so often used to characterize the action of Congress in making river and harbor appropriations. The fact is, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, no appropriations of money in our Government, for any purpose whatever, are safeguarded as are appropriations for construction and maintenance of river and harbor projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Many years ago, before the creation of the Corps of Engineers, or before the duty of investigating, constructing, and maintaining harbors, as that duty is now performed, was imposed upon them, interested parties of a locality wishing an appropriation for harbor construction or maintenance would appear before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and make representations, the facts in relation to which could not possibly be learned by the committee, and appropriations were made as the result of influence, and money was used at many places and in large sums on unworthy projects. Some 25 years ago the duty of recommending improvements, caring for them, and asking for suitable appropriations was laid upon the Corps of Engineers, since which time, as a result of their able, conscientious work, always free even of suspicion of improper influence, money from the Federal Treasury has been expended with remarkably favorable results.

The history of river and harbor improvements for 25 years last past justifies the statement I made a moment ago, that no other appropriations of the Congress are safeguarded as are river and harbor appropriations.

It is contrary to law for the engineers to look at a proposed project until Congress has passed a law expressly directing them to do so. When such a law has been passed one of the corps is sent to make a preliminary examination, practically to determine whether or not the matter is worth looking at, and if the report is unfavorable no further attention is given to the matter. If the result of the preliminary examination is favorable, a detailed and intensive investigation is made by one or more of the engineers, usually by a district engineer, whose report and recommendation pass to the division engineer, from him to the board of review here in Washington, composed of six men of long experience and training in river, harbor, and waterway work, in these different kinds of work, at different places throughout the country. The report and recommendation of the board go to the Chief of Engineers for his careful consideration, and, in answer to the law passed by Congress directing the investigation, he sends his report and recommendation to Congress. If the Chief of Engineers shall make an unfavorable report, that project is as dead as King Tut himself. I speak by the card, gentlemen; not one dollar of money has been spent during the last 20 years, more than 20 years, on any kind of river and harbor project anywhere in the United States contrary to the recommendation and without the entire approval of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to correct an impression which I think is in the mind of my friend from Michigan, namely, that I was criticizing the skill and efficiency of the Corps of Engineers. On the contrary, my experience with them has been such that I can commend them most highly, and I would not want the gentleman to think that I, in any way, criticize their engineering work. Just the reverse of that is true.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I did not take what the gentleman said as being in criticism of the engineers, because I know that anyone who has ever had anything to do with them must commend them for their ability and efficiency and for the character of their work.

When a proposition comes before a committee of the Congress involving an engineering project and the expenditure of any considerable amount of money, what would be the natural and proper thing for that committee to do? Why, they would demand that the proposition be examined by an engineer before anything by way of legislation be done concerning it. Now, that is exactly what is done respecting every river and harbor project in this country; it is in practice and effect referred to the Corps of Engineers.

I was speaking of the result in case the report or recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is unfavorable. I say it is dead, and I know whereof I speak, because some of the budding or lagging, waning projects in my district—so determined by the engineers—have died by that route. If the report and recommendation is favorable, it becomes the duty of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to examine it, and if, after such examination, the committee shall agree with the Chief of Engineers, it prepares a section to become a part of a bill to be reported to and enacted into law by the Congress. That is, it must become law that this river, harbor, or waterway project, as the case may be, shall be constructed in accordance with the detailed report and recommendation of the Corps of Engineers, and until such a law approving and adopting the project is placed upon the statute books no engineer or other official of the Government is authorized or permitted to pay further attention to it, nor may money for construction or maintenance be appropriated.

I have no more time to speak of these matters. They are important and interesting. If I had more time, I could, I believe, give the House some real information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 92, line 24, strike out "$37,250,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. McKEOWN. Gentlemen, I believe in river and harbor legislation, but why not conserve the Treasury a little bit as we go along. We have a lot of ships now lying in the harbors with no cargoes to carry. Do you want to go ahead and deepen the harbors so that they may have more room in which to rest until cargoes are available?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. We want to deepen some of our harbors and make them passable so that we can give these ships more cargoes to carry.

Mr. McKEOWN. Well, the gentleman has the New York City Harbor, the waters adjacent to New York City—the northwestern lakes, and Lake of the Woods.

Now, here is a proposition where you are talking about helping out rivers and harbors in an Army appropriation bill. As I say, you have a lot of ships lying in the harbors with no cargoes to carry. You are talking about economy, and yet you are putting $37,250,000 into this bill for river and harbor improvements at a time when the shipping interests of the country are here asking that $25,000,000 be loaned to them. That being so, why do you not save $12,500,000 of that amount so that you can lend it to these shipping people who need the money right now in order to survive?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Has the gentleman any rivers and harbors in his district?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; but notwithstanding the fact that I have no rivers and harbors in my district, I have always supported river and harbor legislation, because I believe that when you have the proper facilities for carrying on shipping internally you will save enormous amounts to the people who produce the great wealth of this country by reason of their having facilities to carry their products to the seaboard and to foreign countries, but there is no use wasting money.

Mr. ABERNETHY and Mr. McDUFFIE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield first to my good friend from North Carolina.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the gentleman know that the Chief of Engineers recommended something like $41,000,000 and the committee cut down that recommendation to $37,500,000? Does not the gentleman think that is saving money?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that I want to pay my respects to the proposition of appropriating money for the Army.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This is not for the Army. This is for the nonmilitary activities of the War Department.

Mr. McKEOWN. It is to be used by the engineers of the Army, and I will say this to the gentleman: That if the Congress of the United States were to organize a business men's committee to control the appropriations made to the Army and to the Navy, we would save millions of dollars in this country and get some results from it. I tried four years ago to pass an amendment to the Army bill requiring these men in the Army to be placed out in the great business institutions of this country, where they could learn some business sense. You can inspect their reports and it is an outrage the way they spend and squander the people's money, and yet we stand up here and turn it over to them and say it is all right. I say that half of them need guardians in handling the money of the people of this country.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would like for the distinguished gentleman to tell the House how we can get the products of our fields and factories to the markets of the world without harbors.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that the harbors are not in the interior part of the country, and if you will get the rivers so you can haul the produce down to the harbors then you will have it at the harbors.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is what we expect to do.

Mr. McKEOWN. And there will be plenty of time to do it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. You can not improve the rivers without money.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why does the gentleman want to deepen or improve the harbors when the harbors are now full of ships with nothing to carry? That is what I want to know.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? We have got to carry these increased cigarette cargoes now.

Mr. McKEOWN. I hope the gentleman will not be facetious with me, because I am in earnest about this matter.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I can not yield further until I say this: The gentleman, who is the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee, knows—and every man on the Military Affairs Committee knows—that if the Army officers were detailed into great business concerns, where they could learn business methods, we would not have this talk about auctioneers, and we would not have this talk about the waste that is going on in these departments. This Government ought to detail these officers to some establishment where they can learn some business sense or else create a business committee to handle the appropriations turned over to them by the Congress. The officers of the Army are as fine men as there are in the country, but they have never had any business training.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up any of the time of the committee and I did not want to take up this time, but this is the proposition: The money that is turned over to the Army and to the Navy is turned over to as good men as we have in the country, but they have just about as much sense about spending money as the Congress has about spending money, because we demonstrate every day here the fact that we are good fellows and it is a good cause, and we let various matters go through.

Now, gentlemen, I say that this is what you have got to do: I do not care how much of a budget you create, you are eventually bound to do this one thing—either train our officers in business or establish a business committee in Washington to control and approve the contracts entered into by the Army.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. Did the gentleman vote a few moments ago for this proposed road down in Tennessee?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes, sir; I did [laughter], and I will tell you why I voted for it. I voted for it because I thought it was an outrage to have a monument or a park set aside by the Government when you could not get into it without paying for it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does the gentleman think that the method in which that matter was handled measured up to his ideas of business?

Mr. McKEOWN. It does not measure up to my ideas of business at all. If I was going to do it as a business man, I would first have appropriated enough money to make a preliminary survey and would have ascertained what it was going to cost, and then would have come back to Congress and asked for the money to be appropriated.

Mr. CLEARY, Mr. LOZIER, and Mr. HULL of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you know that I have not been much of a talker at this session, but I do like to talk on a subject that I have some knowledge of if I talk at all. I do think when these subjects come up gentlemen ought to confine themselves more to the subject before the House and less to other things that contribute to it.

Now, about rivers and harbors it has been my whole life work. From the time I was a boy until the present I have been engaged in that business. We now have 50 barges running all around New York, up the rivers and sounds, and I have had a lot of experience in it. I have spent several years on the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I know General Taylor well, and he is a fine gentleman. But the engineers can not always tell what is required. The engineer's business is to figure it out and locate it properly. The business man's idea is to get deep water and carry the freight low because he has deep water. I will give you an illustration. We have a lot of barges that carry from 1,000 to 2,000 tons. We go up Long Island Sound, go into Bridgeport, into New Haven, where they have deep water, and we carry freight for 50 cents a ton. But if we go up into Jersey, where there is only half that much water, where we can carry but half a cargo, we have to have twice that sum. And so it is in the gentleman's country up in Lake Michigan. If he can load a vessel full depth, 25 feet of water to Buffalo, he will carry his freight much cheaper. The cheapest transportation in the world is water transportation on the upper lakes. They carry iron ore from the upper lakes into Buffalo at a less rate of freight than any other place in the world, because of water transportation. Everybody who has thought of it knows that the thing that built up New York City was water transportation on the Erie Canal before rail transportation. So that with our experience wherever you give them plenty of water they will carry cargoes at a very low freight rate which will benefit commerce and all the people concerned.

Talk about reducing this amount from $37,000,000 to $25,000,000, there is nothing this country can do to develop itself better and with more benefit to the people, manufacturers as well as consumers, than to give them plenty of water in the ports and channels where the material is carried. [Applause.] There is nothing on earth so cheap as water transportation. When you go over the railroad you are wearing out the rails, you are wearing out the wheels; but when you go over the waterway you are wearing out nothing; you go along without any friction.

[The time of Mr. CLEARY having expired, by unanimous consent he was given two minutes more.]

I have carried some years ago, when things were a little cheaper, cement at 7½ cents a hundred—$1.50 a ton—from New York City to Chicago. No railroad could do it for two or three times that amount. And so in every kind of water transportation we can carry the freight cheaply if you give us the water. In shoal water we can not do it. I converted General Taylor and got him to enlarge Jamaica Bay. He did not believe in it. So we business men can sometimes convert the engineers. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care for more time except to say, for God's sake, wherever you save money do not cut it off the river and harbor bill. [Applause.] Whether it is the Mississippi River or the Missouri River or the Lakes or the ocean ports, give them plenty of water and you will get cheap transportation. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LOZIER to the amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Strike out the sum of $25,000,000 and insert $40,000,000.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the American people are losing an opportunity to promote the commercial and industrial supremacy of the Nation in the markets of the world. We are spending too much of the time in this House in discussing many little trivial matters while in our shortsightedness we are leaving unconsidered and unsolved great problems of national development upon which the commercial and industrial supremacy of our country depends. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THREADWAY], for whose great ability I have a profound respect, in substance says, "Let us not expend any more money upon our rivers and harbors until the commerce and tonnage thereon have been developed and increased to justify the expenditure of public funds." I ask the gentleman how he expects to develop the tonnage on our inland waterways or in our harbors until the facilities have been provided for carrying the traffic and transporting that tonnage? A few decades ago when the Pacific railroads were projected there were men in the Congress of the United States—men in the State which the gentleman so faithfully and ably represents—who claimed that it was foolish to build railroads across the western plains, mountains, and deserts where there were but few inhabitants and no commodities to be hauled, and that no profitable traffic could be built up, and that in 50 years the tonnage and income would not justify the expense necessarily involved in the construction and operation of these great arteries of commerce.

In Lafayette Park, South St. Louis, stands a monument erected in honor of Thomas Hart Benton, who for 30 years so ably represented Missouri in the United States Senate. The heroic figure of this outstanding, forward-looking statesman faces the west, and the index finger on his uplifted, outstretched arm points toward the setting sun. Below is the inscription, "There is the east; there is the road to India." With these words he began his memorable address in introducing and advocating the bill for the construction of the first Pacific railroad which would link the Atlantic and the Pacific and open up a vast region of inconceivable natural resources and productivity. Benton had vision; he had faith in the future; he could visualize the oncoming events. He saw the tremendous development of the West that was inevitable; he appreciated the boundless domain and inconceivably great potential wealth of the plains, mountains, and even the inhospitable deserts; he sensed the inexhaustible resources and foresaw the phenomenal development of that vast empire stretching from the Father of Waters to the Golden Gate; he realized the imperative necessity of developing the latent resources of those limitless regions in which a benign Providence had deposited wealth and treasure far exceeding the riches of India and Peru. In fancy, he saw the wilderness transformed into a region of surpassing beauty and usefulness. Where solitude then reigned supreme "Old Bullion" in fancy heard the hum of wheels, the clang of forges, the murmur of mills, the rattle of industry, and the roar of commerce. With the advent of the railroads he realized that the wonderful potentialities of this far-flung region would be rapidly developed until it became the center of great wealth and the seat of a mighty civilization.

He did not wait until commerce and traffic had grown to such magnitude as to justify the building of the railroads, but he insisted that the railroads be built in order to furnish an instrumentality by which the traffic could be handled. He insisted that the traffic could never assume worth-while proportions without the railroads were first built to handle the traffic, and if the railroads were constructed development, tonnage, and profitable traffic would follow as inevitably as night follows day.

He realized that transportation was the open sesame—the magic word that would unlock the inexhaustible resources and priceless treasures of the Golden West and transform that then inhospitable domain into a region of marvelous productivity. This great commoner was a dreamer whose dreams were well founded and based on eternal verities.

There was no commerce of such magnitude at that time as would justify the building of the Pacific railroads. They were projected across the continent, through regions which at that time offered practically no traffic or commerce. Benton and those who cooperated with him were looking into the future. They were building not for that particular year, decade, or generation but for all time. They sensed the tremendous and inevitable development of the romantic and slumbering empire stretching over plains, deserts, and mountains to the placid Pacific. They also realized that in the coming century the major part of the world's commerce would be on the Pacific and on its shores. Suppose Mr. Benton's appeal had gone unheeded; suppose the American people had at that time listened to the argument that the railroad should not be built until the commerce and traffic had been sufficiently developed to afford a profitable return on investments from the beginning; what would have been the result of such a short-sighted policy?

It was General Frémont, "the pathfinder," the husband of Jessie Benton, who aggressively supported the empire-building, history-making, epoch-marking plans of Senator Benton for the building of the Pacific railroads. In discussing this project General Frémont in substance said: "Europe now lies between the United States and Asia, but if we build the Pacific railroad America will lie between Asia and Europe and be in the pathway over which the richest commerce of the world will flow in ever-increasing volume." Time and experience have demonstrated the wisdom of Benton and Frémont, and how grateful the American people should be that they did not wait until traffic and commerce developed before they advocated the building of the Pacific railroads.

Now, how do you expect tonnage to develop on our inland waterways until they are improved and made navigable so that boats and barges can operate on them? We must make them navigable before sensible business men will invest their money in boats and other equipment for river traffic. Some men argue that there is not sufficient traffic on our inland waterways to justify the expenditure of public funds in improving traffic conditions. Those who oppose channel control, bank protection, and the maintenance of a navigable channel say to us, "Build up your tonnage and traffic and then we will improve the rivers." I say, and all thoughtful, sensible men say in reply, "Make our inland waterways navigable and there will be an abundance of tonnage and traffic." Of course, the river traffic is comparatively small, because under present conditions it is impossible to safely or profitably navigate our great rivers. Those who insist upon the river traffic being developed before the rivers are made navigable are like the fond mother who insisted that her son should not go near the water until he had first learned to swim.

We must all recognize the unpleasant fact that the railroad systems of this country are gradually breaking down and every year becoming less able to satisfactorily transport our ever-increasing tonnage. I mean by this that their facilities to properly carry and expeditiously transport the traffic of this Nation are being overtaxed and strained almost to the breaking point. In other words, the traffic is rapidly outrunning the ability and facilities of the railroads to handle it. The traffic and tonnage is increasing much more rapidly than the equipment and facilities of the railroads. Our commerce is growing by leaps and bounds, while there is comparatively little increase in the carrying capacity of our railroads. It is inevitable that there will be an ever-increasing spread between our traffic and the facilities of the railroad companies to handle that traffic.

It is the height of folly for the American people not to avail themselves of their inland waterways, because these great arteries must inevitably furnish the instrumentalities by which the surplus tonnage of the Nation will be carried in after years. We are neglecting our great inland waterways, which are the greatest gift of a beneficent Providence to the American people. If improved, these rivers will supply the deficiencies of our railroad transportation systems. Properly developed, they will tremendously increase our inland transportation system and reduce freight charges on heavy commodities. Their development and intensive use can not be construed as hostility toward the railroad systems, because they supplement the railroad service and supply facilities the railroads can not possibly furnish.

There should be no hostility on the part of the railroads toward a comprehensive system of inland-waterways transportation. Nature has set no limitation on the carrying capacity of our inland waterways; and, on the other hand, there are many regions, cities, and communities not touched or accommodated by river traffic. So it follows that our inland system of waterways will relieve the pressure on the railroad transportation systems, particularly for heavy and slow freight. River traffic will release thousands of cars for tonnage that can not be profitably carried by water. So these two transportation systems can be operated harmoniously and profitably side by side without rivalry or profit-destroying competition.

I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown]. I am tired of hearing talk about "pork-barrel legislation," when anyone who will study the transportation question in this country knows, or at least should know, that every year the tonnage and traffic in the United States are increasing by leaps and bounds, and every year the facilities of the railroad companies to expeditiously transport the tonnage are becoming less and less. It is only a question of a little time until the railroad facilities of the Nation will be wholly inadequate to handle our ever-increasing traffic, and we should use the inland waterways and the great harbors of the Nation. We need to develop our rivers and harbors, not only to handle our internal commerce but as instrumentalities by which we may reach out and obtain a part of the commerce of outlying regions. Within 25 years the major part of the commerce of the world will be in the Pacific Ocean and on its shores, and we should make provision to get our part of that commerce, because there is where we are to obtain a very considerable part of our wealth in the future. In the history of every nation there comes a time when its people can no longer profitably trade exclusively among one another or depend primarily on internal development. Our people will soon realize the necessity of reaching out into the markets of the world not only to develop our own commerce but to get our proper portion of the wealth of the world.

Those who oppose the development of our internal waterways and harbors are, in my humble opinion, shortsighted, and may I say, lacking in an appreciation of the fundamental economic laws and the immutable processes by which commerce functions. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Now that the House has been swept off its feet, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, now that Members are coming in, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it in order where an amendment reduces an amount in an appropriation bill by an amendment to that amendment to then increase the amount beyond the amount set out in the bill?

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEOWN. I object, unless I can have five minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I move that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I spoke at some length some time ago, but I wish to give you some figures to show you gentlemen who have no conception of the facts—and I say that advisedly and kindly—the immense traffic carried on the Great Lakes. We have all heard of the Suez Canal, and it is a wonderful feat of engineering and a great waterway. Last year there passed through that canal 4,345 ships. Last year through the Panama Canal there passed 3,967 ships. Last year, during the 7½ months of navigation, through the St. Marys Canal, connecting Lake Superior with Lake Huron, there passed 22,000 ships. Last year there was carried on the Suez Canal 23,545,000 tons and on the Panama Canal 19,567,000 tons, or a total for the two canals of 43,112,000 tons, and they operated full 12 months of the year. Through the St. Marys Canal there was carried in 7½ months last year 91,379,000 tons, or two and a quarter times as much as was carried through both these great world-famed canals of which we hear so much. You may say the ships passing the Suez and Panama locks are of much larger capacity than ships passing the Soo locks in St. Marys River. Yes; larger, but not much larger, as appears by the fact that 8,312 ships at the Suez and at Panama carried 43,112,000 tons of freight, whereas 21,975 ships passing the Soo locks carried 91,379,000 tons.

And that waterway, the St. Marys River, and its wonderful locks is only one of the great waterways of the Great Lakes. Through the Detroit River there passed during 257 days of navigation last year 25,000 ships, more than six times as many as passed through the Panama Canal during the entire year, and nearly six times as many as at the Suez. Those were real ships, great ships, many of them carrying more than 12,000 tons of freight.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used two and one-half minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If those 25,000 ships had been equally distant from one another, one would have passed the city of Detroit every 15½ minutes of the entire 24 hours of each day of the season of navigation—257 days. Am I not right in saying that these two waterways—St. Marys River and the Detroit River—are the greatest waterways in the world? They are maintained by the Corps of Engineers with a portion of the money appropriated by an intelligent and liberal Congress.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the figures given by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] are correct, because he is very thorough; but if the figures are correct, it is proof in this case that you ought to reduce this appropriation, because they are hauling the tonnage up there now without this money, and if they are hauling it without this money, what are they going to do if they have this money?

Mr. CLEARY. I just want to suggest to the gentleman, to go in the Record, that the gentleman is talking about one spot in this great country. There are thousands of spots.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand this, gentlemen, that President Coolidge said the other day—if he is correctly quoted in the newspapers—that we are appropriating too much money. If it is so, why not start here now—there is no better time—and cut out this $12,500,000 right here? You will not hurt anybody or any of these projects. I will go as far as anybody in giving money honestly needed to be expended upon the development of the rivers and harbors of this country for commerce, and I say to you gentlemen now, with the country in the condition it is and with the Treasury in the condition it is now, we ought to cut out this $12,500,000, and if they need it next year, give it to them. Why, gentlemen, we learned a lesson in the war when they came in here with the airplanes, appropriating millions of dollars before you could use one-tenth of it, and that led to extravagance, and when you appropriate money that is not needed it leads to extravagance, and I ask you in the name of economy, cut out this item and reduce it to $25,000,000 and you will do some good by that action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"] The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. McKEOWN) there were—ayes 8, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation, $350,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question. I would like to ask the gentleman for what does he understand this $350,000 can be used?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It means the surveys of new projects that are adopted by the Rivers and Harbors Committee in case additional legislation is passed by the Congress, and for any surveys that have not been made on projects that have heretofore been authorized by Congress, or a resurvey of projects.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman understand this is confined to navigable streams, or nonnavigable streams and navigable streams both?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. On river and harbor improvement. Mr. HUDSPETH. Could it be applied upon nonnavigable streams? For instance, let me ask the gentleman this—

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I can answer the gentleman. Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to get an answer.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If I want river and harbor improvement in my district or a place there, I go before the Rivers and Harbors Committee and ask them to put in their bill a direction to the Chief of Engineers to make a survey, and they may go to the place and look it over and in doing so they use a few dollars, and that expense and similar expenses are paid out of the $350,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That does not answer my question. The information I would like to get from the gentleman or some member of the committee is this: Suppose, as it does, the Rio Grande River changes its course, sometimes overnight. In some instances it cuts a banco, a considerable portion of land, in Mexico.

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if a portion of this money could be used for making a survey of that stream or for dredging, you might say, in order to relieve the overflow and prevent further cutting. The Rio Grande goes through very alluvial soil, and in many instances it has changed its channel overnight.

Mr. MADDEN. No part of this money can be used for any purpose except where the survey has been specifically authorized by Congress.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This does not say so, I will say to the gentleman, and the Government, I will say to the gentleman—

Mr. MADDEN. It says "authorized by law."

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman that there was a survey made a year or two ago on this stream. I do not know what fund it was taken out of, but it was made by the Secretary of War.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was out of a fund similar to this.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That was last year. Now, I take it that my colleague, Mr. GARNER, is as much interested as I am in the matter, because we represent the entire Rio Grande. I would like to know whether or not a portion of this fund could be used for making a survey where the Rio Grande has changed its course?

Mr. MADDEN. It could not be done unless a special bill was passed. There may have been a preliminary survey.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That replies to my question; either a preliminary or a final survey.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Was your survey made with a view to developing navigation?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; it was made for the purpose of discovering where the land was, also as to advisability, as I understand, of preventing future overflows and as to exact location of land, whether in Mexico or in the United States.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Was it done in accordance with an act of Congress?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No act of Congress was specifically passed, as I recall. I think I did get an authorization for the War Department to make a survey on the rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It could not have been made out of this fund, then.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Was that made out of a river and harbor appropriation by the War Department?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It was made by the War Department. It could be taken out of this fund. My friend and colleague sponsored a bill recovering some Bancos, and I assisted in its passage. It is necessary to have some fund to which we could go.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the War Department could send an officer out anywhere to make a preliminary survey, but he could not make a complete survey, such as those that are covered in this bill, without authority of law. As I say, the War Department could send an engineer to any place to make a preliminary examination, but he could not make a complete survey without authority of law. The gentleman would have to go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to get special legislative authority to expend any money on this river.

Mr. HUDSPETH. A preliminary survey is all that is needed to determine where the land is. But what I want is money available for a survey to determine what is necessary to protect the country on this side from overflow. The gentleman thinks a preliminary survey could be made out of this appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence: For pay of commissary sergeants, commissary clerks, porters, laborers, bakers, cooks, dishwashers, waiters, and others employed in the subsistence department; food supplies purchased for the subsistence of the members of the home and civilian employees regularly employed and residing at the branch, freight preparation, and serving; aprons, caps, and jackets for kitchen and dining-room employees; tobacco; dining-room and kitchen furniture and utensils, bakers' and butchers' tools and appliances, and their repair not done by the home, $353,460.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the final figures on line 22 of page 95, "$353,460," and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$411,740."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 95, line 22, strike out the figures "$353,460," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$411,740."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on last Saturday I detailed something of the condition at the National Soldiers' Home, and especially the Central Branch at Dayton, Ohio, which we now have under consideration. Under the present standard I showed that they had pared down the subsistence of the veterans there until they were feeding the ordinary members, the ordinary soldiers, not those in the hospital, on the basis of 26 cents a day.

This appropriation, as suggested by the committee and incorporated in the bill, cuts off 3 cents more a day from not only the subsistence of the ordinary members of the soldiers' home, but all along the line of those in the different hospitals.

I want to call your attention to the different classes of subsistence in these hospitals. We have three different classifications. On page 4763 of Saturday's RECORD you will find a comparative table which I submitted showing the lowest maintenance anywhere in the United States, so far as I can find, of inmates in any public institution compared with that of the Central Branch of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio. The Veterans' Bureau is the lowest I know of. They there expend 64 cents a day for their general maintenance of those in the hospitals, while at the Central Branch of the Soldiers' Home we expend 34 cents a day for the men in the hospitals.

Now, because my time is so limited, I want to jump to the extreme cases. In the tuberculosis hospitals, where we have hope they may get well, we are now feeding the men on 55 cents a day, as compared with 88 cents a day in the hospitals of the Veterans' Bureau. I understand that the common jail at Milwaukee feeds its prisoners on 90 cents a day, and that the jail at Dayton, Ohio, allows 70 cents a day.

I want to call your attention to a letter which I incorporated in the RECORD. I want to call your attention to a report made upon the petition signed by 152 of these boys of the World War who are confined in this tuberculosis hospital. I want to call your attention to the letter, which was written after I had sent an inspector there from the Veterans' Bureau, who reported that the complaint was justified. I wish you would all read over the letter, or a portion of it, which was written to CLINT COLE on February 19 of this year, in which this is stated:

I try not to complain on that score. But when we come to this home because we must, certainly we can expect the Government to give proper treatment. No doubt they are paying for it, but we are sure as h— not getting it. If any tuberculous man or woman can live, let alone get well, on the food they serve, I would like to see him. All eggs are cold storage. Have very bad odor and taste, not to mention looks. No butter or crackers part of the time. Poor milk. Sauerkraut, bologna, corned beef, and the like. Boiled potatoes and beef every meal. Nothing seasoned. The dishes and pitchers are often dirty.

And that was after I had an inspection made and a promise that the standard would be changed and raised. But that can not be done under the appropriations which this House has been making.

Now, this committee is seeking to economize, and thinks that because this soldiers' home management has economized so well it can keep on doing better and better, and finally feed our veterans on sawdust and ashes. I spoke to the chairman of this subcommittee, and he said to me, "I am informed that the managers of the soldiers' home do not understand the conditions, and that there are going to be 40 per cent of the World War men withdrawn from the soldiers' home hospitals during the coming year." I went directly to see General Hines, and twice within the last two days he has told me there is no foundation whatever for that statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER.

Mr. MUDD appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to my remarks made this morning on the grasshopper pest I ask leave to attach a letter from the department on that subject, which was sent to me by one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCHAFER, for one week, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. BRAND of Georgia, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DRANE, for an indefinite period, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLUM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 2625. An act to detach Jim Hogg County from the Corpus Christi division of the southern judicial district of the State of Texas, and attach the same to the Laredo division of the southern judicial district of said State.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I have followed with considerable interest the debate on the pending bill appropriating funds for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1924. I have endeavored to consider every item in the appropriation bill on its merits, having in view the best interests of our Nation. I can not escape the conviction that the bill appropriates a much larger sum than is reasonably necessary for the efficient operation of the War Department, and in a number of particulars I shall vote for a reduction of the appropriations recommended by the committee. One thing is certain, we must devise ways and means by which the expenditures of our Army and Navy Departments may be reduced, because their present cost is exceedingly burdensome. I do not want to advocate any policies which will endanger our national safety, but on the other hand I am unalterably opposed to the maintenance of a large Army and Navy. I do not believe that there is any national emergency which requires excessive appropriations for this purpose.

I find myself in full accord with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], which provides that no part of the funds appropriated by this bill shall be utilized for the pay of any officers who may recruit or enlist any boy under the age of 21 years without the written consent of the parent or guardian. In other words, enlistment officers receive compensation for securing the enlistment of boys in the United States Army. It has become quite a practice with these enlistment officers to go over the country, get in touch with young and inexperienced boys, and by misrepresentations induce these boys to enlist in the Army, without giving the boys an opportunity to consult with their parents, and without securing the consent of the parents or guardians. Many of these boys do not realize what they are doing and are swept off of their feet by the glowing representations made by the enlistment officers, and often the parents have no knowledge of what the boy is doing until after he has been enlisted and inducted into the Army.

If adopted, this amendment will put an end to these officers going over the country persuading boys under 21 years of age to enlist in the United States Army without first having obtained the consent of the boys' parents. I for one do not believe that the United States Government, in times of peace, has any moral right to take into the Army any boys under 21 years of age unless the consent of the parents to such enlistment has first been obtained. There is no national emergency that justifies this practice. It is a well-recognized fact that many boys are induced to enlist in the Army by highly colored representations as to the nature of military service and while their minds are so immature as to prevent them from exercising sound judgment in a decision of so much importance to them and their parents.

Under the laws of every State in the Union minors are incapable of making a valid civil contract, and all such contracts may be repudiated by the parents at any time and disaffirmed by the minor when he reaches the age of 21 years. Moreover, the parents are entitled to the services, society, and companionship of their children until the children reach the age of their majority. The parents have a greater interest in their children than the Government or anyone else. The parents know the capacity, inclinations, disposition, and in-intellectual and temperamental peculiarities of their boys. Parents are in a better position than anyone else to decide what is best for their boys and to determine the question as to the influence enlistment in the Army may have on the future of their sons.

The Government should not in any case enlist a boy until the consent of the parents has been obtained. The whole future of the boy may be injuriously affected by his enlistment.

The trouble comes largely from the viewpoint of the military men. They see the proposition only from one standpoint. They have an astigmatism that blinds them to the rights of the parents or the welfare of the boys. The average enlistment officer sees in the boys only units out of which a company or regiment may be formed. All Army officers look at every proposition through military spectacles. With them the supreme consideration is "the good of the Army." I do not challenge the loyalty and honesty of the Army officers, but I do say that there is something in the military atmosphere and environment that breeds an autocratic disposition, causes the professional soldier to lose sight of the rights of the individual and to magnify at all times the interests and welfare of the Army.

If this amendment is adopted it will put a stop to the officers going over the country and persuading inexperienced boys to enlist in the Army, because these officers will hereafter know that if they secure the enlistment of minors without the consent of the parents they will not receive any compensation for their services. I therefore earnestly urge that this amendment be adopted.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 29, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. YATES: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 162. A bill to amend the act establishing the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma; with an amendment (Rept. No. 392). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER: Committee on the Judiciary. H. J. Res. 184. A resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 395). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HULL of Iowa: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5477. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to sell surplus electric power generated by the power plant at Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.; without amendment (Rept. No. 393). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEHLBACH: Committee on the Civil Service. H. R. 8202. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof; with amendments (Rept. No. 394). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: Committee on Foreign Affairs. S. J. Res. 76. A joint resolution authorizing the maintenance by the United States of membership in the International Statistical Bureau at The Hague; with amendments (Rept. No. 396). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2169. A bill to amend in certain particulars the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 397). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (S. 85) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 8071) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Murphy; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 8282) to authorize the removal of the Aqueduct Bridge crossing the Potomac River from Georgetown, D. C., to Rosslyn, Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHREVE: A bill (H. R. 8283) to provide longevity pay for officers and enlisted men, other than the Regular Army, serving under orders of the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 8284) to provide for restoration of the Old Fort Vancouver Stockade; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 8285) to amend paragraph (3), section 16, of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 231) directing a census to be taken of bales of cotton now held at various places; to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. ALLGOOD: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 18) providing for a joint committee on the improvement of the ventilation in the Senate Chamber and the Hall of Representatives, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEERS: A bill (H. R. 8286) for the relief of Mary C. Fisher; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8287) granting a pension to Mary A. Egolf; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHINDBLOM: A bill (H. R. 8288) granting a pension to Ida Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 8289) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Thornburg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FREEMAN: A bill (H. R. 8290) granting a pension to Clifford C. Fisk; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8291) granting a pension to Mary Gaffney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8292) granting a pension to Lena Pratt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8293) granting a pension to Henry J. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 8294) for the relief of Edward B. Sappington; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 8295) for the relief of Ben D. Showalter; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8296) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Enderle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLER: A bill (H. R. 8297) for the relief of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KIESS: A bill (H. R. 8298) for the relief of Byron S. Adams; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 8299) granting a pension to Rosa E. Stephens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 8300) for the relief of Caroline Kuhlman and others who have suffered losses on account of the land being destroyed and washed away by the Missouri River at a point adjacent to Little Missouri Bend, Missouri River, State of Missouri; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAJOR of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 8301) granting an increase of pension to Byron W. Jacks; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: A bill (H. R. 8302) granting an increase of pension to Malinda Suggs; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2063. By Mr. BLOOM: Petition of citizens of New York City, N. Y., urging the passage of the equal rights amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2064. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of Robert P. Worren and other residents of St. Clair County, Mich., urging favorable action on the game refuge bill (H. R. 745); to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 29, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, whose name is our hope, whose service is our joy, whose love is our support, whose redemption is our eternal life; all honor, glory, and praise be unto Thee both now and ever. Open the fountains of mercy and wisdom, and clothe us with righteous energy and Godly virtue. Everything that concerns the strength and progress of the Nation or the broad interests of mankind depends upon the moral and spiritual measure possessed by Thy children. In Thee O Lord do we put our trust that good fathers, pure mothers, obedient children, just masters, and honest servants may more and more enrich society and save the world. Hallowed be Thy name, O Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAIM OF E. W. COLE FOR A SEAT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Elections, No. 2, submitted a report on the claim of E. W. Cole for a seat in the House of Representatives as Representative at Large from the State of Texas.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2168. An act for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis;

S. 1929. An act to refund to Clinton G. Edgar income tax erroneously and illegally collected;

S. 1790. An act for the relief of Herman O. Kruschke;

S. 350. An act to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department;

S. 1499. An act to promote the safety of passengers and employees upon railroads by prohibiting the use of wooden cars under certain circumstances;

S. 81. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington;

S. 362. An act for the relief of Frank Grygla;

S. 763. An act for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros.;

S. 606. An act for the relief of Orin Thornton;

S. 2399. An act to provide and adjust penalties for violation of the navigation laws, and for other purposes;

S. 2299. An act to validate the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918, and of rental and subsistence allowances under the act of June 10, 1922;

S. 2450. An act to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1894;

S. 2146. An act to amend section 84 of the Penal Code of the United States;

S. 2147. An act to complete the construction of the Willow Creek ranger station, Montana; and

S. 2148. An act to empower certain officers, agents, and employees of the Department of Agriculture to administer and take oaths, affirmations, and affidavits in certain cases.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1316. An act for the relief of William R. Bradley, former acting collector of internal revenue for South Carolina; and

H. R. 6623. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 to the bill (H. R. 7449) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2168. An act for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1929. An act to refund to Clinton G. Edgar income tax erroneously and illegally collected; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1790. An act for the relief of Herman O. Kruschke; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 350. An act to authorize the transfer of surplus books from the Navy Department to the Interior Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 1499. An act to promote the safety of passengers and employees upon railroads by prohibiting the use of wooden cars under certain circumstances; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 81. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Lexington; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 362. An act for the relief of Frank Grygla; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 763. An act for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 606. An act for the relief of Orin Thornton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2399. An act to provide and adjust penalties for violation of the navigation laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 2299. An act to validate the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918, and of rental and subsistence allowances under the act of June 10, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2450. An act to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1894; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2147. An act to complete the construction of the Willow Creek Ranger Station, Mont.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 2148. An act to empower certain officers, agents, or employees of the Department of Agriculture to administer and take oaths, affirmations, and affidavits in certain cases; to the Committee on Agriculture.

ADDRESS OF HON. T. W. PHILLIPS, JR.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address delivered before the Men's Bible Class of the English Lutheran Church and representatives of Bible classes of other communions of Butler, Pa., by Hon. T. W. PHILLIPS, JR., a Member of the United States House of Representatives, as follows:

PRINCIPLES.

The invitation to address the Men's Bible Class of the English Lutheran Church of Butler, Pa., and representatives from Bible classes of other communions is an honor which I greatly appreciate, and I shall not transgress upon the proprieties of the occasion by introducing partisan politics. Furthermore, my devotion to the church and my loyalty to the state forbid me from attempting to compromise any church or any organization of any church through political activity or alliance. History teaches that the church can not as an organization enter politics without lessening its spiritual influence and without inviting disaster to the state. Nothing could be further from my thoughts and from my sense of the eternal fitness of things than to attempt by word or act to bring the church into politics or lean upon the church for preferment in politics, for standing in society, or for benefit in business. I am interested not in what I can get out of the church but rather in what I can put into the church.

I desire to assist the cause of religion by teaching faith, forbearance, and forgiveness, and by warning against fanaticism, which is conceived in superstition, nurtured on bigotry, and developed by intolerance. Since the dawn of history religious fanaticism has been the fruitful source of most horrible persecutions, enormities that have disgraced humanity. The pagans offered human sacrifices; the Mohammedans converted with the sword; the Jews crucified Jesus; Christians, so called, in turn tortured Jews, infidels, and each other. Even to-day religious discussion is inimical to friendship. While it is axiomatic that although two who differ may both be wrong, they can not both be right, yet so all powerful is the tyranny of training and tradition that many never attempt to reexamine with open minds the religious or political faith of their fathers. As a corollary to my attitude toward religion, I can truthfully say that I am not in politics with a desire to extract anything from it, but with the hope that I may contribute something to it. Otherwise I would be a slave to sentiment, and my position would be determined by pressure rather than by principle.

Religion is one of the greatest forces in human nature, but, unfortunately, it may be true or false; it may beautify or blemish; it may instill love or engender hate; it may inspire art or instigate atrocities; it may excite the loftiest emotions or obliterate every semblance of reason; it may lead high up on the mountain of clear vision or deep into the valley of superstition.

The "blood of the martyrs" may be the "seed of the church," but the martyrs obviously could not be the progenitors of succeeding generations; hence we are all handicapped by our heredity, for we have too much of the blood of the persecutors, the survivors, and too little of the blood of the persecuted, the exterminated. The first few years of our life was provincial in the extreme. We were surrounded by rigid family idiosyncrasies, by standardized social customs, and by religious prejudices, all of which created an environment, an atmosphere which we accepted as a matter of course and had no more thought of analyzing, of questioning, of criticizing it than the air we breathed. Our inborn intolerance and fanaticism therefore was augmented by our early life and education. Fanaticism and provincialism are enemies of diversity and individuality. Diversity and individuality produce progress; uniformity obtained by suppressing and discouraging individuality causes stagnation and decay.

That man has formidable handicaps is attested by the infinite toil and untold sacrifice connected with the slow rise of his several civilizations, also by their short duration and their rapid decline. That human government presents a real task is evidenced by the early history of the Israelites, the governing of whom seemed to tax the ingenuity of the Almighty. Morals, right living, and a spiritual concept of religion may be instilled through teaching and by example, but apparently can not be enforced and made permanent by legislation or edict, for otherwise a reign such as that of King Josiah, who destroyed the idols and slew all the priests of the high places, would have permanently regenerated the kingdom and secured for the people the undisputed and permanent control of their ancient heritage.

Under the beneficent administration of the judges there were no State taxes; the laws or rules of conduct were simple and therefore easily and equitably administered. "In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes." The people demanded a king. The kingdom developed along the lines of Asiatic despotism, with governmental agents or spies, high taxes, and official extravagance. The kingdom fell, but the now servile people submitted to a multiplicity of rules, laws, and interpretations which, according to Peter, became a yoke "which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear."

Our Government is based upon a Constitution prepared with great deliberation by exceptionally able men, who benefited by the experience of Israel, Greece, Rome, France, and England. In the beginning our laws were prepared with precision and enacted only after careful consideration. The early legislators tried to follow Jefferson's maxim, "The best governed people are the least governed."

We, however, demand laws, more laws, and still more laws. A Pennsylvania colleague told me that a good lady in his district could not understand why there is so much lawbreaking and suggested that a law should be passed against it. The various States enact from 10,000 to 15,000 laws per year. We have sumptuary laws, class laws, and spite laws. We have Federal, State, and municipal judges by the thousands, detectives and spies by the hundreds of thousands, and employees by the millions. We pay over $7,000,000,000 per year in direct and indirect taxation, much of which is expended for the privilege of being governed, overgoverned, and misgoverned; all of which is not sufficient, for we insist upon having Senate investigating committees, House investigating committees, special investigating committees, beyond whose reach there is nothing, not even the private telegrams of the President. These investigating committees are little short of a "star chamber" or a "court of high commission" long since abolished in England. They are in effect courts of inquisition with power to summon anyone upon whom suspicion may rest or about whom an anonymous letter has been received. Witnesses are not protected by rules of evidence, and testimony irrelevant to the subject of inquiry may be introduced. Such a court is prosecutor, judge, and jury and is removed only one step from a mob which is prosecutor, judge, and jury and also executioner. Soon there will be nothing sacred, nothing confidential between priest and parishioner, doctor and patient, lawyer and client.

Under the leadership of Athens, when individuality was not suppressed by law or custom or education, intellectual development reached a plane never before equaled, never since excelled. Sparta enforced uniformity, for "he who did not reprove a fault that was committed in his presence and showed not his just resentment of it by a verbal correction was adjudged equally culpable with the guilty." Sparta left no literature and contributed nothing to future civilizations.

After the Asiatic spy system had been imported into the Roman Empire, Gibbon says:

"These official spies, who regularly corresponded with the palace, were encouraged by favor and reward anxiously to watch the progress of every treasonable design. Their careless or criminal violation of truth and justice was covered by the consecrated mask of zeal. The progress of the inquiry continually offered new subjects of criminal persecution."

In 1780 Edmund Burke said:

"A mercenary informer knows no distinction. Under such a system the obnoxious people are slaves. In this situation men not only shrink from the frowns of a stern magistrate but they are obliged to fly from their very species. The blood of wholesome kindred is infected. Their tables and beds are surrounded with snares. This species of universal subserviency, that makes the very servant who waits behind your chair the arbiter of your life and fortune, has a tendency to degrade and abase mankind, and to deprive them of that assured and liberal state of mind which alone can make us what we ought to be."

Due, no doubt, to her liberal leaders and her colonial experience England became less oppressive, and either as a cause or coincidence the British Isles are far more free from crime than Germany, based upon pre-war statistics, where autocratic powers were exercised and tyrannical methods in vogue, and contrasts with the United States, where we seem to have a hit-and-miss—usually miss—method of dealing with crime. For instance, in 1922 there were only 28 murders committed in London, having a population of 5,000,000; while in the District of Columbia, having a population of 500,000, there were 38 murders, indicating that our Capital is 2,000 per cent more murderous than the British capital. During some years the total number of murders committed in the United States approximates 10,000. We are having entirely too much crime, too much lawbreaking of all kinds. Evidently there is something wrong with our heredity, our environment, our education, and our Government, because it must take a combination of several unfavorable conditions to produce such results. Heredity can be improved, environment made more wholesome, education conducted on a higher plane, and government made more respectable and therefore better respected. Good government is important, is essential for proper development, for it has much to do with health and happiness. It can encourage thrift and discourage the spendthrift, or it can destroy capital and create chaos. It can make it easy to do good and difficult to do wrong, but it never was intended to take the place of the home, where character should be formed, where honesty should be taught, and where honor should be instilled.

While no one can define metes and bounds for laws and state positively where salutary laws cease and harmful legislation begins, yet we can point out principles that should be followed and policies that should be avoided. Laws should be few, fair, and enforced impartially. Penalties should fit the offense. By attempting to make a felony out of a misdemeanor we lose our sense of proportion. The lawbreaker or criminal is a human being usually capable of reason, able to make comparison, and arouse resentment in his family and among his friends. If, therefore, he is subjected to violence or to severe punishment, punishment unmerited by the nature of the offense, both he and his friends feel that society should, and if within their power will, be made to suffer and pay for what they consider outrageous injustice. If laws are to be respected, they must be respectable laws, enacted by sincere and respectable representatives, enforced by respectable officials in a firm but respectable manner.

Theoretically all laws should be enforced or repealed. However, neither common sense nor competition prevail in the management of government, as is the case with business corporations, whose rules as soon as antiquated are discarded, and regulations that prove detrimental are changed immediately. We have and probably always will have laws that the people will obey only when and where it has been decided that they are conducive to the interests of society. Many laws are generally unknown; still more are unnoticed; some are kept to be revived and enforced in times of disturbance or upon other proper occasions; other laws may grow obsolete although never formally abrogated. No great harm can come from the resurrection of obsolete laws unless their enforcement is undertaken by an official possessed with a zeal akin to that of a crusader or in case a wave of religious hysteria sweeps over a community. Matters of this kind are regulated by popular sentiment. The official will not take the initiative in enforcement unless backed by public sentiment, and the private informer will be deterred by expense, technical objections, ridicule, and contempt. When public sentiment crystallizes around any law it will be enforced, and it is therefore not only unnecessary but may result seriously if officers, spies, or private informers are permitted to profit from the assessment or collection of fines. Such a system results in false charges and frame-ups, depraves the informer, and creates resentment.

If the doctrine that governments "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" is correct, and this is the American political philosophy, then it follows:

First. That government should be administered so as to promote the good of all the governed.

Second. That government should be administered so that it will be possible and easy to discover the best interests of the governed.

Third. That adequate provision should be made for the free expression by the people of their wishes.

Fourth. That when their wishes are made known they will be heeded by those in power. In such an extensive country, embracing a cosmopolitan population, having diversified interests, general good can be promoted, information secured, wishes expressed, and assurances given best through the mediums of responsible political parties. The replacement of party government by bloc government involves the substitution of government by minority groups for government by the majority of all the people. Party government implies government by consent. Bloc government is incipient sovietism and will lead to minority coercion.

The action of the state or government in a civilized community shapes itself into the threefold functions of legislation, judicature, and administration, and the complete separation of these three functions marks a high point in social organization. In a simple state of society the same officers discharge all the duties which we divide between the legislator, the administrator, and the judge. The whole question as to the sphere of government may be stated in these two questions: What should the state do for its citizens, and how far should the state interfere with the action of its citizens? There is a general presumption against the interference of government which is only to be overcome by very strong evidence of interest. Therefore the province or range of action of government should be clearly divided between essential powers or those that are absolutely necessary and constituent or subordinate functions which are not absolutely necessary for the self-preservation of the state but are always exercised to greater or less degree in modern states.

Essential powers of any government are those which are necessary in order to maintain a state as a sovereign independent body politic. For a state to maintain its independence and sovereignty it is absolutely essential that it should obtain sufficient means and exercise sufficient authority to not only protect itself from foreign invasion but also to maintain law and order within its domains and to protect all its citizens in their legal, their constitutional, their inalienable rights. While it is true that the essential powers of government may be exercised wisely or willfully, economically or extravagantly, there should be no question as to their being exercised; in fact, those in authority are morally bound, legally bound, and oath bound to maintain the essential powers of government and have no right to exercise discretion, except in a limited way, in regard to their application. That there is or can be such a thing as essential powers is evidently not generally understood, for otherwise lawlessness, which is largely due to the failure of our legislative or executive representatives in the Nation, in the various States, and in the municipalities to uphold the essential powers of government, would not be so general and so rapidly on the increase. If our Nation is to remain a free and sovereign State, the essential powers of government must be maintained at all hazards, regardless of cost.

The constituent or subordinate functions of government, while non-essential to the existence of the state, are important factors in the economic, physical, and moral welfare of the people, and are therefore exercised extensively by all civilized states. Under constituent functions of the United States Government are bureaus, commissions, departments, and a multiplicity of statute laws. Much of the disrespect for laws and the waste of millions of the taxpayers' money is due to failure to exercise judgment, discretion, and economy in expanding the constituent or subordinate functions of government, and since there is no limit in these fields of activity, and since the people are constantly being misled by those who promise much for little or something for nothing, activity along these lines must be curtailed or we will soon have a paternalistic or socialistic government, brought about, perhaps indirectly, by taxing the farmer out of his farm, the business man out of his business, and the workingman out of his job. Some classes of taxpayers are given no consideration by many of the lawmakers, because they look upon taxation as primarily social legislation.

Taxes under Asiatic despots amounted in some instances to as much as 90 per cent of the taxpayers' production, which, of course, reduced them to the position of serfs or slaves. Under our Government, Federal taxes for several years past have in many instances amounted to 50 per cent of the income left after paying State and local taxes. Taxation is a real issue, a menace in every section of our country and throughout the entire world.

In a letter recently received from a classmate commending my position on this question, he states:

"In this section of the country you hear little talk but taxation. In fact, it has gotten to the point where the people just can not stand the burden. A man living in this city—Savannah, Ga.—has $1,000 in a savings bank drawing 4 per cent interest.

The income therefrom is.....	$40.00
Savannah city taxes.....	$16.67
Chatham County taxes.....	17.50
State of Georgia.....	5.00
United States income tax.....	1.60
Total.....	40.77

"Excess of taxes over income, $0.77.

"On a 4 per cent investment we must either beg, borrow, earn, or steal 77 cents to pay taxes."

Traditions and early training not only play a prominent part in religious affiliations, but also in political associations; but prejudice should not prevent a Republican legislator from giving most serious consideration to the principles of government as promulgated by Jefferson, the great exponent of democracy; nor should partisan zeal prevent a Democratic legislator from failing to note that the Democratic Presidents, Cleveland and Wilson, in times of crises discarded the Jeffersonian ideals and adopted the ideas of Hamilton, the patron saint of republicanism, who taught that solidarity and security were dependent upon placing preponderant power in the Federal Government.

Two of the purposes of our Government, as stated in the preamble of the Constitution, are: (1) "To promote the general welfare," and (2) "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to posterity." That general welfare and blessings are not, can not, be found either now or in the future in an overpopulated and underfed world or country is self-evident. Since our Government was founded the population of the world has more than doubled. The present increase is as great as at any time during the past, being approximately 12,000,000 per year, or 0.7 of 1 per cent. At this ratio population doubles in 60 years, and, if maintained, our grandchildren would see 7,000,000,000. In the year 3000 A. D. the population would be 34,000,000,000. The land area of the earth, exclusive of the Arctic, includes 33,000,000,000 acres. In the most populous countries about 40 per cent of the land is cultivated. Just before the war Germany was tilling 1.15, France 1.05, Italy 0.98, and Belgium 0.57 acres per capita. None of these countries were self-supporting. Even Germany under the pressure of war could not live within herself. It requires about 2½ acres of cultivated land to support one person. Hence the world could support 5,200,000,000 people, and, at the present rate of increase, babies now alive will see 5,200,000,000 people living on a limited dietary.

At the present time much of Asia is crowded, Europe for the most part, except Russia, is overpopulated, and the fecundity of the Russian people is so great that with a few years of domestic tranquillity it would soon fill up. Canada is now gaining rapidly in population, and when it reaches 60,000,000 people it will cease to be a source of food supply for the United States and other countries. The tide of immigration is turning toward South America. It is not necessary to look into the remote future to see the day when the people in the United States will be compelled to rely upon their own food supply in lean years as well as in fat years. Between 1910 and 1920, 16 per cent was added to our country's population. At this rate the population would double in 44 years. In 1964 it would be 214,000,000, which is too many for health and happiness.

In the United States we have 1,903,000,000 acres of land, the ultimate disposition of which will be about as follows: Improved land, 800,000,000 acres; forest and wooded land, 360,000,000 acres; range land and unimproved pastures, 425,000,000 acres; desert, 238,000,000 acres; cities, roads, and railroads, 80,000,000 acres. In the above allotment less than 20 per cent is reserved for forest, although France retains about 25 per cent of her area in forest and still finds it necessary to import lumber. In Germany the proportion of wooded territory is even greater. Eight hundred million acres in a high state of cultivation, with no allowance for drought, might support 300,000,000 people, but the United States can better support, according to our standards, standards which we wish to maintain, 150,000,000 or 200,000,000 people.

If the population of the United States is allowed to increase to 200,000,000 or 300,000,000, meat diet (with the exception of fowls) will be one of the first luxuries to go. Food animals are a secondary product of agriculture, using up food not much more efficiently than human beings. It takes approximately eight times as much land to provide a man with a diet wholly of meat as it does to provide him with nourishment from vegetable sources.

We are trustees for our descendants, and if we do not treat our trusteeship seriously we have no moral right to leave descendants. If we hearken to those who demand 300,000,000 people in the United States, we are lost. Better have 150,000,000 people, or thereabouts, who can live comfortably and happily, if they will, than 300,000,000 chained permanently to poverty and distress. Our population should be limited to such a point where each person has not only a chance for pursuing happiness, but also the possibility of overtaking it. This problem should be solved by preventing it from ever becoming acute and implies not only restriction of immigration but rational birth control. The former is a governmental problem; the latter is a matter for education and advice devolving upon the medical and nursing professions as a primary duty. Safe and scientific contraceptive information should no longer be denied the millions of people who although diseased or defective become unwilling parents and whose descendants fill our institutions for the social inadequate. Children are the greatest assets of the Nation; in fact, in the last analysis they are the only assets that are really worth while. Everything that we have, all that was committed to our keeping by those who preceded us, must be entrusted to those who follow us for those who in turn follow them. It is therefore our supreme duty to endeavor to produce children of character, of courage, of capacity, and provide environment favorable for their development.

Early in his history man was condemned to work. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground." Man has ever endeavored and rightly to free himself from that curse by his ingenuity, by his inventions, by studying nature's laws and controlling nature's energy. Marvelous has been his progress, but still we toil and sweat. King David said:

"I have been young, and now I am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

This no doubt is a substantially correct statement of David's observation, but his experience was limited as to territory and confined to a period of expansion for his people. Certainly it could not be true in an overpopulated country. Jesus said:

"The poor always ye have with you."

This statement has been true in the past, is true now, and will be true in the future. It is permissible to reduce the amount of sweat that must be exchanged for bread, and it is commendable to mitigate poverty. Apparently it will be impossible to entirely eliminate poverty. The total of individual incomes in the United States is approximately $30,000,000,000, or less than $600 per capita per year. If the total income were equally distributed, an individual would receive less than one one-hundredth million of the proceeds of his own labor. Under such a system there would be little incentive to work, hence production would decrease and poverty would become uniform and universal. What might result in case of voluntary slavery is of no consequence, because it would presuppose an impossible condition. If we attempt to eliminate poverty through pensions, we increase idleness and improvidence by rewarding indolence, and soon there would be such an increase in the shirkers with a corresponding decrease in the workers that the system would result in moral as well as financial ruin. If conditions remain as they are, the poor will always be with us unless or until we can make the incompetent competent and the indolent industrious, thus increasing our production so that luxuries will be general and necessities universal.

We now have over a million and a half people who are defective to the extent that they need institutional care, between five and six million who are mentally only slightly above those who can properly be committed to institutions, and probably 10,000,000 whose intelligence is subnormal to such an extent that they can not be appraised as an industrial asset, and we also have a criminal class of no small proportion which seems to be rapidly increasing, as is also the defective class. If we attempt to equalize living conditions by taxing the intelligent and industrious for the benefit of the ignorant and indolent, births, already too few among the former class, would be further restricted, while births, already too frequent among the latter class, would be increased.

Whether economic conditions are satisfactory or unsatisfactory from the viewpoint of any particular class or group is a potent factor in reproduction. Even State pensions for the aged remove one of the greatest incentives for thrift, economy, and self-reliance. If those who were improvident are to be provided for out of the savings of those who tolled and sacrificed there is little incentive to save. Furthermore, an elaborate system of State aid would relieve blood relatives from the duty, the necessity of caring for, and in case of death providing for their dependents. People should be encouraged, or perhaps compelled, to provide so far as possible against the day of misfortune, so that doles and pensions will be unnecessary.

It has been found, in fact it is within the range of the most casual observation, that those whose inherited abilities make them in some measure the more desirable members of society are continuously outbred by their less well-endowed fellow citizens. Investigation has shown that the greater the economic failure in life the younger the age of marriage, the higher the marriage rate, and also the higher the birth rate. In the future if the decrease in the birth rate takes place with greater speed among those who are our poorest national assets, the Nation is on the up grade; otherwise decay will follow because it is on the down grade. Births of white mothers per 1,000 in New York State, exclusive of New York City, in 1916 was:

Native	17.2
English, Scotch, and Welsh	19.1
Russian	88.6
Austro-Hungarian	89.9
Italian	91.6

Not only would unrestricted immigration overpopulate the United States in a very few years, but immigrants when admitted in great quantities tend to become segregated into racial groups, whose children for many generations remain alien in loyalty, in culture, and in spirit. American institutions and the language of the country are in disfavor where large groups of foreigners predominate. This is notable with the French in Louisiana, the Mexicans of Spanish descent in New Mexico, and other aliens in whole districts of our great cities of the North as well as in extensive rural sections in the Northwest.

A speech, like a lady's dress, should be short enough to be interesting and long enough to cover the subject. Mine, I fear, has been too long to be interesting, but even though it is not long enough to cover the subject, I will not detain you longer than to make a few general observations. If, as it has been said, "History is past politics, and politics is present history," then it is possible to insure good history by wise politics. Politics can rise to lofty statesmanship only if we make it possible for statesmanship to be good politics.

Our form of government was an experiment at the time Lincoln said:

"We are engaged in a great Civil War, testing whether that nation or any other nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure."

More than three score years have passed since that memorable address, and our Government, our theory of government, has still its severest tests before it. True, our material growth has been marvelous and so bewildering that it has beguiled us into the belief that all movement means advancement, and sometimes too much attention is directed toward movement with little attempt made to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." The danger of loss is ever present. More than 19 centuries ago the Son of Man announced that He "came to seek and to save that which was lost." It is not the loss of gems and jewels, of silver and gold, that need give us the most serious concern, but rather the loss of faith, hope, and love, the lowering of our standards—patriotic standards, political standards, social standards, ethical standards, moral standards.

Things that are seen are temporal, things that are unseen are eternal. The seen, the temporal, belong largely to the domain of the State. Things that are unseen, the spiritual, the eternal, belong exclusively to the realm of the church. If, therefore, we render "unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," conditions will be favorable for the spiritual growth of the church and for the peaceful development of the State.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an article on legislation in regard to Brazilian coffee planting, by E. H. O'Brien.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask my colleague if that is incorporated in remarks of his own. If it is, I will not object.

Mr. LITTLE. No; this is the best article on Brazilian coffee planting I ever saw in the world, and I thought we ought to have the benefit of it. I can assure the gentleman it is very much up-to-date and very well worth while.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. And the gentleman wants to incorporate it as a part of his own remarks?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; in my extension.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It is so nearly personal, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONFERENCE REPORT—TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 6349, making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill (H. R. 6349). Does the gentleman desire the conference report to be read?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 10, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 34, 35, 36, 39, 45, and 47.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 37, 38, 42, 46, 48, and 49, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,735,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That no money herein appropriated for the enforcement of the national prohibition act, the customs laws, or internal revenue laws, shall be used to pay for storage in any private warehouse of intoxicating liquors or other property in connection therewith seized pursuant to said acts and necessary to be stored, where there is available for that purpose space in a Government warehouse or other suitable Government property in the judicial district wherein such property was seized, or in an adjacent judicial district, and when such seized property is stored in an adjacent district, the jurisdiction over such property in the district wherein it was seized shall not be affected thereby"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$14,416,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$925,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 2, 43, and 44.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

On No. 3: Strikes out the increase of $2,500,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for the customs service.

On Nos. 4 and 5: Strikes out the changes, proposed by the Senate, in the punctuation of the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau.

Nos. 6 and 7: Increases the appropriation for the office of Treasurer of the United States from $1,090,000 to $1,092,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 8: Increases the appropriation for collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, gaugers, etc., from $3,800,000 to $3,900,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 9: Appropriates $31,735,000 instead of $31,235,000, as proposed by the House, and $32,235,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the collection of internal-revenue taxes.

On Nos. 10 and 11, relating to appropriations for enforcement of the national prohibition act: Strikes out the limitation, inserted by the Senate, upon the expenditure of funds in connection with certain violations of the act, and inserts a substitute for the language proposed by the Senate and the House relative to the storage in Government warehouses of liquor and other property seized in connection with violations.

On No. 12: Increases the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes from $425,000 to $433,800, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 13 and 14, relating to the Public Health Service: Makes the appropriation for "prevention of epidemics" available for the purchase of newspapers and clippings containing information relating to the prevalence of disease; and appropriates $149,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the House, for the division of venereal diseases.

On No. 15: Strikes out the increase of $1,280, proposed by the Senate, for wages of employees in the New Orleans Mint.

On Nos. 16, 17, 18, and 19, relating to public buildings: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $145,000, as proposed by the House, for the National Leprosarium; increases the amount authorized to be expended for a site at Fairmont, Minn., from $10,000 to $15,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for an underground passage connecting the subtreasury and the assay office at New York; and increases, as proposed by the Senate, from $350,000 to $400,000, the amount for remodeling public buildings.

On Nos. 20 to 26, inclusive, relating to construction work at marine hospitals: Strikes out the appropriations, inserted by the Senate, for improvement of marine hospitals at the following places: Boston, Mass., $31,000; Chicago, Ill., $60,000; Fort Stanton, N. Mex., $50,000; New Orleans, La., $15,000; Portland, Me., $6,000; San Francisco, Calif., $12,000; and appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $31,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the marine hospital at Carville, La.

On Nos. 27 to 32, inclusive, relating to quarantine stations: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for improvements at quarantine stations at the following places: Astoria, Oreg., $4,000; Galveston, Tex., $7,350; Gulf, Miss., $8,250; Reedy Island, Del., $3,500; San Francisco, Calif., $5,000; and San Juan, P. R., $3,500.

On No. 33: Appropriates $85,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the House, for vaults and safes at public buildings.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

On No. 34: Appropriates $213,740, as proposed by the House, instead of $219,740, as proposed by the Senate, for the office of the Postmaster General.

On No. 35: Appropriates $387,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $396,500, as proposed by the Senate, for the office of the First Assistant Postmaster General.

On No. 36: Restores the limitation, stricken out by the Senate, fixing the number of persons who may be employed in certain grades under the classification act.

On No. 37: Appropriates $455,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $445,000, as proposed by the House, for traveling expenses of inspectors.

On No. 38: Appropriates $5,759,150, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,600,000, as proposed by the House, for watchmen, messengers, and laborers in post offices.

On No. 39: Appropriates $4,400,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $4,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for allowances to third-class post offices for clerical services.

On No. 40: Appropriates $14,416,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $14,000,000, as proposed by the House, for rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post offices; and strikes out the authority, inserted by the Senate, for the monthly payment of rental for post-office premises.

On No. 41: Appropriates $925,000, instead of $900,000 as proposed by the House and $935,000 as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous items at first and second class post offices.

On No. 42: Appropriates $980,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $950,000, as proposed by the House, for car fare and bicycle allowances.

On No. 45: Appropriates $7,500,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for transportation of foreign mails.

On No. 46: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the certificate of approval of the Postmaster General to expenses of delegates to the Universal Postal Congress at Stockholm shall be conclusive on the accounting officers.

On No. 47: Strikes out the increase of $100,000 proposed by the Senate for mechanical appliances; and strikes out the authority inserted by the Senate for services of engineering and technical personnel engaged in research activities.

On No. 48: Appropriates $1,960,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,750,000, as proposed by the House, for mail bags and mail containers.

On No. 49: Reduces from $500,000 to $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount to be made immediately available from the appropriation for Rural Delivery Service.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

Nos. 1 and 2, relating to the Undersecretary of the Treasury.
Nos. 43 and 44, appropriating $3,000,000 for the Air Mail Service.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
WM. S. VARE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate was $738,369,880.25. The amount of the bill as passed by the House was $729,950,950.25. The amount added by the Senate was $8,418,930.

The total for the bill will then stand.....	734,413,600.25
The bill as passed the Senate exceeded the Budget estimates.....	3,063,731.75
The bill as agreed upon will be less than the Budget estimates by.....	892,548.25

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If I understand the gentleman's report, the House recessions amount to $4,462,650?

Mr. MADDEN. But that includes the $2,750,000 for the air mail.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, the Senate has forced the House to add $4,450,000 to this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and the Senate receded from $3,956,280. Mr. BLANTON. Now, is not that what always happens in connection with all of these bills?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. They are added to in large sums?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The net amount added to the bill is $3,956,280, is it not?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. That is the amount of the recessions?

Mr. MADDEN. That is what the Senate receded from.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. What is the net addition made by the Senate?

Mr. MADDEN. The House receded from $4,462,650, and that is the amount that is added.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The Senate made a very appreciable recession, did it not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. If it had not been for the air mail, we would have had most of the money off.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. There is one more question I would like to ask the gentleman. As I understand from the report, the Senate receded on amendment No. 10, on page 21?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am sorry on principle they made that recession.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman with reference to an appropriation of $500,000 made immediately available for rural service.

Mr. MADDEN. That was changed to $300,000. They said they could not use more than $300,000 between now and the 1st of July for rural service.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the Post Office Department thought that was adequate?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 9, after $12,000 insert "Fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hereafter receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, $10,000."

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "Fiscal Assistant Secretary," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Undersecretary." And in line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment after the words "and" insert the word "hereafter"; and in line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "Treasury," insert "hereafter."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I take it for granted that this may be properly designated an administration bill.

Mr. MADDEN. It is an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. An administration appropriation bill. It being an administration bill, does not the gentleman really think that he ought to have enough administration Members here to put it over?

Mr. MADDEN. This is for the support of the entire Government, we have but one vote to take, and it will only take five minutes to settle this question. It has already been considered in the House.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am not going to make the suggestion that the gentleman thinks I am. [Laughter.] I am only going to suggest to him the propriety of keeping enough Members here to enact legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have always opposed an appropriation for this additional office in the Treasury Department. It has repeatedly come up in the House and always gone out on a point of order, but each time it has been put back in the Senate. There is one feature of this proposed amendment that I very much approve of, and that is if we are going to have such an office it ought to be established by permanent law. That is what the amendment of the Senate proposes to do. I am not prepared to say that they do not need such a fiscal officer in the Treasury Department, in view of the fact that one of the conferees of the Senate was a former Secretary of the Treasury, and he insists, as well as other Senators, that this fiscal officer is needed. Therefore I interpose no further objection, except to register my position as to the creation of this office, especially since the House has repeatedly approved the proposal by adopting the Senate amendment at previous sessions of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 13, strike out the figures "$163,780; in all, $175,780" and insert the figures "$156,280; in all, $178,280."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 43: Page 60, after line 3, insert "For the operation and maintenance of the airplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Neb., including necessary incidental expenses and employment of necessary personnel, $1,500,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 44: Page 60, after line 8, insert: "For an additional amount for the installation, equipment, and operation of the airplane mail service by night flying, and to enable the department to make the additional charges for both night and day service on first-class mail matter, in accordance with existing law, $1,500,000."

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 44 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert the sum $1,250,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I should like to enter a protest against this infamous proposal for night flying in the air. That is all I can do—is to register my vote.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening an amendment was pending which had been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition on that amendment, but I understand that first the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has a matter which he desires to present and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire recognition by unanimous consent to speak for five minutes on my amendment, because as soon as I had offered the amendment last evening and the argument had been made the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, yesterday in amending the bill now under consideration, because one paragraph of the bill is printed so closely to another paragraph that the two became confused, and unintentionally there was stricken from the bill an item which should have been left in. For that reason I ask unanimous consent to return to page 79, line 20, for the purpose of reincorporating in the bill line 20 and the succeeding lines down to and including line 2 on page 80.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I can not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that the point of order was inadvertently made. Possibly that might apply to the one made by him, but it does not apply to the point of order that I made. If the gentleman from Kentucky had not made his point of order, mine would have been lodged, and the paragraph would have gone out just the same. Knowing that I would have made the point of order, I can not agree to returning to the paragraph at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I trust the Senate will reinstate it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes with reference to the amendment which I offered last evening.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has consumed no time on this amendment. I asked the gentleman whether it would be satisfactory if he should have this five minutes additional, and that then there should be 10 minutes more of debate, and that then debate on the paragraph and all amendments should close.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So far as I am concerned, that is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

[By unanimous consent Mr. FITZGERALD was granted leave to extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have under consideration the item for subsistence of the members of the central branch of the soldiers' home at Dayton, Ohio. The standard of subsistence is now so low that my mail is crowded with complaints and petitions about the vile treatment which the soldiers of the World War are getting in the tubercular hospitals and which the old soldiers are getting both in the hospitals and at the mess. The purpose of my amendment is not only to restore the present standard, which is intolerable, but to add 3 cents more a day to the mess of these soldiers of the Civil, Spanish, and the World Wars. Up to February of last year the soldiers of the Civil War were in the majority; now they constitute only 42 per cent of the 13,446 members of the 10 branches of the home. The amendment is to substitute $411,740 for the amount suggested by the committee, $353,460.

As I stated on Saturday last, an irresponsible attaché of the Budget Bureau deliberately lopped off more than $600,000 from the estimates for the soldiers' homes which had been prepared. After an estimate has been made of what it would cost to feed these soldiers on a decent wholesome diet, they were compelled to submit other figures to the Budget, and then this officer lopped off $600,000 after they had submitted the irreducible minimum. I would say for the committee that I think it went as far as it dared to go in putting back some $200,000 in this bill for the soldiers' homes, and that without the consent of the House and the knowledge of the facts, I doubt if the committee would take the responsibility of putting back the standard to what it ought to be.

I have before me, and I shall extend it in full, a letter which I received from General Hines this morning, because in conferring with the chairman of the subcommittee he told me that he was under the impression that 40 per cent of the World War men were going to be withdrawn from the soldiers' home hospitals. General Hines puts it in writing after having told me twice that that was an error, and this morning in this letter which he sent down specially he says:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, March 23, 1924.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: Concerning the statement alleged to have been made by Congressman ANTHONY, to the effect that 40 per cent of Veterans' Bureau patients were being removed from soldiers' homes, I desire to inform you that any such statement, if made, was in error, as there has been no order issued by this bureau for any such procedure. However, in the National Soldiers' Home, Leavenworth, Kans., there were a few patients suffering with tuberculosis. Some time ago the bureau allotted to the National Soldiers' Home $20,000 to make certain alterations and necessary repairs which would fit that institution for the care of tuberculous patients. Up to the present time these alterations and repairs have not been completed, and, on the advice of General Wood, president Board of Managers National Soldiers' Home, and the district inspector, that it was inadvisable to hospitalize patients suffering with tuberculosis at that institution until these changes were made, those patients at that institution were transferred to other Government hospitals. As soon as the alterations referred to above have been completed and a staff secured for that hospital it will be utilized for the care of beneficiaries of this bureau suffering from tuberculosis.

We have at Tuskegee, Ala., a hospital for the care of colored beneficiaries of this bureau. This hospital is staffed almost entirely by colored physicians. It is desired to offer hospitalization to all colored beneficiaries in need of treatment for tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric diseases at that institution. With this in view, a canvass has been made of several hospitals, including National Soldiers' Home at Marion, Ind., having in mind the transfer of those claimants who will accept transfer to Tuskegee. It is possible that the statement referred to above had reference to the movement of these patients.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman is in error. I never made the statement with which I seem to be credited, to the effect that 40 per cent of the Veterans' Bureau patients were to be removed. I told the gentleman the estimate was based upon the probable showing by the Veterans' Bureau of an increase of 40,000 patient days, and that the information we have was that they probably would not use that amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The chairman understands that I am not blaming him at all in the matter. I think the chairman may have intended to say that, but I made a special note of it at the time. Possibly the gentleman under a misapprehension may have stated it wrongly, or perhaps my understanding was a little obtuse. I made a note of it at the time and presented it immediately to the Veterans' Bureau, to find out that neither one of these circumstances will be true. The subcommittee has been improperly informed. In this letter there is a circumstance which possibly gave rise to that in the possible transfer of some of the patients at Leavenworth, Kans. There is no basis for any reduction of the number of men who are going to be fed at the Central Branch of the National Military Home.

The general treasurer, Col. C. W. Wadsworth, has told me since the estimates were sent in that the hospital is filled up, and there is no possibility of any reduction so far as can be seen, and that the estimates we have made are inadequate in themselves and are known to be. This morning I have two protests from camps of Spanish War veterans, which I shall incorporate in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I now read the letter of March 21 from Colonel Liscum Camp, No. 7, United Spanish War Veterans, as follows:

COLONEL LISCUM CAMP, No. 7,
DEPARTMENT OF OHIO, UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS,
Dayton, Ohio, March 21, 1924.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: At a meeting of Colonel Liscum Camp, No. 7, Department of Ohio, a committee which had been appointed to always keep in touch with the comrades who are quartered at the Central Branch of the National Military Home, Dayton, Ohio, reported on the subject of the reduction in the appropriations, which has caused considerable discussion in all parts of the United States. Those of you who have kept in close touch with cost of the upkeep of a soldier per day no doubt think that General Wood, president of the national board, in his statement that it was a low estimate when he quoted 87 cents per ration per member, was mistaken. While he no doubt based this upon a general average more minute details can be given.

There are 1,200 old veterans—Civil War and Spanish war—who eat at the general mess at a minimum cost of 22½ cents each; at the Franklin mess, where there are 150 members who are invalid cripples, their maintenance was 25½ cents each; the Harris mess, where there are principally Civil War veterans—80 of whom are blind—the rate was 24½ cents, with a membership of about 160. The general hospital averages about 29½ cents each; annex No. 1, 53½ cents; annex No. 3, 30½ cents; and annex No. 4, where only tuberculosis patients are quartered, about 60½ cents.

So it can be plainly seen by these figures that it would cause an awful hardship to all the members, and especially the general mess, where the largest majority of the old Civil War veterans and Spanish war veterans subsist.

At the meeting it was resolved to forward this letter to you and ask you on behalf of the comrades of this camp and of thousands of sympathizers of the disabled soldiers who fought that the flag should float over this country of the free, that you put forth your best efforts in behalf of the comrades. Why should the poor veterans' staff of life be taken away from him? Have the Congressmen lost all their reasoning power that they must reduce Government expenses by taking bread from the soldiers' mouths? . . .

Trusting you will look into this matter in a true Christian light, and knowing full well that you are a champion of the veterans, and wishing you success, we are,

Very truly yours,

COLONEL LISCUM CAMP, No. 7,
GEORGE HESSEMAN, Commander,
FRANK KNOX, Adjutant.

The second letter is an equally indignant protest from Major William McKinley Camp, No. 91, of United Spanish War Veterans.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the matter of making up the appropriation for the soldier homes is one of exceeding difficulty this year, due to the requirements we inserted in this bill last year that beginning this year all money for the conduct of soldier homes, both for taking care of the regular members of those homes as well as the patients that are placed in the homes by the Veterans' Bureau, must be estimated for by the Budget and passed upon by the House and inserted in this bill. The conditions that have existed for the last three or four years have been that the House has been making partial appropriations for the maintenance of these homes, and these funds have been augmented by large lump sums turned over by the Veterans' Bureau to the soldiers' homes authorities, over which Congress has had no control or any knowledge whatever as to whether the amounts were necessary and were over or under the required amount. We are making an effort this year to put these appropriations, as I said, for the first time in several years on a business basis. The committee found in the investigation that the amount asked for by the Bureau of the Budget would not be sufficient, in our opinion, properly to subsidize or properly operate the homes this year. The Budget has contended very strongly that the amounts are sufficient, but we were inclined to give to Mr. FITZGERALD and other Members of the House, representing districts where these homes are located, the benefit of the doubt, so that we have increased the appropriations largely for subsistence, several hundred thousand dollars over the Budget, because first it is the desire of the committee, and knowing it to be also the desire of the House, that the men who are in these homes shall be subsidized not only well but liberally, and under the provisions in the bill that will be accomplished. The case presented to the House by the gentleman from Ohio is one that should have the attention of the proper authorities. I have gone very carefully into the petition that was read by the gentleman from Ohio the other day. What does it say? It is not an indictment of Congress for having made insufficient appropriations. It refers to conditions in regard to subsistence during the current year, and yet the soldiers' home there had all the money in the world it could use. There was no restraint of Congress upon the amount it could use for subsistence. They could put their hands in the United States Treasury clear up to the limit and get every dollar they needed. What are the complaints? The petition cites that the food was improperly cooked, was unfit for consumption, and that the eggs were rotten, and other things of that kind. In my opinion the officials of Mr. FITZGERALD's home, some of them, at least, are accompetent properly to administer the home and look after the expenditure of the money we appropriate, and the remedy is to go after the officers of his local home and see that they secure a competent commissary officer, and let him properly prepare the pure food which Congress provides.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. In just a second. I have had a good deal of experience in matters of this kind, and I know the United States Government buys for the Army and Navy and soldiers' homes and all public institutions the very best food that it is possible to buy in the market. It is rigidly inspected, and if they have the proper commissary officer it is sure to be of the very best quality.

You can take two different institutions, or two company organizations in the Army, and give them exactly the same raw material, the same food, and one company may have a good cook that understands his business and the other company may have a bad cook, and the company with the bad cook will be constantly growling and have reasons for complaint, whereas you would not hear one word of complaint from the other company that has the good cook. So I am satisfied that the responsibility for these complaints rests with the local officers, and that the gentleman will find his remedy at home—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state who is directly responsible for the conditions to which the gentleman has referred at the Dayton Home?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say that the officers at the Dayton Home are responsible.

Mr. DYER. Who are they?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know the names of the officers.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman ought to know; he is chairman of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know the names of all the local officers of these homes. The gentleman from Ohio undoubtedly knows, but I will say this: That if there was any officer at the Western Branch of the Soldiers' Home, located at my home town, responsible for the men getting bad food or rotten eggs I would raise the very devil until I had that fellow kicked out of the home and a proper man put in.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know the commanding officer at the Dayton Home is General Wood?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; he is president of the Board of Managers. The local governor is the local officer in charge.

Mr. DYER. Who is the one in command?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know his name.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman how much it costs for subsistence per capita at these homes?

Mr. ANTHONY. The average cost at Dayton, Ohio, including the general mess and the hospital, is 35 cents a day. The highest is for tubercular cases in the hospital—65 cents a day—and then we have 25 or 26 cents for the general mess. That is for the food alone.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The gentleman says the cost for tubercular cases is about 65 cents a day?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is in this particular soldiers' home. The fact that the Veterans' Bureau waste their money and let these costs run up to 90 cents a day is no reason why we should follow this extravagance on the part of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would the proper procedure be for the House to have a committee to investigate the matter? We can not get at it in any other way.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think this is only a local trouble, and I think the publicity given to it here in the committee and by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD] will serve to correct the situation.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have received other complaints about the management of the home. I do not know how to get at it unless we have some committee to investigate.

Mr. ANTHONY. On the whole, I will say to the gentleman that while the head of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home is General Wood, a prominent Ohio Democrat, I have every reason to believe that he is an efficient official of the Government, and that he will be glad to remedy these situations if they are pointed out to him.

Mr. DYER. That same statement has been made for several years; but annually we have such complaints, and nothing is done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I found on one occasion that they did not feed the veteran soldiers at the soldiers' home butter but were feeding them oleomargarine instead. I called the attention of the House to the fact, and the situation was remedied. Whenever these complaints are made they are remedied.

Mr. DYER. General Wood has been there for many years, and he has been kept there through influence at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. STENGLE. The gentleman has had considerable experience in handling these matters. I would like to have his opinion as to whether 25 or 26 cents a day under the present living costs is sufficient to feed a poor soldier.

Mr. ANTHONY. When we speak of the cost of the rations at all these places it means simply cost of the raw food. The cost of the labor and handling of it incident to its preparation is taken care of and paid out of another appropriation. In my judgment, in a public institution that is well and economically managed a very high standard of living can be maintained at a cost of 30 cents a day for the raw material where you find two or three thousand men under the same roof.

Mr. STENGLE. Well, in the State of Delaware, for example, in the workhouse, where they feed prisoners, they allow 60 cents a day.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but you do not know how much of that goes for food and how much of it goes for other things. The committee has increased the amount asked for by the Budget Bureau to the exact figures that General Wood states he would spend this year for subsistence.

Now, what is the situation there? The number present for duty was 2,200, showing a decrease during the year of 224. The committee had evidence from the Veterans' Bureau and from the Budget Bureau to show that that number would not be increased during the coming year, but would be probably decreased, unless the contract hospital at Fort Thomas, Ky., was abandoned and some of the men might be removed from there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the idea of the committee to provide all the money that is needed for subsistence. If this should not be enough money, the Board of Managers undoubtedly will ask for a deficiency to make up any shortage, and in the bill considered in the House yesterday there was an item for that very purpose, increasing the amount to subsist one of these homes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. General Wood has said that under the orders of the Budget Bureau he can not create a deficiency when all the facts are presented to this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANTHONY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 44.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it; the amendment is rejected. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital: For pay of medical officers—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. ANTHONY. The point comes too late.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman ask for tellers or not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I asked for tellers immediately.

Mr. ANTHONY. It comes too late. The gentleman can not control the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio will state that at the time the Clerk began to read he was on his feet demanding tellers, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rose immediately when the Chair announced the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman was on his feet when the Clerk began to read?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rose as soon as I heard the announcement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, there was no time elapsing between the announcement of the Chair and the time when the Clerk began to read. It was almost simultaneous.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not wish to be arbitrary.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet at the time waiting for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD] to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number have arisen.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. FITZGERALD to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD] will pass between the tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital: For pay of medical officers and assistant surgeons, matrons, druggists, hospital clerks and stewards, ward masters, nurses, cooks, waiters, readers, drivers, funeral escort, janitors, and for such other services as may be necessary for the care of the sick; burial of the dead, surgical instruments and appliances, medical books, medicine, liquors, fruits, and other necessities for the sick not purchased under subsistence; bedsteads, bedding, and all other special articles necessary for the wards; hospital furniture, including special articles and appliances for hospital kitchen and dining room; carriage, harness, stretchers, coffins; and for all repairs to hospital furniture and appliances not done by the home, $260,528.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 96, line 18, for the figures "$260,528" substitute "$274,228."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 96, line 18, strike out "$260,528" and insert in lieu thereof "$274,228."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, complaints have not only been made in regard to the subsistence and food but also as to the filthy and vile conditions in which these old veterans of the Civil War and the helpless men of the Spanish War are kept in these hospitals. I read on Saturday a letter from one of these men, supported by the statements of three eminent business men of my city to the effect that he was worthy of belief. I submitted the letter to the president of the Board of Managers, and he says this man's statement is entitled to belief; this soldier states that he had formerly made complaints and that an inspector from the War Department had come there as a result of one of his complaints and an entire ward of one of the hospitals was torn down.

He said he was forced to sleep in Company 7 between two old men who could not control their bowels or their water, and that they were forced to lie in filthy condition for 8 or 10 days at a time.

You can not tell me that is because the Democratic official at the head of the home wants such a condition to prevail, and I do not charge any Democrat or Republican with wanting any such condition as that to prevail or continue.

By reason of this vile and filthy condition this man's stomach was turned and he could not stay and eat there; although both of his legs are off he had to leave the soldiers' home on account of the revolting conditions.

They have one-third of the attendants at this hospital required by the standard of hospitals in the United States—just one-third, and that in face of the fact that most of these old men are in such a condition that they are hospital patients now and have little hope of ever being anything else.

This man had to sit across the table from a man whose face was almost eaten off with cancer; he complained to the surgeon and he was sent to the hospital, where he died, a Spanish War soldier by the name of Benson.

I say these hospital conditions are intolerable, and when they ask for just a sufficient amount to maintain the present loathsome conditions what I ask you to do is to increase the amount and keep it no viler than it is.

Mr. WOLFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WOLFF. I wish to state to the gentleman that several months ago I introduced a resolution in this House touching that very condition. I asked for an investigation of these hospitals, but the chairman of the Rules Committee of this House informed me they did not want an investigation there. I know that the conditions which the gentleman from Ohio mentions exist there; that men with venereal diseases are handling the food and waiting on men who are sick in one of the hospitals; but they do not want those conditions investigated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conditions are revolting now under the present standard, and I say to you that the Speaker of this House has prevented my attempts to get the reports of the soldiers' homes published for the last three years. This Congress alone is responsible, because no department of the Government has any supervision or control or charge over this Board of Managers. They must come to Congress and ask for the necessary money and ask us to create the proper standard to care for these old men. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, for the hospital at the Dayton Branch Home, to which the gentleman refers, there is appropriated $260,528 for the next fiscal year. This is the exact amount of the Budget estimate, and it is $15,000 more than was expended there the year before.

The number of beds in the hospital is 1,330, of which 286 are vacant at the present time. I find there is provision in this appropriation to employ 415 civilian attendants, which means nurses and attendants upon these sick men. That would mean that these attendants would have, on the average, two patients to look after, so it would seem to me the hospital is at least fully manned with that number of civilian attendants provided for.

If the conditions to which the gentleman from Ohio refers are true, they are deplorable and should be taken up for investigation by the proper authorities. It is obvious, of course, that it is a situation over which this committee has no authority.

But the committee would be glad to provide every facility in its power for a proper investigation of conditions. However, I am surprised that a gentleman who is as close as the gentleman from Ohio seems to be to General Wood, the president of the Board of Managers, would permit conditions like that to exist without bringing them to the attention of the proper committees of the House. I want to assure the House that if conditions such as the gentleman has explained to the House had been brought to the attention of this committee at any of its formal hearings, they certainly would have had full, thorough, and complete investigation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is it entirely true, as the gentleman from Ohio says, that the board of control is responsible to no official or department of the Government?

Mr. ANTHONY. Under the law which created the national homes it was intended to divorce them from the control of any Government department, from political control, you might say, and that control is vested in a board of managers which is named by Congress, and that board has absolute authority.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. To whom is that board responsible? To whom does it make its reports? Is there no one connected with the Government to whom it makes reports, and no one who has a right to overlook it and suggest changes?

Mr. ANTHONY. It makes a report to Congress each year. The homes are inspected by the War Department, by the Inspector General of the Army each year, and, as far as I know, there are no official reports showing any such conditions to prevail as the gentleman has set forth.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am prepared to believe that, but one would gather from what has been said that although there may be inspections and oversight, there is no authority resting anywhere to bring about any changes.

Mr. ANTHONY. In my judgment, if what the gentleman from Ohio has said is halfway true, then what is needed there is a complete cleaning out of the official force at the Dayton Home, but it is evident, of course, that this committee has no control over that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Board of Managers are cognizant of these facts, as you know. I did appear before your committee and told you that I had these things. General Wood was there testifying, and nothing was known as to whether the committee would give them the estimates they wanted or not. These conditions in the hospital are going to be worse instead of better during the next year, according to the testimony of General Wood, even if you gave him all he asked to maintain the present standard.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think any amount of money we could appropriate would excuse the maltreatment of the veterans such as you describe?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; because I know they are short-handed—

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not believe that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know they are short-handed. I know they can not get the proper help. I know they pay men who are not competent to do these things—sick men themselves, who try to look after other sick men. I know because they are sick they are impatient and neglectful of their duties.

Mr. ANTHONY. What would be the judgment of the gentleman in the matter? This is a hospital with a thousand patients, and we provide for 415 civilian attendants and for $15,000 more in money than they had the year before, with a hospital attendance that will probably grow less instead of greater. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would suggest you really do what you say you are doing and what I say to this House you are not doing. I say to you that you have been providing only one employee for every three or four patients, which means not only the nurses and the individual attendants for the sick but covers the hospital clerks, the stewards, and every janitor and employee about the institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 31, noes 33.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. ANTHONY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Farm: For pay of farmer, chief gardener, harness makers, farm hands, gardeners, horseshoers, stablemen, teamsters, dairymen, herders, and laborers; tools, appliances, and materials required for farm, garden, and dairy work; grain and grain products, hay, straw, fertilizers, seed, carriages, wagons, carts, and other conveyances; animals purchased for stock or work (including animals in the park); gasoline; materials, tools, and labor for flower garden, lawn, park, and cemetery; and construction of roads and walks, and repairs not done by the home, $22,350.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes provision for the harbors of the Nation. It appropriates as follows:

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between the said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation; and for the prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, for pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, crews, and office force, and for maintenance of patrol fleet and expenses of office, $37,250,000.

This money is to be expended by the Chief of Engineers of the Army for projects already approved and mostly already more or less completed. I am interested in the provision made for harbor work in various ports of the Nation, since we need to do all we can to develop the maritime interests of the Nation. I am especially interested in the work about and in the Baltimore Harbor, because the municipality itself has started the expenditure of $50,000,000 for the development of its splendid port.

The cost of maintenance of the Baltimore Channel is very small compared with other ports, as, for example, Philadelphia. Note the following statement of General Taylor, Assistant Chief of Engineers:

BALTIMORE HARBOR AND CHANNELS, Md.

IMPROVEMENT AND MAINTENANCE.

Mr. DICKINSON. The next project is Baltimore Harbor and Channels, Md., for which you are asking $200,000 for improvement and $300,000 for maintenance, with a tonnage of 13,000,000.

General TAYLOR. That project is the exact opposite of Philadelphia so far as ease of maintenance is concerned. There has been very little maintenance work in Baltimore Harbor for several years. During that time, however, there has been a considerable accumulation of shoaling in the channels, so it will now take a considerable sum to get that out. But the average cost of maintenance of that channel is very small compared with the cost of the Philadelphia project. The estimated cost, for example, is $150,000 a year.

Mr. DICKINSON. Reference is made here to an extension of an additional area, including Mud Island. Is that going to involve additional expense?

General TAYLOR. No, sir. On the contrary, that was put in for the purpose of decreasing the cost. It was thought quite possible that in connection with the dredging in the channel it would be possible to fill certain areas of land by tide flats, and that the owners of those tide flats would provide bulkheads and do other work necessary to permit of economically filling that area, and that if they would do that, that work could be done in a way which would enable it to be done more cheaply than by carrying material out and dumping it in the usual place in deep water. The cost, so far, has been less for carrying material out to deep water. I believe, as in the case where we are dredging another portion of the harbor, it will later be found that a portion of the material can be dumped ashore at less cost than it can be carried out to sea.

Last year there was only one active harbor project in Baltimore. The amount expended for maintenance was $218,000, and this year this will cost $300,000, but the cost of maintenance of the Baltimore Channel is slight as compared with other ports. Again, the statement of General Taylor is of interest. I quote from what he said before the subcommittee, at page 1509 of the hearings, as follows:

General TAYLOR. The surveys for the project are ordinarily charged against the allotment for that particular work, and the cost would not appear in this project as it stands here. After the work is authorized by Congress, such an item as that would appear as overhead.

It so happens that in the Baltimore district this is the only project which was at all active last year. There may have been some small expenditures other than that, but you will find that practically the entire cost of the administration of the Baltimore district for that year was charged up to this one project. As I say, that is the only one upon which any active work was progressing; so that that represents the cost of the administration of the Baltimore office plus the cost of the overhead connected directly with this work.

Mr. DICKINSON. Last year you expended for maintenance $218,000, and this year you are asking for $300,000.

General TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DICKINSON. Would not that indicate very expensive maintenance?

General TAYLOR. No, sir. Until last year there had been very little maintenance upon that project for, I think, seven years, so that all we are doing now is removing the accumulated shoaling. It is not an expensive project to maintain. The estimate is $150,000 a year, and our experience indicates that it will be even less than that.

The amount of money the port of Baltimore gets annually out of the enormous river and harbor appropriation is not very great, but all we need to do is to convince the engineers of the War Department of our needs and we will get a bigger allowance.

I favor a deeper channel, and introduced a bill for that purpose. I hope the shipping interests of Baltimore, as well as the city government, will next session join me in a strong effort to show the War Department the great possibilities of our port and the need of greater Government assistance.

There is another matter, Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak of while we are discussing appropriations. This morning the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, called up the conference report on House bill 6349, making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes. In the discussion of the report I asked Mr. MADDEN about the amount of the net additions made by the Senate to the $729,950,950.25 contained in the bill as passed by the House:

Mr. HILL of Maryland. What is the net addition made by the Senate?

Mr. MADDEN. The House receded from $4,462,650, and that is the amount that is added.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The Senate made a very appreciable recession, did it not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. If it had not been for the air mail, we would have had most of the money off.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. There is one more question I would like to ask the gentleman. As I understand from the report, the Senate receded on amendment No. 10, on page 21?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am sorry on principle they made that recession.

The Senate added $5,418,930 to the House bill, but the House refused to agree, and the Senate dropped half of its addition. The Senate also added a very important amendment to that part of the House bill which I will read, as follows:

For expenses to enforce the provisions of the national prohibition act and the act . . . known as the narcotic drugs import and export act, including the employment of executive officers, agents, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, supervisors, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed as authorized by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, books, and such other expenditures as may be necessary in the District of Columbia and the several field offices, and for rental of necessary quarters, $10,629,770: Provided, That not to exceed $1,250,000 of the foregoing sum shall be expended for enforcement of the provisions of the said acts of December 17, 1914, and May 26, 1922: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of the total amount appropriated shall be available for advances to be made by special disbursing agents when authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding.

The important amendment the Senate added to the above as it passed the House was amendment No. 10, offered by Senator BROUSSARD, which followed immediately after what I have just read and which reads thus:

Provided further, That none of the money here appropriated shall be expended in the commission of acts which are in violation of the national prohibition act, nor for inducing others to violate the provisions of said national prohibition act.

I originally offered this amendment in the House and discussed it fully during general debate on the bill. The House rejected it, but the Senate put it in. It is a limitation in the interest of constitutional government and was intended to help bring back respect for our Federal laws. The Senate, however, in conference receded from this amendment, and so it goes out of the bill. As I said this morning to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I am sorry on principle they made that recession. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Northwestern Branch, Milwaukee, Wis.: Current expenses, $57,500; subsistence, $287,000; household, $139,000; hospital, $230,000; transportation, $500; repairs, $47,050; farm, $13,790; in all, Northwestern Branch, $774,840.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KVALE: Page 97, line 21, after the word "subsistence," strike out "$287,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$600,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask where the Clerk finished reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is offered to page 97, line 21, the figures $287,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Had the Clerk started to read the next paragraph?

Mr. KVALE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] is recognized for five minutes in support of the amendment.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I will not take up very much of your time. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] has spoken at length on this subject, and also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The gentleman from Wisconsin had to go home on account of a death in the family and asked me to present this amendment for him, and I gladly do so. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the statement that Milwaukee County feeds its prisoners on 90 cents a day; the home feeds its men on 27 cents, its general hospital patients on 85 cents, and its tubercular patients on 52 cents per day. We ask an appropriation of $600,000 instead of the $287,000 allowed by the committee for subsistence.

I submit, gentlemen, that while what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has said may be true, I still repeat that you can not feed tubercular patients and give them good, wholesome food on the amount that is allowed here. I think every Member of this House knows, and some of us know from bitter experience in our own homes, that the three things necessary to cure tubercular patients are rest, fresh air, and good, rich food, and the last named is not the least important of the three, and you also have to have it palatable in addition to being rich.

You can not give them eggs that smell and taste of cold storage and lime, and you can not give them milk from which the cream has been extracted and expect them to get well. If I voted for these small amounts I would feel that I had the blood of these disabled soldiers on my hands. When you can vote millions and millions for rivers and harbors and hundreds of millions for other things I think you can vote a few hundred thousand dollars to give disabled veterans, and especially the tubercular patients, rich, wholesome food to give them back their life and their health.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I will.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think this would be more in keeping with the spirit of the American people than to deny these men the necessities of life and appropriate $10,000,000 for the German people, who are not under the American flag at all?

Mr. KVALE. Well, I voted for the German relief, and I would vote for more; but I do not see why that need hinder us from voting for the right amount for the disabled veterans. I agree with the gentleman that certainly the disabled veterans should come before the people of any foreign nation.

Mr. RANKIN. It simply looks to me like we were taking the bread away from American disabled veterans and giving it to aliens.

Mr. KVALE. There is bread enough both for the disabled veterans and the aliens if we would take some of the money that is squandered and apply it where it would do the most good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen of the committee, it is quite significant that two members of this subcommittee are interested personally in certain homes. They are willing to face this House and take great responsibilities in regard to the homes not in their own districts. I notice the cut for the California home is comparatively insignificant. They are not going to have trouble there. I notice the cut is only about $1,800 on the item for subsistence for the Kansas home.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment. I have the figures right in front of me and can quote them accurately.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will ask for additional time for the gentleman. I would like to make an observation right here. I hope the gentleman will be perfectly fair in regard to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that the soldiers' home is not in his home district.

Mr. ANTHONY. The California home to-day has a greater membership than any of the other homes. They are jammed full, and increasing beyond their capacity to take care of them. It is absolutely necessary to provide every dollar that is appropriated here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not complaining about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought the gentleman was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I am not criticizing this committee. I am merely calling the attention of the gentlemen of the committee and of this House to the fact that where the responsibility is greater and where they can see it under their own observation, they are not disposed to pare the items down as close as they do here; $1,800 only is taken off the estimate of the Board of Managers for the Leavenworth (Kans.) branch, and $29,000 is taken off the subsistence at the Central Branch of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio. It is a deplorable condition at the time of this crisis of the soldiers' home that the political situation should be injected into it, because the Board of Managers and the control of the home is in the hands of General Wood, who happens to be a Democrat. The conditions are truly frightful at these homes, and, as I say, it is deplorable that $29,000 should be deducted in one instance so as to subject him to more criticism and raise more confusion.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. BARBOUR. So far as the Pacific Home is concerned I did not give it much consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that he said that because I was on the committee this home was favored and more liberally treated. General Wood stated that he expected to leave for California, and he said that the home was filled up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It makes no difference, because you are getting sufficient appropriations with that in view. I want to say that Mr. HOLADAY is not here, for he was called back to Illinois. Mr. REECE was called back to Tennessee. Captain FREDERICKS wanted to be heard and he was called home to California. Mr. SCHAFER, whose brother has just died, was called back to Wisconsin, and he knows the frightful conditions in this home. It is deplorable that these gentlemen could not be here to speak in behalf of the veterans.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the pending amendment, it proposes to increase the amount for subsistence in the Northwestern Home from $287,000 to $600,000. One thing to be commended in the amendment is its extreme modesty. Of course, if the gentleman should get $600,000 for that home he would not know what to do with it. It shows to what extremes men can go in their enthusiasm. It is not fair to the House to offer such a ridiculous amendment.

The situation is that this has recently been turned into a tuberculosis hospital. There are only a thousand men there; the population will increase, but it is not large at this time. The committee took into consideration the fact that it would be some time before it was running to its maximum capacity. I want to assure the gentleman from Ohio that this committee desires to give these men all the money that is necessary to buy the best food that can be purchased, and we believe they are going to get it.

Mr. KVALE. I want to say that if I had been writing the amendment I would have made it for a smaller sum, but I have offered it for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SHAFER], and I really think that it should be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? If they had moved the tubercular hospital down to Arizona or New Mexico, they could save these men. It is the most ridiculous thing in the world to have a hospital up there in this place.

Mr. ANTHONY. We now have a hospital at Prescott, Ariz., and New Mexico, the best places in the world for tuberculosis patients.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do you not send the soldiers there?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because you can not get the soldiers to go down there; there are not enough bright lights to amuse them.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, line 21, after the word "subsistence," strike out the figures "$287,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000."

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the Northwestern Home for Veterans, located at Milwaukee, Wis., has 1,400 inmates, 600 of whom are in the hospital. These veterans, a few of them, are soldiers of the Civil War, others are from the Spanish-American War and World War veterans. They allow for inmates in the general hospital, for food, 37 cents a day. The tuberculous patients are allowed 52 cents a day. The general inmate that is not in the hospital is allowed 27 cents a day. I do not think it takes a lengthy argument in these times to prove that this is a grossly inadequate amount. Right in the same city of Milwaukee, in the county jail, the sheriff is allowed 60 cents a day for boarding each inmate. The house of correction, which is very much like a State prison, is allowed 65 cents a day for the board of each inmate. Almost every Congressman from Wisconsin has received letters and complaints from the inmates of the hospital, showing that they were feeding patients storage eggs and oleomargarine, and that they were not receiving the wholesome food that they ought to have. Right in the jails of Wisconsin we feed the inmates butter, and oleomargarine is barred; we give our prisoners a wholesome diet. We think it is wise if we want to reform a man to feed him decent food. And yet these honored veterans, who have fought the battles of their country, we feed storage eggs and oleomargarine, and I do not believe, for one, that we are doing our duty, in this respect, to the veterans.

My substitute would give less than $100,000 more than the amount provided in the bill, and not one cent of it would be wasted. There are more people coming in asking for admission to the Veterans' Home in Milwaukee than they can accommodate. The help in these hospitals are getting only about $24 a month. It is, of course, difficult to obtain efficient help for this amount. This amendment simply goes to the question of the food that you are going to give to these veterans, whether you are going to feed them good butter, whether you are going to feed them fresh eggs and good milk, or whether you will feed these veterans who are trying to recover from tuberculosis on 52 cents a day and those patients in the general hospitals at 35 cents a day. That is the question to be decided by this amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am wondering if this institution has in connection with it, as the one here in the District has, a dairy herd and a little truck farming, the raising of those things on which they feed these people?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I do not think they do. This veterans' home is not in my district. It is situated in Milwaukee, a city of 500,000 inhabitants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, just for the information of the House, I want to give an idea of what the men in the tuberculosis hospitals have in the way of a daily bill of fare. We had one of these placed in the Record. Here is the menu for the tubercular men at the Central Branch Home for the week ending January 26, 1924: In the first place, they are served with sugar, sirup, bread, butter—not oleomargarine—seasoning sauces, coffee, and milk at all meals.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. But the one that we are now discussing is the Northwestern Home.

Mr. ANTHONY. My understanding is that butter is served at all of the homes. In addition to the things that I have already mentioned, let us take the meals for Sunday, January 20, 1924. For breakfast they had stewed prunes, oatmeal, Puffed Rice, corn flakes, fried eggs, and toast. For dinner they had barley soup, crackers, roast chicken with dressing, mashed potatoes, string beans, pickles. And for supper, hamburger with onions, hashed brown potatoes, fruit cake, and ice cream. Now, let us take the menu for Friday, January 25. For breakfast they had grapes, Cream of Wheat, Grape Nuts, Puffed Rice, broiled ham, eggs. For dinner they had cream of corn soup, roast beef, brown gravy, brown potatoes, peas, cottage pudding, lemon sauce. And for supper, creamed chipped beef, potato salad, pickled beets, preserved pineapple. We endeavor to provide sufficient raw materials necessary for this diversified menu. If it is not properly prepared and set before these people in edible manner that is not the fault of the Congress, but it is the fault of the officials who have charge of the institutions.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think we can furnish that menu in the city of Milwaukee at a cost of 52 cents a day?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman labors under a misapprehension, I think, in giving these figures. He must understand that the 52 cents a day represents the bare cost of the raw materials. In addition to that there is probably 30 or 40 cents a day additional taken out of other appropriations to pay for the labor and other costs that enter into the preparation of this food. The cost of these meals is not merely 52 cents a day.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. And everything is bought at wholesale.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I understand, but the regular amount for the hospitals is 35 cents a day. I am informed that for the tuberculosis hospitals it is 52 cents.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, it varies in the different hospitals.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. It does not seem as if you could do that in Milwaukee, where the cost of living is as high as it is here.

Mr. ANTHONY. This may surprise the gentleman. Take the home out in California. That is the most popular of any of them. There is an enormous demand for beds and rooms there. More veterans want to get in there than they can accommodate. The per capita cost there is lower than at any other home in the country, and according to these figures that we have quoted here one would think that we were starving the men out there, but the answer is that food is much cheaper out there, and they are probably being better fed than at some of these other homes where costs are higher.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. In the per capita cost in California is not the question of heat taken into consideration?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, they have to heat the buildings out there. But they do not use nearly the amount of fuel that they would in the northern latitudes. The gentleman would be surprised at the climate of Los Angeles. There are probably as many days there on which they need fuel as in Milwaukee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that the boys write me that they are furnished with just such meals as the chairman has suggested once in a while, and they complain about the way the meals are usually served, their daily suppers and breakfasts; that they can not get proper food, nor in sufficient quantity. It is not cooked properly, seasoned, nor is it served in clean utensils. This is so because they can not get enough money from Congress to operate on.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment by way of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 33, noes 29.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers on that.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin and Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eastern Branch, Togus, Me.: Current expenses, $45,000; subsistence, $90,000; household, $100,000; hospital, $50,000; transportation, $500; repairs, $27,000; farm, $19,772; in all, Eastern Branch, $332,272.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, line 2, after the word "subsistence," strike out the figures "$90,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$94,784"; and in line 3, after the word "hospital," strike out the figures "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$59,500."

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Eastern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is located at Togus, Me., within the district which I represent and within a few miles of my home. The governor of this institution and many of his coworkers are personal friends of mine. I have often visited the institution and know something of its work and its needs. For the service being rendered there I have only words of commendation and praise. No such abuses exist here as have been described as obtaining in other national homes.

This institution at Togus, Me., is not a reformatory, to be conducted at the lowest possible cost. It is not a Federal poor-house, toward which the self-respecting veteran, disabled by age or disease, must turn reluctant feet. On the contrary, it represents an honest and more or less successful effort on the part of a just and generous Government to provide for its former defenders a real home when age, sickness, and ill fortune shall have overtaken them. So far as an institution can take the place of a home to the aged, the sick, and the infirm this institution is doing it. The care there is kindly. The quarters are comfortable. The food furnished at the home, while simple and restricted in variety, is sufficient in amount and of good quality. These standards, however, have been maintained in the past only by the exercise of the strictest economy.

This home cares for veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish War, and the World War. It has perhaps a greater percentage of Civil War veterans than any other home. There are here between two and three hundred of these men, of an average age of from 80 to 82 years. Time has robbed them of about everything that makes life worth living and left them there with their infirmities and memories of the past. A few short years and the post bugler will sound "taps" over the last survivor. With them are 280 veterans of the Spanish War and 87 World War veterans.

Last Fourth of July I had the privilege of addressing these veterans at the home. Many of them are personally known to me. I told them then how great were their respective services to the Government in its times of national need, and, as a most humble representative of that Government, I assured them of a national gratitude that would endure as long as the American ideals for which they fought should animate the hearts of our people. It is because I would keep faith with these men that I offer this amendment to-day and ask you to support it.

The estimated needs of this home for the coming year were based on 60 years' experience with a real budget, with a view simply of maintaining the present decent standards. Those estimates of absolute need have been reduced in this bill over $23,000, but it is to two items only that this amendment applies, those of "subsistence" and "hospital."

Last year's appropriation for subsistence at this home was $95,000, of which more than $94,500 will be necessarily expended. The location of this home, high freight rates, and its low membership combine to raise the cost of ration and other supplies; yet the results of the economies practiced here have been surprising. The average daily cost of the ration per man, in round numbers, for both general and hospital messes, from 1921 to date, is as follows:

	1921	1922	1923	1924
General mess.....	$0.32	$0.27	$0.30	$0.32
Hospital mess.....	.36	.33	.37	.38

The daily ration cost of one of the great lumber companies of my State is said to be $1.20. You have heard it stated on this floor that the Veterans' Bureau hospitals pay 64 cents per day for general patients and 88 cents for tubercular patients. Yet this home, handicapped by location and small membership, is feeding the general mess for 32 cents and the hospital mess for 38 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will be glad to agree to that if the gentleman will agree that debate may close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. It can close at any time the gentleman likes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close at the end of 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. The appropriation carried in this bill is $90,000, $4,600 less than the amount economically expended the present fiscal year to feed these veterans at 32 and 38 cents per day. I simply ask in this amendment that this deficiency be restored and the present standard maintained. With it we have no complaint, although we are using butterine at this home, and not butter as claimed by the gentleman from Kansas. Shall we say to the aged, sick, and crippled veterans of our great wars that this country of ours, rich beyond all others, in whose defense in days that are gone they offered their youths and their lives, is too poor longer to continue to pay for the food of its defenders, 32 cents for the well and 38 cents for the sick? I trust not.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will.

Mr. WEFALD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that these old soldiers are not getting butter to eat?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. They get butterine.

Mr. WEFALD. I would like to state to the gentleman that in my State we passed a law a few years ago making it obligatory to feed a prisoner butter, and I think they ought to have butter.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. All I ask of you is to continue giving them an appropriation that will allow the present ration cost; but this appropriation cuts the allowance down $5,000. Now, as to the matter of hospitalization. The appropriation for the present fiscal year was $55,000. Of this amount practically $50,000—the entire amount of the present appropriation—was required for the pay of the various classes of employees, leaving the balance of $5,000 to be used for drugs, surgical supplies, and instruments and appliances for a hospital now caring for 162 patients. In the month of February last, of the 262 Civil War inmates of this home 106 were in the hospital. Daily the advanced age of these men is materially increasing this number.

Already each trained nurse in the hospital is charged with the care of approximately 35 patients. The appropriation carried in this bill covers the labor item alone and leaves nothing for hospital supplies and equipment. I do not want you to confuse the situation at this home with that at any other. This amendment simply provides that the present standard of subsistence shall continue in this home, and that a small sum over and above the actual pay of the employees shall be allowed for the proper conduct of the hospital. We are not asking for a large sum of money. The total increase asked for is less than $15,000. This Congress has already appropriated many millions of dollars more or less wisely. We shall appropriate many millions more. We have provided for service men in the strength of their young manhood, and have not been unmindful of the needs of strangers across the sea. If the time has come to economize, let it not be in taking from those to whom we owe so much the little so necessary for their care and comfort.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Is there about the same number this year as there was last year?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. There are between six and eight hundred there. The total varies according to the number of inmates absent on leave. Prices, however, are a little higher than they were last year.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is the gentleman offering an amendment providing that no money shall be spent up there for any purpose if they feed oleomargarine to the patients?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. No. But one of the first items on the menu for the week ended March 29 last was "butterine." We are not asking for more money than has been given us in the past, but simply that the former appropriations shall be continued, because we can not with less give these veterans proper service.

Mr. WEFALD. Has the gentleman offered an amendment to increase the amount?

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I have.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the Eastern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is the smallest branch maintained by the Government. The appropriation for subsistence and the hospital was granted proportionately, so that it is just $4,000 less for the next fiscal year than the actual cost this year.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Four thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason for that is that the attendance at the Eastern Branch is constantly dwindling. It is running down at the rate of about 100 a year. Judged by the actual cost of maintaining it, it would appear that this branch ought to be wiped out of existence, because it is the costliest branch we have, and the managers have repeatedly recommended that it be discontinued.

There is a hospital up there with a capacity of 350, and yet with a capacity of 350 in that hospital and about 150 patients we are providing for 123 civilian attendants. The Veterans' Bureau makes an explicit statement in regard to the program for the next fiscal year. Captain Jones in the hearings said to us that in the current year the Veterans' Bureau had only 8 or 10 people at the Togus Branch. None are estimated for the year 1925. So what is the use in appropriating money that they probably will not use?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The time has been fixed. Two minutes remain.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Where do you get these figures from?

Mr. ANTHONY. From the Board of Managers.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I have letters received within the last two or three days that do not corroborate those figures at all, and they come from the officials of the home.

Mr. ANTHONY. The testimony is that the attendance there is getting less and less each year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it is true that we probably could abandon the Togus Branch of the soldiers' home economically. But this is not a question of bright lights to amuse the members. It is because the families of the patients live in the vicinity. I would not want to see a proposition adopted that would grind the men down still further, where they could not live in the vicinity of their families and relatives. I believe they ought to be maintained, if they desire, near their own homes and amid the familiar surroundings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. NELSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ANTHONY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 29.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. NELSON of Maine and Mr. ANTHONY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Board of Managers: President, $4,000; secretary, $500; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $5,000; chief surgeon, $4,500; assistant general treasurer, $3,500; inspector general, $3,500; assistant chief surgeon, $3,500; clerical services for the offices of the president, general treasurer, chief surgeon, and inspector general, $18,700; clerical services for managers, $2,700; traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, including officers of branch homes when detailed on inspection work, $14,000; outside relief, $100; legal services, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $1,700; in all, $61,700.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAILE: Page 100, after line 5, insert: "The following persons shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the Board of Managers, namely, honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines who served in the Regular, Volunteer, or other forces of the United States, or in the Organized Militia or National Guard when in the Federal service, and who are disabled by diseases or wounds and by reason of such disability are either temporarily or permanently incapacitated from earning a living."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas reserves a point of order.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I think probably this amendment is subject to a point of order if any gentleman desires to raise it, but I hope it will not be raised. Its effect is simply to admit to the soldiers' homes members of the Regular Establishment, notwithstanding they may not have served in time of war.

As it stands at present, we only admit honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular or Volunteer forces who served in time of war, except at one institution, the National Soldiers' Home in Washington. There are, however, many old soldiers who have had two or three enlistments at a salary which does not permit a man to save much money. When they become old and decrepit they have no place to go or any place they can call their home. Ex-Regular soldiers are a self-reliant class of men. Generally they are not recipients of much in the way of public assistance, but some of them need such assistance through no fault of their own. There is only a small number of these men in the aggregate; and my amendment, of course, does not propose any specific addition to expense, although it is possible it would result in some small addition to expense.

But these old men, it seems to me, are deserving of our considerate treatment. We urge them to come into the Army; they are our reliance in time of need; we pay them a very small stipend for their services; we take the best years of their lives; and it seems to me only decent that when they are no longer able to serve they should have the comfort and care which the national soldiers' homes afford.

I might say that this amendment is approved by the president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home. I have a letter from General Wood to that effect, saying:

I am in receipt of your letter of March 11 and thoroughly agree with your sentiments on this subject. I have felt for some time that our eligibility clause did injustice to a large number of very deserving soldiers of the Regular Army who may have put in two or three enlistments; but as these enlistments took place during a period of peace we can not take care of them when they get old and decrepit and need our help.

That is all I have to say on the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Would not the gentleman's amendment very greatly increase the number of men who would be eligible for admission to the soldiers' homes?

Mr. VAILE. Well, I do not think it would result in a very great increase.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Has the gentleman any estimate?

Mr. VAILE. I confess I have no estimate, but during my experience in Congress I have had only two such cases brought to my attention.

Of course, most men come out of the Regular Army fitted to go into some other line of work, and many of them are at an age when they can be employed, and they have learned habits and acquired character which make them desirable to employers. But there are some cases where, through misfortune, a man is not able to take care of himself. Let me suggest further that my amendment really involves no change of policy. We admit ex-Regulars now to the national home here in Washington even though they may not have served in war. But it is impracticable for them all to come to Washington.

Now, we have a Regular Army of 125,000 men. If the amendments offered by some of my friends should carry and that number should be cut in half, the number of those who would be eligible for admission to these homes in the future would be still more greatly reduced.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be, would it not, to throw these soldiers' homes open to any man who served in any arm of the National Guard in Federal service in any war or in the Regular Army in time of peace?

Mr. VAILE. That is the effect of it. Of course, the Volunteer Army and the National Guard have active Federal service only in time of war, but we have a small residuum of men whom we urge to come into the Army, and we rely on them; we urge them to go in, and it seems to me the decent thing would be to take care of those men.

Mr. ANTHONY. At the present time the only home those men could get into would be the Regular Army Home at Washington?

Mr. VAILE. That is the only home.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

State and Territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors: For continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, as amended, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $700,000: Provided, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: Page 100, line 19, after the word "maintained," insert "oleomargarine or any other substitute for butter shall not be used in any national home for disabled soldiers in place of butter made from pure dairy cream."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment on the ground that it is legislation and not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin anything to say in answer to that point of order?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I think it is germane because in this appropriation bill we are providing for the food of the veterans in these national homes, and I think it is proper in the same act to say that they shall not use a substitute which I think is deleterious to health.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the Chair thinks it is clearly legislation and that that can be the only purpose of it. Therefore the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment; at the same place, same line, and same page the following language to be inserted:

That no appropriations under this act shall be expended by the Board of Managers of the National Military Homes in the purchase of any oleomargarine, butterine, or other substitutes for butter.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to do this, but under the rules amendments ought to be submitted in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is right. Has the gentleman his amendment in writing? The Clerk is unable to read from memory a long amendment like that, and it is not fair to ask him to do it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk may read the bill while the gentleman is preparing his amendment.

Mr. ROACH. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman. We can not halt the business of the House while the gentleman prepares his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For civil government of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, including salaries of district judge, $7,500; district attorney, $5,000; marshal, $5,000; and gratuities and necessary clothing for indigent discharged prisoners, $912,000.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me, Members of the House and Mr. Chairman, that it is well for us to call attention at this time to the fact that in this appropriation of $326,000,000 probably one-third of it is for nonmilitary purposes.

The great cry throughout the country for reduction in the expenditures of Congress for the maintenance of a war machine ought to bring a response when we point out to the people of the country that one-third of this appropriation is really for the development of commerce, industry, and ways of peace.

Nearly $56,000,000 of the total amount appropriated for the Corps of Engineers is for nonmilitary purposes—development of rivers and harbors, flood control along our great inland waterways, the maintenance of national homes and hospitals for the veterans of the Civil War. The upkeep, maintenance, and government for the Panama Canal and Zone calls for $7,240,000. These, gentlemen, are, it is true, all a part of our national defense system, but more largely items of commerce and industry of a great Nation.

Mr. Chairman, in that connection it seems to me it is well to call attention this afternoon to the fact that in this bill we carry an appropriation of practically $14,000,000 for the further development of the aircraft arm of military defense. I wonder whether we realize where the threatened war scare is to come from?

I understand that Great Britain is appropriating about $12,000,000 this year and greatly increasing her number of airplanes; that France is running a race with her, and Italy is saying she must do likewise, and if war looms before us it comes from that quarter.

A little over a year ago England had something like 384 airplanes under control of her air ministry. France at that time had 1,152. Unwilling to allow France to outstrip her, England increased her number of planes. Then France increased hers. The present plans of the English call for double the number of a year ago. France will, of course, attempt to excel her, and Italy declares she must likewise be compelled to spend millions to meet the expenditures of the other two. Where is the end of this mad rivalry? Is it not the old navy construction rivalry transferred to another sector of war possibility, while the people bow under the burden of taxation? I am for an adequate national defense, but earnestly protest against any part by our Nation in any such a program of rivalry.

Is it not time for another arms conference, this time to limit air armament? Is not a defense against war in the air the act of getting an agreement limiting air armament?

It seems to me it is time for us to ask the President to again call the nations of the earth together for a further conference along the line of providing against war by the limitation of destructive aircraft.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, during the fiscal year 1925, the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Amend by inserting a new clause as follows, at the end of the bill: "The President is requested to enter into negotiations with such other nations as he may think proper for the purpose of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to the reduction and limitation of land armaments, including aircraft, and the decrease of the expense incident to their maintenance and expansion."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this amendment expressed the view that was stated a moment ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON]. The naval appropriation bill which passed the House the other day contains a provision similar to the one embodied in this amendment. The purpose of this amendment is identical with the purpose of the amendment attached to the naval bill, and that is to make a respectful request of the President that he shall go much further than the administration has already gone in the matter of trying to bring about an understanding or agreement among nations that may result in curtailing the burdens and dangers of militarism and making more certain international peace.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss this matter at any length, but I would like to have read by the Clerk an extract from an editorial which appeared only a week or so ago in the Saturday Evening Post. I am going to trespass upon the courtesy of that great journal to the extent perhaps of infringing its copyright so that this may be done. The extract bears upon the very point mentioned a few moments ago relative to the rapid construction of aircraft by the European powers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

During 1922 France built 3,300 battleplanes, which brought her air strength up to 140 service squadrons for 1923. Inasmuch as Great Britain had built only 200 planes during the year and could muster the comparatively insignificant total of 35 service squadrons, the Government became alarmed. It was felt that national security would be threatened if a one-power standard were not attained. As a first step toward that end it was decided on June 27 of last year to expand the Royal Air Force to a strength of 82 squadrons. France made a sharp and instantaneous countermove. Two days after John Bull announced his intention of seeking equality in the air the French Chamber of Deputies voted to add 68 squadrons to the French Air Force, which would bring the total up to 208, and leave the British as hopelessly outclassed as before.

In the meantime Italy is also feeling the urge to build aerial dreadnoughts. Mussolini recently stated: "If others arm in the air Italy must arm in the air."

The irony of the situation is that so far the competition is between allies. Must we regard the present race as a mere curtain raiser to the competitive fury that will rage when the enemy countries are in a position to enter the annihilation handicap? If brothers in arms can thus pyramid their expenditures and wreck their chance of economic revival in a spirit of, presumably, friendly rivalry, what would happen if Germany struggled to her feet and the Russian giant broke free from his soviet shackles?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. I presume the gentleman from Virginia will not contend it is not legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am very sorry my friend has made the point of order, but, Mr. Chairman, I can not contest that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise with the consent of the gentleman to express the wish that the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. Let us give expression to the sense of this branch of the Congress toward peace.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will indulge the Chairman he would like to make a one-minute personal statement. This has been a hotly contested bill. In my capacity as Chairman I have been called upon to make enough rulings during the consideration of this bill to probably displease almost every Member of the House in some particular or another. I shall be sorry, of course, if I have done this, but shall feel compensated in some measure if the membership of the House will believe that in making these rulings I have had but one object in view, and that is to establish and maintain the procedure of the House that it may best serve the public good. [Applause.]

Where I have found a line of precedents uniform and founded upon principle, I have been careful not to disturb them, but have followed them scrupulously. On the other hand, where I have found the precedents in hopeless conflict, I have endeavored to decide in the way that, in my judgment, seemed most nearly in accord with the best reasoning and calculated in the end to make for the best procedure in the House without regard to the merits of the subject matter involved. If my colleagues will entertain this opinion of me, I shall feel fully compensated for any momentary displeasure I may have caused by overruling or sustaining the various points of order raised by them. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as one member of the committee may I say that with all the Chairman's faults, we love him still. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], covering a million-dollar road in Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 5, with relation to auctioneers.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WATKINS: Page 5, line 15; at the end of line 15, on page 5, insert: "Provided further, That no auctioneer shall be paid more than $100 per day out of any money appropriated by this act for services rendered."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 87, line 18, strike out "$20,000" and insert the following: "and for the extension of a park through the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, of a strip of land, contiguous to the park, 60 feet wide, to connect the Shiloh National Military Park and the Corinth (Miss.) National Cemetery; such land to be acquired along or near the present main road from the Shiloh National Military Park to the Corinth National Cemetery, located on the battle field of Corinth, the center of such strip to follow as nearly as practicable along the survey heretofore made by Park Engineer Thompson; and for the construction of a hard-surface road and necessary bridges along the center line of such strip from the park to the Corinth National Cemetery; and for the erection of historical markers along such strip to show the movements of troops and other matters of historical interest in connection with the Civil War Battles of Shiloh and Corinth; in all, $70,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended within the incorporated limits of the city of Corinth."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not understand that this is the amendment which the gentleman from Kansas demanded a separate vote on. He said an amendment involving a million dollars.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no million dollars in this amendment, but if it is the amendment the gentleman wishes to vote on I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment just reported.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 187, not voting 155, as follows:

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I was not present during the roll call, but if I had been present and listening I would have voted "no."

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I was here a part of the time, but did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated many times that the theory on which gentlemen are allowed to vote is that their name was not called by mistake of the Clerk. If the gentleman will state that he was present and listening and did not hear his name called he can vote.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I can not state, Mr. Speaker, that I was present when my name was called, but I would like to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I came in while the roll was being called, but after my name was called. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the Clerk call my name, and perhaps I was not listening. If permitted to vote, I would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers the motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACK of Texas moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the bill to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

"Page 9, line 14, strike out the figures '$51,887,415' and insert in lieu thereof the figures '$41,887,415'; and in line 16, page 9, strike out the language 'and twenty-five,' so that the paragraph as amended will read:

"Pay of enlisted men: For pay of enlisted men of the line and staff, not including the Philippine Scouts, $41,887,415: Provided, That the total authorized number of enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts, shall be 100,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK of Texas) there were—ayes 33, noes 189.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-two Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 216, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8233) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8233, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I neglected to get an agreement in respect to the division of the time. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8233 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8233, and pending that I suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana, who has charge of the bill on the other side, that the time for general debate be divided equally between the two sides, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN] to control one half and I to control the other half, and that as far as any limitation on the time for debate is concerned, that it be not made until we meet again on Tuesday morning.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it not be possible to arrange that general debate shall close to-day?

Mr. SANDLIN. Oh, I do not think it would be possible to make that agreement.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8233.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8233, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the Republic of Brazil has 3,276,358 square miles and 30,636,000 people. The United States of America has 3,026,789 square miles and 110,000,000 people. They raise one great crop—coffee. We raise two great crops—wheat and cotton. Cotton is perfectly able to take care of itself and needs no help.

At the beginning of this Government we adopted the principle of a protective tariff to protect our American laborers and manufacturers in the home market, and it has been a wonderful success. Brazil about 20 years ago adopted the policy of protecting its coffee farmers in the foreign markets, and that has been a great success. America must now adopt a similar policy, and proceed to protect the American wheat farmer in the European market and do for the wheat farmer what it has done for the New England, New York, and Pennsylvania manufacturers and laborers. About 25 per cent of our wheat must be sold abroad. Unless our Government protects that wheat where it is sold the American farmer must discontinue 25 per cent of its production. When our shoemakers could not meet the foreign competition our Government gave them the necessary protection; and unless we do this now for the wheat farmer he will be ruined, because it is not going to be practical to decrease the production so much. Every fair man now simply looks for the method by which it can be accomplished safely.

The Brazilians sell their coffee in sacks of 132 pounds. At the end of the last century it was selling for about $15 a sack in Europe. At the beginning of this century they crowded the world market with coffee and it fell to $10 a sack. They undertook a system of valorisation, by which the Government bought, stored, and exported Brazilian coffee and controlled the world market, which gradually developed into a system by which the farmer stored his coffee in the Government warehouses and received certain advances from the Government in cash. However, since June, 1923, the Government has practically neither bought nor advanced any cash to the growers on their coffee. The coffee is stored in the Government warehouses. The coffee growers borrow money from local banks and commissarios, on their coffee, either in the Government warehouses or in the fields, and the money is repaid at the seacoast when the Government permits the sale to the exporters. Brazil raises about the same size coffee crop as it did in 1899. The result is that March 1 coffee sold in London for $22.70 a sack and in New York for $20.40 a sack. At this end of March No. 4 Santos grade of coffee is selling in New York City for $25 a sack. When they began to plan this work it was worth $10 a sack, and the result is that they have now doubled its value. Coffee has been selling this year in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, at $14.52 a sack and our consul at Santos says that Brazilian coffee is bringing exceptionally high prices.

HISTORY OF BRAZILIAN COFFEE PLAN.

As early as 1855 they were planting coffee in Brazil. By 1870 the Federal Government was buying sacks of coffee and sending them to Europe to discharge its obligations instead of buying exchange. In 1885 a tremendous impetus was given coffee planting. There are in Brazil three great coffee States, São Paulo, Minas Geraes, and Rio de Janeiro, which bear a much more important relation to the trade than even our Northwestern States do to the wheat trade of this country. At the beginning of this century, when a crop of 15,000,000 sacks was produced in Brazil and the world market was flooded and coffee fell to $10 a sack, great distress fell upon those particular States and practically all that has been done in that direction has been done by those States, particularly Sao Paulo, with the aid and comfort of the Federal Government. By 1906 the world had in storage 11,000,000 sacks of coffee, about three-fourths of a world crop. The crop of 1906-7 rose to the tremendous amount of 23,000,000 sacks, which on top of the 11,000,000 in storage precipitated what was equivalent to a catastrophe.

VALORIZATION.

By agreement at Taubate these three States undertook the beginning of this scheme of valorization. They planned to buy, store, and export coffee, and presently to advance money on the coffee when stored, and to levy an export tax of from 3 francs per sack to 5 francs presently, which enabled the Government to effectually determine what price should be paid in Brazil for coffee. At an early date they attempted the restriction of planting coffee trees to some extent and discussed and attempted many plans and theories which confused the American acquaintance with the subject. By 1910 this plan had succeeded in giving them practical control of the world market for coffee and that year they achieved a maximum price which brought prosperity to the Brazilian coffee planters.

The European war precipitated many difficulties which were gradually overcome. In fact, practically every year they were compelled to reorganize in order to secure sufficient funds and continue, but progress was gradually made. In 1917 the Government of Brazil loaned money to Sao Paulo to buy coffee, which plan by 1920 had proven successful. In 1919 the record shows that "the venture had proved very successful," and on June 19, 1922, a Federal Government decree was issued establishing a bureau or department for the "permanent protection of coffee." The success, of course, varied from year to year. The Department of Commerce informs me that in 1921 the average price for coffee at Rio de Janeiro was $3.24 a sack, in 1922 was $11.87, and in 1923 was $14.53, and has been $14.52 a sack this season. Since 1921 the Government does not appear to have been in the market for coffee but has permitted it to be stored and advanced money on it.

In 1923 much of the coffee was gathered in the midst of torrential rains, which ruined much of the crop, and the Government and the people met considerable difficulty in offsetting those conditions. The Brazilian capital stepped in and loaned money to the coffee planters on their crops and their storage and made unnecessary foreign aid for handling this crop, and as the consul at Santos says, this year they are receiving exceptionally high prices. On March 1 coffee was selling at $14.52 at Rio de Janeiro, at $20.40 in New York, and at $22.70 in London.

WHAT THEY DO.

The Federal Government of Brazil has erected 10 great coffee warehouses of superb equipment at Rio Preto, Rincão, Araraquara, São Carlos, Itirapina, Casa Branca, Campinas, Campo Limpo, and two at São Paulo. They have a storage capacity of 4½ million sacks, and handle 10 million sacks in the course of the year. In Rio Province, at Puerto, they are building a warehouse to contain 1,000,000 bags, and warehouses are to be added at Campinas which will contain 4,000,000 bags. Thus, a total capacity for holding nearly 10,000,000 sacks of coffee exists in Brazil. The Government has an arrangement with the railroads which transport that coffee from the fields to these warehouses and manage its storage there and its later shipment to the seaports of Santos and Rio de Janeiro. Every working day the Government permits the transport of 85,000 sacks to the port of Santos and 12,000 sacks to the port of Rio de Janeiro for export. The export is confined to the coffee so sent to the seacoast, and those warehouses have the capacity to thus handle and dispose of during the year about 20,000,000 sacks of coffee. When this coffee reaches Santos and Rio the exporters purchase it, though sometimes the Government still exports apparently. In other words, the coffee growers receive an advance when they deposit their coffee in the warehouses but only part ownership with their crop at Rio or Santos to the exporter, thus receiving what is paid at the seacoast, less the freight and handling charges up to that point.

The Department of Commerce has just informed me that the States place an export tax of 9 per cent ad valorem on the coffee exported from Santos and 8½ per cent ad valorem on the coffee exported from Rio, which taxes go to sustain the valorization plan.

Since I wrote the foregoing E. H. O'Brien, of San Francisco, has sent me the results of his recent visit to the Brazilian coffee markets which he made during the last six months. Twenty million sacks is a good world's crop, and three-fourths of that comes from Brazil. Twenty-five years ago Brazil's crop was about 15,000,000 sacks, as now. Mr. O'Brien says that owing considerably to the improvement in Brazilian finances, paper money, and exchange the export value of Brazil's one crop is about 300,000,000 gold dollars, which would be about $20 a sack. This is a decided improvement upon the figures heretofore presented, and is in accord with reports from our Santos consul that prices are exceptionally high, and completely rounds out and fortifies my original declaration that Brazil's coffee plans have been a wonderful success. Indeed, Mr. O'Brien concludes as follows:

In our opinion, Brazil undoubtedly will be the theater of enormous commercial development within the next decade. They are proceeding and progressing most orderly, sanely, and still most rapidly. With regard to its coffee-crop movements their problems seem past ones. The almost astounding success of this last defense movement, accomplished without the assistance of outside management or capital, and with the modern and permanent interior warehouse system affording such complete control, every indication would point that any future problem is already anticipated and guaranteed by a perfected Gibraltar defense fort.

Mr. O'Brien, by the way, calls attention to the fact, entirely overlooked apparently by our officials, that Brazilian capital is caring for the Brazilian crop without foreign aid and without Government financial help. I shall ask leave to insert in the Record Mr. O'Brien's review of Brazilian conditions, and commend it to the Members of the House who are interested in Brazilian efforts to help the farmer. It is the best paper on that subject I have ever seen anywhere. The Tea and Coffee Trade Journal seems to recognize him as a good man and a good authority, and I hope you will read his statements. In what way can we utilize Brazilian experience to help our wheat farmers? In my judgment full information with regard to the Brazilian coffee plan is the greatest aid we can possibly have.

Mr. BURNNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BURNNESS. Can the gentleman tell us approximately how much of the world supply of coffee is raised in Brazil?

Mr. LITTLE. Three-fourths of it. Colombia is probably the principal rival. The Brazilian crop of 15,000,000 sacks per annum is just about what it was at the close of the last century. What legislation has done to it has enabled it to greatly increase its prices but has not resulted in any serious extension of its area. Encouragement of the coffee trade by law has not resulted in tremendous acreages, and there is no reason why careful handling should greatly increase the wheat fields.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I hesitate to make a suggestion to the gentleman, because he is well posted on this subject; but there is a great distinction between coffee and wheat.

Mr. LITTLE. I can not yield for a speech on that subject.

Mr. BLANTON. Not everyone uses coffee, but everyone uses wheat.

Mr. LITTLE. I have traveled in four continents and the islands of the sea and found people drinking coffee everywhere pretty much, but I have seen millions who scarcely ever eat wheat. The same principles apply to the handling of both crops, and they are entirely alike in their powers of preservation and storage.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman to state that the Government of Brazil advances money to the coffee growers for coffee to be used for domestic purposes?

Mr. LITTLE. Coffee used in Brazil is, I understand, supplied by the commission houses at Santos and Rio, by the men who also export. There is so little information in Washington on the subject that I have had very great difficulty in presenting the facts that I have here, and I do not believe you will find anything available here with as many facts assembled on the subject as there are in this article. I have raked and scraped everything that I could find. Brazil's home consumption of coffee is comparatively very small. In the United States we will consume three-fourths of our wheat crop, and the Government will not be compelled to buy the home consumption wheat. They will only attempt to handle the exportable wheat.

The Government of the United States can utilize for storage all the great warehouses that we now possess and need build nothing. The Government ships of the United States are all ready to transport our wheat all over the world at a minimum of expense.

OUR LOCAL PRICES.

In order to assist the American farmer we must meet him at the harvest field with a price which will at least equal his cost of production. Unless this Government prepares to do that much the farmer must discontinue planting so much wheat. Unless you do that you can not protect him in any foreign market. I have estimated that the Government must prepare to pay him at least $1.10 a bushel at his home town, and if such a bill should be enacted Congress could easily determine another price if it saw fit. If you can actually get him more without precipitating a cataclysm of wheat acreage next fall, let us do it. If the American farmer knows the Government is prepared to pay him $1.10 at home, he will sell for no less, and if the American wheat buyer and miller realizes the Government is prepared to do that, they will pay $1.10 at the farmer's home town, and that will be the price of wheat all over this country, as made by Government competition which they must meet. Thus you see that the Government need buy no wheat that is intended for home consumption. That wheat will take care of itself without any Government interference at all. You have thus disposed of some 600,000,000 bushels or three-fourths of our crop. The Government must then be prepared to purchase all our exportable wheat at $1.10 or whatever price may be decided on. That wheat the Government must arrange to ship abroad into the foreign market.

Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture does that he will be able to dominate the price of wheat at Liverpool. He will be able to give the American farmer assurance that he will never again lose money on his wheat crop. This year the world's wheat crop is 500,000,000 bushels less than was its average for the six years before we went into the war, and there is always a market for all the world raises, and always will be.

The storage plan will apply to every article that is grown on the farm that is sound, preservable, and easily transportable. Some gentlemen suggest, what was the difference between coffee and wheat. A grain of wheat and a grain of coffee endure as well one as the other. We proceed in this bill on the theory that when we find wheat and the Government will pay $1.10, you will not take any less. When the buyer finds the Government will buy, the Government will not have to buy any. The farmer will get the price, and that will mean $1.10.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says and agree with him on most things, but what I want to ask the gentleman is this: I have heard the gentleman's argument that the Secretary of Agriculture might be able to control the price at Liverpool with this sort of a bill. I was wondering why the present grain exchanges that buy wheat and control the farmers' wheat now when they get it, why they are not in a position to control this?

Mr. LITTLE. Why do not they control it in Brazil for coffee? The same reason. You can not make a bunch of speculators assist the American farmer, and this must be taken care of by the Government, and you can not create a corporation to do it. That was illustrated in the Ship Building Corporation, and by the old Grain Corporation which beat the American farmers out of about 800 million dollars in one year.

Mr. BURTNESS. What is the gentleman's comment on this situation? The world has got to have absolutely the Brazilian coffee crop—

Mr. LITTLE. And the American wheat.

Mr. BURTNESS. Well, American wheat for export is only about 200,000,000 bushels—

Mr. LITTLE. And they need every bushel of it.

Mr. BURTNESS. On the whole, that is a small percentage of what is used by the world now—

Mr. LITTLE. They need every bit of wheat they can get. In the six years since the war we have shipped 1,500,000,000 bushels of wheat to Europe. By all plans but this from Brazil you will lose money on every bushel you ship to Europe, according to all claims advanced. The only possibility to beat the game is for some great disinterested party like this Government or that of Brazil to store and hold the wheat till they come to a suitable market price. If we had received 20 cents a bushel more in Europe we would be $300,000,000 better off. In my judgment under my plan this Government could have done that. You know it could not be done any other way, so why quibble? I am going to discuss the proposition right now.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am glad the gentleman is.

Mr. LITTLE. If you examine House bill 8330, the bill I introduced regarding the wheat farmer, you will find that the principle stated might well include cotton, and if ever cotton should be involved in the difficulties that attack coffee and wheat the system could at once apply equally well. The attempt has been made to extend the principle of this system of purchase to all farm products, including stock and stock products and grain products. If you will consider it a moment you will see that the same principle of purchase and storage will not apply to all these other things. The grain elevators dispense with any investment of that kind, while the care of stock and stock products and flour would require enormous investments, and such a proposition would mount up to a necessity for billions of capital continually invested. The complexities and complications of such a system would require a very advanced stage of socialistic government and many extravaganzas besides it seems to me. If we can dispose of the difficulties of the wheat farmer in one piece of legislation we will have accomplished for our people what Brazil has done for its people, and then we can take up one by one, not only all farm products but all other interests and difficulties which the Government can legislate to assist, but, gentlemen of the House, if we can not put through a bill to assist the wheat farmer, who is chin deep in all these difficulties, we can never hope on this floor ever to legislate for other people with the same friendship and good sense that we have extended to the beneficiaries of the protective tariff of this country.

We can then grasp the entire world market in the hands of the Department of Agriculture. The Liverpool market would cease to dominate anybody or any place or any price.

The development of the industries of this country under the protective tariff has given our workmen the highest wages on earth and has established great factories and great cities all over the Nation. This was done by simply protecting their interests in our home market. Brazil has demonstrated beyond question that the interests of their coffee planters can be protected by their Government in foreign markets. We have here in our wheat farmers people who have developed so extensively that we produce a third more wheat than we consume. They contest with the world's market just as the manufacturers in New England contest with the world's product of manufactured goods in this country. They are entitled to the same protection, and have reached that extremity where they must either have that protection or discontinue and devote themselves to something else. A million people during the last 12 months removed from the farms to the towns and cities. Their march to town was as wonderful as the march of the Israelites from Egypt to the valley of the Jordan. Gentlemen of the House, do you want a thunderbolt to strike the Capitol before you can take notice of what is going on in this country? This is almost equivalent to a revolution in this country already, and you will soon have a business revolution if you do not do your duty by the wheat farmers just as you did your duty by the manufacturers. Brazil has blazed the way. Now, gentlemen, gird on your armor and get down to business.

Under House bill 8330 the Government would be authorized to pay $1.10 a bushel for wheat at the farmer's home town and to pay up to $1.25 a bushel with the market as it rose to that point. The Brazilian coffee plan has demonstrated that when the States or the Government of Brazil apply an export tax, and restrict the amount of export as this Government could, they at once have a tremendous influence on the world's purchasing price of the Brazilian product. When the Government is prepared to pay $1.10 at Jonesburg, the men with the great mills would meet the Government competition and pay the same price, so that the Government would never be forced to buy any wheat at all for home consumption. These men have millions of dollars invested in the great mills. They can not afford to remain idle for a day. They will simply meet Government competition at every place and utilize the wheat in their mills for home consumption, so that there will be no difficulty with regard to the home price for wheat in this country. The proposition is so simple that it is sometimes difficult for men to believe that it could be done; but if you will calmly trust to your reason, and avoid your prejudice, and remember the history of Brazil, you will see that its certainty is really based on its simplicity. There are no foolish and pedantic complications involving the department in a maze of contradictions and impossibilities and fairy dreams. The millers and home utilizers will pay what the Government offers for wheat, because they must have that much for home consumption. If they should not, the Government will simply purchase that wheat, put it in the elevators temporarily, and sell it at home, if the home buyers made it necessary, and abroad in the final analysis. In short, the Government would apply to the handling of wheat the same brains and the same courage manifested by Joseph Leiter, backed by the immense resources of this great Republic, which would mean the mastery of the world trade in grain and cotton.

I have sometimes stood in awe at what improvements might occur in the world if every person in it would live under the exact application of the rules of good, ordinary, common sense for 30 days. Let us try it, gentlemen, on the wheat trade. If it works, perhaps it might be applied to some other products of the farm; but I earnestly hope that if I shall have convinced anybody of the utility of my suggestions as to wheat, he will not spring at one bound to the conclusion that all the ills of humanity can be cured and all the difficulties meeting all farmers can be disposed of at one sweep of the pen because this proposition is reasonable and easy of accomplishment. If you undertake, gentlemen, to make the simple plan I have suggested here, or the equally simple plan of Brazil, apply to all this stock and all the crops and all the business of 110,000,000 of people, you will not be making a law, you will be writing a comic opera.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman referred to Brazil and the manner in which they handle the coffee production. Do not they restrict in Brazil the production of coffee to somewhere near the normal demand?

Mr. LITTLE. Early in its history Sao Paulo restricted the planting of coffee trees temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Can I get five additional minutes?

Mr. WOOD. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Early in the history of this plan they did, but I have explained about what they did. The people bring in the coffee to the Government warehouses in the interior, and they allow 35,000 sacks every workday to go to Santos for shipment and 12,000 to Rio, and that is all the restriction there is in it.

Mr. MORGAN. That is to prevent a decline from an overflow of the market?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; and the wheat is sold to the exporters at the seaports; they do not have a law to prevent the growing of it. Now, the simple fact is that they raise in Brazil now only 15,000,000 sacks of coffee, which is what they raised 24 years ago. It has not increased the crop at all.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I had in mind. They restrict production?

Mr. LITTLE. No; they restrict shipment to the seaports for export.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, in the case of wheat, what is going to be the situation of the surplus production of wheat all around 180,000,000 bushels annually?

Mr. LITTLE. If there is any more than we consume, they will export it. The Government will pay $1.10 for it in your home town and export it. Every year in the world they use every bushel they raise. This year we are 500,000,000 bushels behind the average world's production. It is just a question of what cash we are going to get out of it. My figure is that when the American Secretary gets to Europe, with 25 per cent of the wheat sold there and maybe more, he will dictate the price of wheat in Liverpool as Joe Leiter did in Chicago and as Brazil does. Suppose he withholds one-fourth of the crop in a year and ships no wheat to Europe? Wheat would then go up to a great price. Suppose he withheld all American wheat for three months from Europe? Everybody here realizes that wheat would go up. Suppose he made a combination with Canada and said, "You come with the Secretary of Agriculture, with all American wheat, and we will pool our interests and fix the price in Europe and run Argentina or anybody else off the field whenever we want to"? The Secretary of Agriculture is just as good a gambler as Joe Leiter. He can dominate the corner. That is a matter that appeals to a man's common sense and good judgment. Joe Leiter is the only man who ever did make any money for the farmer.

As to handling the 180,000,000 bushels exported annually, that is what this bill is for. The Government will buy that exportable wheat and sell it abroad, just as Brazil disposes of its coffee crop. They simply withhold it from the world market until a propitious moment arrives, and never rush their crop upon a crowded market, which ruined Brazil 25 years ago as it would now if permitted. Mr. Leiter handled the Chicago market and the Secretary, in my judgment, will be able to handle the market at Liverpool. He certainly ought to be able to combine with the other exporters and land there on amicable terms. We are losing money now, and, if necessary, he can ship a few millions into Europe and lose some more money and convince them that it is worth their while to deal with him. I do not see any reason why the Secretary of Agriculture can not control the prices from Washington easier than the gamblers do from Liverpool. He certainly can not do worse than we are doing nor than would any proposition by which you concede in advance you would lose money on every bushel shipped. At least, gentleman, let the farmer have a gambler's chance to win, which is denied him by all your other bills.

Once I heard Lord Rosebery speaking on Irish home rule in the English Parliament. He told how desperate was the situation and said he was ready to take a leap in the dark. The situation demands some new remedy for wheat. We may perhaps be compelled to take a leap in the dark; but, gentlemen, I would rather the Secretary of Agriculture would take the farmer by the hand and take him to Europe in the care of this Government, just as we protected the manufacturers at home from foreign foes. We can then protect his wheat crop at Liverpool and see that he gets the better of the market.

The difference between undertaking wheat and undertaking hogs and cattle and everything else is that with ordinary plain common sense wheat can be handled. But suppose on the same day the Government says, "I will buy all the hogs and steers and everything you produce." Over here at Jonesboro you would wire in and say, "How much money has the Government got to go into this thing?" You will buy the wheat when the Government shows you it has enough money on hand to buy it. But when the Government says, "I will buy everything," every buyer will find out why he should pay more than he did yesterday. You can not assemble enough money together, gentlemen, to handle more than one of these crops at a time. If you have a reserve of a few millions, you can handle all the wheat necessary to convince the wheat buyers you will go through; but, gentlemen, can not you realize how great a fund would be necessary to convince the hog and cattle people and the packers that you could handle all those products? Why, that would take billions, and you would be forced to have the money in the bank all the time. This proposition is reasonable and easy of accomplishment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in accord with the permission given me to extend my remarks, I present here the following statement from E. H. O'Brien, of C. E. Bickford & Co., of San Francisco, coffee brokers. He makes the best statement of conditions in Brazil in coffee planting and selling that I have seen anywhere and it was just written March 20, and is down to date better than anything I have seen in the Department of Commerce or in the American newspapers:

MARCH 20, 1924.

The writer has just returned from a second trip to Brazil made within the past six months.

In a report published December 20, 1923, we made every effort to portray what then appeared to be the inevitable happenings of the past three months, and it is with keen regret that we fear far too few of our buying friends accepted the facts in patterning their then future policies.

In our judgment, the immediate future is of infinitely more vital concern to United States buying interests than the statistical position which confronted them three months ago.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Luiz Suplicy, the recognized dean of Santos coffee brokers, who for more than 25 years past has enjoyed by far the largest volume of spot sales between commissario and exporting interests, and who is generally regarded as being the official Government representative in the distribution of their spot acquisitions, we were favored with the following highly interesting statistics:

Santos crop, 1923-24 (estimated).....	15,000,000
Stock in Santos July 1, 1923.....	1,200,000
Rio crop, 1923-24 (estimated).....	8,200,000
Stock in Rio July 1, 1923.....	800,000
Espirito Santo and north of Brazil.....	800,000	20,500,000
Exported from Santos July 1, 1923, to December 31, 1923.....	5,600,000
Exported from Rio same period.....	2,600,000
Espirito Santo and north of Brazil (which is all their present crop).....	800,000
	9,000,000
Amount of coffee which will probably be exported from January 1, 1924, to June 30, 1924:
Santos.....	5,100,000
Rio (remainder of present crop).....	1,200,000	15,300,000
Balance for the 1923-24 crop.....	5,500,000
Estimated Santos crop, 1924-25.....	7,000,000
Estimated Espirito Santo, Rio, and north of Brazil.....	8,000,000
Balance brought forward from 1923-24 crop.....	5,500,000	15,500,000

If the world's consumption in 1924-25 is the same as this year we will probably start the 1925-26 crop without any stock in Brazil.

BRAZIL'S ABSOLUTE COFFEE CONTROL.

On our previous trip the only possible weak link in the absolute control of Brazil's domination and price dictate in supply was their possible pinch of money through steadily declining milreis values. On December 1, 1923, the milreis rate was 11½ to the dollar, against a par value of about 8 milreis to the dollar. To-day it is about 9 milreis to the dollar, or transposed, within 90 days Brazil's money has advanced from slightly less than 9 cents per milreis to fully 11 cents, or approximately 25 per cent, within these three months. This is highly indicative of Brazil's fiscal improvement.

Everyone believes the milreis will further advance within the next few months through Brazil's steady and increasing prosperity, and it would appear that the Brazilian Government itself is purposely keeping the milreis rate down to avert chaos or almost ruin of import merchants, by giving them an opportunity of disposing of their United States or other foreign purchases engaged at a time when they had to establish the dollar value on a 1½ milreis rate and resell in milreis on their present value.

For example, Brown & Jones, of Rio de Janeiro, purchased 10 Ford cars on December 15 last at a cost of $300 each. It took 34,500 milreis to make the purchase. To-day the same 10 cars could be bought for approximately 27,000 milreis, and naturally potential buyers, alert to the greater buying strength of their milreis, would be prone to purchase only on a percentage profit over present established import costs.

The same table applies on almost every article imported, so that it well behooves the Brazilian Government to gradually adjust their milreis worth to relieve financial stress, particularly in a city like Rio de Janeiro, which is largely dependent on its merchandizing import resales.

But this table is again reversed in its application to coffee, which in most instances was purchased some months ago from growers or commissaries in milreis, then withheld in Government warehouses until its arrival in Santos, and automatically gold-price exactions are calculated on their milreis convertibility, or, possibly more clearly expressed, three months ago $1 would buy 11½ milreis' worth of coffee; to-day but 9 milreis' worth, or a 25 per cent enhancement through exchange fluctuations.

This Federal administration is pledged and is rigidly adhering to a most economical and conservative budget policy. Dr. Artur Bernardes, President of Brazil, and his entire Federal cabinet are immensely popular, and during his less than two years of office exports have multiplied in volume and value, while imports have perceptibly decreased. It is reported that Brazil's paper currency issues are being steadily recalled, with present currency outstanding (paper) of only 2,400,000 contos de reis, or at the rate of 8 milreis to the dollar $300,000,000 gold, or about the export value of one coffee crop, so that their financial problems appear extremely ably managed and well within ultraconservative bounds. To better substantiate their prosperity in Sao Paulo alone, the second largest city of Brazil, with a population of over 800,000, there is a new building being completed for every hour of every day for more than a year past. Property values in this city have multiplied three and four times in the last five years.

With these apparently temptingly high prices for coffee, which now appear as being assured for at least two years or more to come, the inference might be that an era of overproduction could be influenced and expected, but experienced and expert investigators on this score predict a far greater probability of underproduction, their beliefs being predicated on the development of other crops and their accompanying manufacturing industries in Brazil.

It is most surprising to find in research that coffee production in Brazil has not materially increased in the last 20 years. In fact, certain of the choicest quality producing districts now only produce a little more than half the quantity of coffee per thousand trees compared with the production of the same trees 5 or 10 years ago. Many fazendas still show the stunted effect of the frost of about five years ago, and in frequent instances coffee plantations in frost districts have been supplanted with sugar. The production of sugar has advanced in leaps and bounds. Last year one prominent coffee planter produced 80,000 bags of sugar with more profit, less merchandising and labor difficulty, from land which until the big frost was considered one of the best coffee fazendas in Brazil.

As recently as 10 years ago Brazil imported all their rice, which is consumed in a very large way by all their immigrant labor, as well as the native Brazilians; but in the past three years they not alone have grown enough for their own consumption but are seeking and in a position to export surplus quantities.

Of far greater importance than either rice or sugar is cotton, which has passed the experimental stage in Brazil, and unquestionably the next few years will see a development in cotton growing and cotton manufacture in Brazil which will put that country on a competitive cotton-growing basis with the balance of the cotton-producing world.

Great Britain is assisting and fostering this development on a very broad financial scale. This industry, too, has been started within the past 10 years.

Cotton, like sugar, can be raised on coffee land, and many believe that it is destined to ultimately exceed coffee in importance and become a more powerful trade factor.

Formerly Brazil imported hosiery and all other cotton goods. She is now exporting manufactured cotton goods in steadily growing quantities on both a favorable quality and price basis.

Good coffee land is good cotton land, and the latter requires far less care and labor; it matures before the frost season, eliminating grave coffee concern, and this fact in itself bids fair to give coffee growing a race for supremacy.

These diversified crop reports are only chronicled as food for thought regarding coffee overproduction.

BRAZIL'S OFFICIAL PURPOSE TO PROTECT FARMERS.

At present, the next Brazil coffee crop appears to be in size a most wieldy one for Government control and accompanying Federal, merchant, and farmer prosperity. Since all wealth originates in the soil or has a direct relation thereto, it seems Brazil's official purpose is to protect and serve their farmer element.

The cost of production of coffee in Brazil has increased at least 300 per cent in five years past. Their labor question is a most serious and vital one, since the pinch of high prices for maintenance through the declining buying power of the milreis, coupled with labor's realization that in the rapid development of agricultural and industrial Brazil the demand for labor greatly exceeded the supply, as well as the modern application in their demands, as experienced in the United States, for an improved standard of living, have furnished a cause and effect playing a very important factor in production costs.

Labor is hardly secondary to capital in Brazil's development needs. It is of record in our report of December 20, last, how Brazil is spending money and effort to attract immigration. Their willingness to defray transportation costs for families, with propagandists sent to Spain, Portugal, Italy, Japan, and elsewhere for this purpose. Some four or five years ago there was a large influx of Japanese, but as they did not thrive in health through primitive sanitation, yellow fever, typhus, and other tropical ailments, the Japanese as a class have almost wholly migrated. Decided headway is being made, however, to improve sanitation and in eliminating conditions which have thwarted agricultural and industrial development, and the Rockefeller Institute has recently done exceptional cooperative work with Brazilian medicos toward the extermination of the mosquito and other germ carriers, such as was done so successfully in Panama, Ecuador, Chile, and other tropical American countries.

COFFEE-DEFENSE PLAN POPULAR.

The coffee-defense plan, with its already proven, highly successful effect, is not only most popular with the farmer but with bankers, commissaries, as well as the Federal administration in its accompanying national prosperity. No one has suffered in Brazil except the bearish exporting speculators and the skeptical world's buying clientele, more pronouncedly so in the United States than in Europe, and who seemingly will not accept the facts and adjust their positions to cope therewith.

Up to March 1, 1924, there has been exported something over six and one-half million bags of coffee from Santos of the remaining quantity of this supposed 15,000,000-bag crop. The distribution is about as follows:

	Bags.
In Government warehouses in the interior.....	2,500,000
In railroad stations and in transit to Government warehouses.....	1,250,000
Stock in Santos.....	750,000
Stock in Sao Paulo.....	500,000
On growing fazendas, 2,500,000 to.....	3,500,000

A total of 7,500,000 to..... 8,500,000

The two and one-half to three and one-half million bags on plantations is almost all unusable black-beaned, rain-damaged truck, and a large percentage will, as has been the custom for many years, be thrown back in the soil to act as a fertilizer.

Much of the coffee in the Government warehouses has already been rebagged through its soggy condition and through the rain damage puffing the bags to a bursting point.

It is still the belief and consensus of opinion that all of this crop which fazendeiros care to ship and enter into Government warehouses must and will have precedence over the new-crop coffees, which will be harvested and start for the Government warehouses in June or July next; and while there is some agitation on the part of exporters to request the Government to allow a percentage of new-crop coffee in the daily entries at Santos, few think any heed will be given, as such a move would serve to shatter confidence, and particularly so since the present perfected plans and organization are proving so satisfactory and profitable.

A fortnight's grading during February of each day's 35,000-bag entries into Santos by one of the largest exporting interests resulted in the following classifications:

Bags grading 4's and above	10,500
Bags grading 5's to 7's	18,000
Bags grading 7's and below	6,500

Other thoroughly reliable exporting interests state that not even 20 per cent of 7,000 bags are "soft" 4's and above.

Several recent block purchases made in Santos by exporters necessitated the buying of at least 40 per cent low-grade rain-damaged coffee, and fully 30 per cent of mediocre hard-drinking undesirables to secure 30 per cent of real quality selections. Buying exporters frankly state and show cause not warranting purchases as just enumerated as even the present premium differentials for a real quality 4 of as much as 1½ to 2 cents over a hard, mediocre 4 does not offset the quantity or quality of almost unusable trash which is accumulating in Santos and which they apparently must take in to get coffee which will pass muster in import markets where past descriptions are taken as a test criterion.

The next Santos crop of 1924-25 is, of course, variously estimated. A consensus of opinion seems to be six to seven million bags, some insisting 6,500,000 to be a maximum, while the highest estimate heard was 8,000,000.

The next Rio crop can not be over 3,000,000, probably not over 2,500,000 bags.

In the face of the above it would appear that the present and immediate future independence of Brazil, so far as their coffee crops are concerned, is practically invulnerable, and as Europe is now looming up as an increasingly important buying factor—in fact, most surprisingly so from both a quantity and quality viewpoint, during our stay of about three weeks European buying was more than two bags to one of the United States—surely United States buyers have a most decidedly increased disturbing factor in any nearby or prolonged hopes for a material price relief.

In our opinion Brazil undoubtedly will be the theater of enormous commercial development within the next decade. They are proceeding and progressing most orderly, sanely, and still most rapidly. With regard to its coffee-crop movements their problems seem past ones. The almost astounding success of this last defense movement accomplished without the assistance of outside management or capital, and with the modern and permanent interior warehouse system, affording such complete control, every indication would point that any future problem is already anticipated and guaranteed by a perfected Gibraltared defense fort. All coffee grown on individually owned plantations must go into the most adjacent Government warehouses to await its turn of allotment and shipment to the seaport, Santos, from which it is exported, each of the interior Government warehouses being assigned a weekly proportion, according to stocks, to make up 35,000 bags daily to Santos. Farmers are advanced money on their Government warehouse stocks, or even before harvesting, by commissarios or bankers, usually about half the selling worth, until convertible into sales at Santos by export sales.

C. E. BICKFORD & Co.
By E. H. O'BRIEN.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I desire for a few moments to discuss the matter of law enforcement.

I am an old-fashioned American. I believe in the Government and Constitution established by the fathers. I believe in the Government upheld and adhered to by George Washington; I believe in the Government loved and defended by Andrew Jackson. I believe in the Government that had its very origin in the principles announced by Thomas Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence. I believe in the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and believe it should be enforced.

A multitude of suggestions have recently been made for raising revenue, and it has been suggested that a tax be levied on malt liquors containing more than one-half of 1 per cent alcohol.

I think the lawyers of the House agree that this suggestion is untenable, unless Congress first change the provisions of the national prohibition act and the States change the provisions of their State codes. It would be entirely impracticable for Congress to lay a tax on beer of a higher voltage than one-half of 1 per cent as long as the national prohibition act prohibits such beer, or, if that act were repealed, if such beer were still prohibited in many States of the Union.

The question we have to decide here in Congress is not primarily whether or not a certain amount of alcohol in wine or beer will actually intoxicate those who drink, but our responsibility is to determine what legislation is necessary to enforce the eighteenth amendment and make the necessary appropriations to carry out the intent of the act.

The second section of the eighteenth amendment says:

The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The Supreme Court of the United States has clearly stated that the eighteenth amendment—

Binds all legislative bodies, * * * and of its own force invalidates every legislative act which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits.

It also says that the second section of the amendment—

Does not enable Congress or the several States to defeat or thwart the prohibition, but only to enforce it by appropriate means.

In other words, our responsibility is to determine what kind of legislation is required to make this amendment effective. I think the people in the States which ratified the eighteenth amendment through their legislatures expected us to take into consideration their experience in enforcing prohibition in the States. They knew what legislation was appropriate and necessary. Thirty-three of the States had adopted prohibition, 30 of them defining intoxicating liquor as that containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol. Only three States had a 1 per cent standard, and none of them a larger standard than 1 per cent.

It is interesting to note that in a number of these States, after they had adopted prohibition with a one-half of 1 per cent standard, they later on prohibited all alcoholic liquors when efforts were made to raise the amount of alcohol permitted in beverages under the law. Instead of increasing the amount of alcohol, they have with practical uniformity decreased it, and now 15 States have prohibited all liquors containing any alcohol.

There is one thing we have to face in determining this question, namely, that Congress can not legalize any liquor which the States prohibit. With two-thirds of the States, or more, prohibiting one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol, it would be inconsistent for Congress, under an amendment intended to bring about uniformity of prohibition enforcement, to repeal the law so that a very few States might allow liquors of a greater alcoholic content to be sold. This would not only destroy uniformity of operation, but would handicap the enforcement of the law in the adjoining States where liquor with this larger per cent of alcoholic content was not legalized, because this liquor would be transported into the States where the State law did not permit its manufacture.

The question involved in this controversy, then, is a question of supporting the Constitution and the laws pursuant thereto. This part of the Constitution was adopted by a larger majority than any other. The prohibition question has been before the public ever since 1777, when the Colonial Congress passed a bone-dry resolution, urging the Colonies to prohibit the sale of liquors. From that day to this it has been before the American people. Ninety-five per cent of the territory of the Nation was dry before the eighteenth amendment was adopted. Seventy per cent of the people lived in this dry territory. The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution was the resultant of a steady growth of sentiment against what the people considered a recognized evil. Now that it is written into the Constitution, it ought to be enforced and it ought to be obeyed by both friends and foes of prohibition.

The President of the United States said recently:

A government which does not enforce its laws is unworthy of the name of a government, and can not expect to hold either the support of its own citizens or the respect of the informed opinion of the world.

On another occasion President Coolidge said with reference to our Constitution:

The Constitution of the United States is the final refuge of every right that is enjoyed by any American citizen. So long as it is observed these rights will be secure. Whenever it falls into disrepute the end of the orderly organized Government, as we have known it for more than 125 years, will be at hand.

Chief Justice William Howard Taft, of the Supreme Court, expressed it in this way:

One who, in the matter of national prohibition, holds his personal opinion and his claim of personal liberty to be of higher sanction than the overwhelming constitutional expression of the people is a disciple of practical Bolshevism.

Mr. Taft also said in addressing the Washington Branch of the Yale Alumni Association:

The safety of society is in obedience to the law. If you like the law or not, as long as it is regularly adopted it is our business to obey it.

As I look at it, the question has now resolved itself into one of law enforcement, and upon this issue there ought to be no difference of opinion among loyal, patriotic citizens. As Members of Congress, we take an oath of office to support the Constitution without mental reservation or purpose of evasion. Every citizen of the United States is bound by the very terms of his citizenship to support the Constitution and the laws enacted pursuant thereto. We can not defy the prohibition law and expect others to obey other laws. We should make liberal appropriation for its enforcement. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STENGLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I have been fearful of late that I might be looked upon by my colleagues as somewhat of a nuisance because of my frequent appearance on the floor of this House, being only a first-term Member. But I believe, my friends, that when measures are brought before us for consideration with which we have close-up acquaintanceship, and of which we have direct knowledge, it is our duty one to the other to occupy at least a small part of the time allotted to the bill in order to give to our colleagues the benefit of our experience and the additional knowledge which we may possess. I did not know until a few minutes ago that I was to be on this list of speakers to-day, and therefore I shall be compelled to speak extemporaneously. But I shall extend my remarks so that when I have finished the subject that I want to discuss I shall at least have placed in our public Record sufficient reason why you should vote as I shall now ask you.

If you will turn to page 6 of this bill, beginning with line 1 and ending with line 10, you will find the title, "Bureau of Efficiency," and beneath that a description of the disposition of $155,650, plus $500 for printing, a total of $156,150.

My friends, efficiency in public service is extremely desirable. No man in his right senses believes that any public servant, whether he holds elective office or appointive position, ought to be inefficient and remain in the public service; and I never have, since I have been here, attempted to create the impression that I was against the highest class of efficient service on the part of our public employees. What I do hesitate about, what I do stop seriously to think of, is the method and manner by which the ratings, and from such ratings promotions, are made among the 55,000 or 60,000 civil employees in this District and the more than 200,000 throughout the country.

In a former brief address to this body I pointed out to you that throughout the United States, in every civil-service commission of this country having any standing at all, the question of efficiency is a part and parcel of the employment and promotion arrived at in a civil-service commission; and in the Federal employment, up until the year 1916, it was then a part and parcel of the civil-service work of this District and of this Nation.

But during that year he who was its chief in a division of the Civil Service Commission had a falling out with the commissioners, and finding that he could not be the boss of the establishment, sought influence enough to tack onto an urgent deficiency appropriation bill that passed through this House a paragraph of legislation which has been decried here day after day in this session, and by a legislative enactment attached to a deficiency bill for appropriations he separated the Bureau of Efficiency and made it an independent establishment. From that day to this the records will show that the efficiency rating of Federal employees has been anything but fair and just.

It is not a personal fight with me. Lord bless you, if I never talked about it again I would live and be happy, but I hate to see good, valuable, honest, loyal, and faithful public servants, such as we have in this District and in the United States, so maligned, abused, and mistreated without a word of protest from any public man. [Applause.]

My office hours have been filled in the last few weeks and my mail has been heavily weighted with complaints of bad treatment, by this bureau, of very faithful public servants in this District. I only ask for fair play. I only seek justice at this time at your hands.

Oh, somebody will say, "You do not represent the District of Columbia. Why do you take so much interest?" I hold, gentlemen, that every one of the 435 Congressmen is a representative of the District of Columbia in addition to his own home district.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENGLE. Yes; for a question.

Mr. STEVENSON. And is it not a fact also that the civil-service employees are supposed to be apportioned amongst all the districts in proportion to population and, therefore, all of us have our proportion of employees here whom we represent and who have been imposed upon by this gang?

Mr. STENGLE. Yes. And in addition thereto you have your proportion of responsibility for what is going on in this District.

Now, we have heard a lot about the equality of allocation recently. We have heard considerable discussion about how much increase we could afford to give to the various departments of our Nation. We have heard it said that "You are asking too much here and there." I want to put this statement in the Record, and I want you to hear it, because it is the gospel truth: The Bureau of Efficiency to-day has an average salary among its employees of $2,910, and throughout the Nation the average is less than $1,700. Is that fair? Is it just? "Oh," but says somebody, "these are experts that they have there"; but the experts about whom we hear so much were drafted from other departments and brought into this small circle to do the bidding of one who ought not to be obeyed.

Now, I rise at this time to invite the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that at the proper time I shall move to strike out that entire paragraph and transfer the Bureau of Efficiency to the Civil Service Commission, where it belongs. Where are the economists of this House? Where are those who are daily harping about saving the public funds? Here is $156,000 that you can put back where it belongs and still conduct the public business, still have efficiency ratings, still have faithful public service, and have things done squarely and honestly.

I have introduced a bill for the abolishment of this bureau, and I have been unofficially informed that that bill will be favorably reported in a short while. But I want to anticipate the abolishment of that bureau by law by striking out the appropriation, so that if, because of the press of business, it becomes necessary to sidetrack the bill introduced in its proper channel we can sidetrack this bureau by taking this money away from it and transferring its duties where they legitimately belong.

There are departments under this Government that have not the same kind of service ratings as other departments have. We established here a Bureau of Efficiency and gave it authority to direct the service ratings of the Nation, and yet right here in this town is a large department that refused to be directed and was never forced to be directed. I refer to the Treasury Department under Secretary Mellon. And yet every man and woman who expects or ever hopes to be promoted from one grade to another or be transferred from one department to another is dependent upon an honest and fair rating for the service he or she performs.

Oh, it makes me sick as I think about it, and I have had fond hopes that maybe before this session adjourns I might arouse a sufficient interest among my colleagues to put a stop to this first-class farce that is being conducted under the guise of a Government bureau. I ask you now to consider well everything I have said prior to the five-minute rule on this bill.

Read up and investigate so as to determine whether I am speaking the truth or not. If I am, support that amendment when it comes up in its proper form, but if I am hot, arise on this floor, point to me and call me a faker, if you like, but I know that the records will speak for themselves and I ask nothing better than the cold-type records. [Applause.]

The efficiency rating plan was adopted in 1913, when it became a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, and directions were then plainly given that the Civil Service Commission should establish a system of service ratings based upon "records of facts" kept in each department of the Government, but after three years the then director of this work, who is now the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, found that he could not run the place to suit himself. He accordingly rushed to Capitol Hill, and with the aid and assistance of "friends" had a rider attached to the urgent deficiency bill making the division of efficiency an independent bureau with himself in absolute control. Since then things have been going from bad to worse, and the appropriations for this work increased from about $45,000 to $156,150 per annum. I regret to say that owing to a rule of this House I am forbidden to tell you who the "moving spirit" behind all of this high-handed work really is, but if I were permitted to reveal some facts in my possession you would not be very proud of some men who attempt to legislate for the Nation.

It seems passing strange, also, that in his mad rush to "steal" the efficiency division from the Civil Service Commission this "master artist in service rating" forgot to have transferred the following law which would have been extremely helpful to friends of honest government at this time:

Any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

One has only to check up a little on the condition of things in the departments located here in the District of Columbia, as I have honestly done, to thoroughly convince himself that there surely is something "rotten in Denmark." Only this week three very competent employees of one of these departments called to see me and gave me tangible evidence of "foul play" in their bureau—evidence which would convince any fair-minded person that favoritism was running rampant and prejudice not far in the rear—and on the very next day one of these employees was transferred to another bureau for "the good of the service." In other words, it seems to be looked upon as a crime for any employee to visit a Congressman in the interest of justice.

I rejoice, gentlemen, that the day of reckoning seems near at hand. The House Committee on Civil Service has reported out, unanimously, a bill for the abolishment of the Personnel Classification Board, a twin sister in "crime" of the Bureau of Efficiency, and I am promised that my bill for the abolishment of the Bureau of Efficiency will likewise be reported favorably in a few days.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope and pray that every Member of this House will rise above every consideration other than justice and fair play and look these two bills squarely in the face, for upon their enactment into law lies all hope for an honest disposition of the "mess" into which matters in our public service have been placed.

Let us go on record as the friends of loyal, faithful, and efficient civil servants, and the enemies of those who would use public office as a private snipe. Let us announce to the "swell-headed" bureau chief that favoritism will not go in American public service, that all decisions in service ratings must be based upon actual facts and not upon likes or dislikes of those working under their supervision. If we do this, colleagues, you and I will soon see a vast improvement in the public service. Otherwise, matters will go from bad to worse until soon we shall behold our army of Government servants thoroughly discouraged and disheartened, with those remaining in the service driven from pillar to post like slaves under the master's whip.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in what the gentleman from New York, who last spoke, said of public servants who are not appreciated, because I desire to speak of a public servant who, to my mind, has rendered a great service to his country and who, I feel, has not been appreciated, at least, if we take the tone of the press or judge from the newspapers and magazines of the country, which have failed to do him justice.

It is needless for me to say to the House that I do not always agree with the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. LONGWORTH. In fact, in legislative matters I have been trained in an entirely different school, that places no stamp of partisanship on ordinary legislation and refuses to obey the party lash whether wielded here or by the invisible government that would control congressional action. I have frequently disagreed with Mr. LONGWORTH in matters of political and legislative policy, notably on many features of recent tax legislation.

After several years' association on the same committee I can say, however, I know the majority leader, respect his squareness of dealings, admire his ability, and believe that few men could have brought order out of threatened chaos as well as the majority leader. Few men could have retained the respect of all their colleagues on both sides of the aisle under similar circumstances, and few men could have secured equal constructive legislation if subjected to the same conditions.

I have waited for some one better able and more qualified to speak in reply to unwarranted attacks in the press and from short-sighted partisanship occurring in my own party directed against the majority leader, but after reasonable delay I believe a brief word is proper for me to say.

Mr. Chairman, Leader LONGWORTH's principal defense in the eyes of extreme critics seems to be that he has not led his party colleagues into a position where political suicide would be invited and that he would not obey the positive commands issued outside of Congress. Further than that, he has not followed the dictates of Mr. Mellon and Wall Street interests so conspicuously represented on this floor during discussion of the tax bill. I submit, however, it is true that he did secure a tax bill several hundred per cent better than the Treasury bill then placed before us for passage.

The so-called Mellon bill was drafted without any committee hearings to relieve a handful of multimillionaires from present surtaxes, drawn by no one knows who or when or where, and opposed to elementary principles of taxation. It would not have received a handful of votes upon this floor excepting for the most terrific and expensive propaganda in all recent history pressed by beneficiaries who largely own or control the newspapers and leading magazines of the country.

The passage of the Mellon plan, it has been stated by the press, was to be a condition precedent for making campaign contributions by contributors who confidently expected Congress to endorse the plan.

Leader LONGWORTH knew the folly of that policy and did what any statesmanlike leader would do. He refused to obey such orders, secured the best tax reduction bill ever passed by the House, and the character of his leadership is evidenced by a vote of 408 out of 416 votes, or a practically unanimous vote of the House. The bill passed was a fair compromise, and gives relief to over 95 per cent of the Federal taxpayers of the country compared with less than 5 per cent who would have received larger tax plums if the Mellon plan had passed.

If Leader LONGWORTH—and I note he is here and I am complimented by his presence—if he does nothing more in his legislative career toward passing needed constructive legislation, he is entitled to the thanks of the country this early in the session for his record of leadership on the tax bill and soldiers' bonus bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH's immediate predecessor, with 165 working majority last session, supported by personal letters from the President read on this floor, repeatedly failed to secure demanded legislation on the dye embargo, surtax reduction, retroactive repeal of the excess profits law, and other measures, whereas Leader LONGWORTH, with a bare majority under unrestricted liberal rules, refused to ditch legislation, as urged by hot-heads, or to sacrifice everything to placate a few disappointed critics. He helped pass constructive legislation by wise and conciliatory leadership supported by a majority of Members composed of all factions.

I do not care to discuss unfair criticisms from those who have little influence with Congress. From the apricot, apple, McLean Post, or the antibonus, sales tax, Mellon tax press that threatens no campaign funds unless Congress toes the mark, the propaganda and criticisms are generally found to be from the same mold.

Criticisms of Mr. LONGWORTH and of Congress will continue on the tax and bonus bills until the issue is made plain and conditional political contributions are placed before the country with real interests disclosed. Politics and partisanship has run mad when the country is deluged with propaganda to pass a tax bill in order to squeeze out of closed pocketbooks enough campaign funds to run one or both of the political parties. Leader LONGWORTH refused to be driven, and he is entitled to congratulations from every Member of this House and from the country for his decision not to permit the American Congress to become a pawnbroker or fairy godfather for campaign contributors.

Whatever the motive governing his action, Mr. LONGWORTH has not been driven, but on the contrary he has led the House to pass the most constructive and equitable tax reduction bill in all history. If that be party treason, then he may well say, Make the most of it.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed the discarded, selfish Mellon tax-reduction plan so many times and it has received such emphatic repudiations here and is so certain of like treatment by the Senate that a post-mortem on the subject is unnecessary.

Tax reduction is now before another body, and through the press the country was recently informed by a distinguished gentleman from a western State that gave Mr. Taft half of his eight electoral votes, that the House tax bill we passed would cause a Treasury deficit of $100,000,000. Secretary Mellon more recently testified before the Senate committee that any deficit from the bill we passed would reach only $55,000,000, and this was followed by Treasury estimates of greater receipts than previously offered in the House. Next, the press advised the country that the same authority had announced that the bonus bill passed by the House would cost the Government nearly $5,000,000,000, instead of $2,100,000,000, as shown by the Legion actuary. In arriving at this figure numerous controverted items, with accumulated interest for 20 years, were added.

On the same basis a $21,000,000,000 national debt is not a $21,000,000,000 debt, because added interest will make the obligation $40,000,000,000 or $50,000,000,000 in years to come, depending on time of payment, just as the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. GREEN], who is present, has disclosed in the press in his answers to misstatements put forth in committee at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding is that the Treasury has practically abandoned the figures which were given on the bonus, conceding that they are very erroneous.

Mr. FREAR. And I say further the Treasury alone was not responsible for the incorrect and misleading figures which were given to the press, judging from the announcements made by one gentleman at the other end of the Capitol.

Testimony, estimates, and tax rates reached by proxy methods or such guesswork are willfully unfair and are offered for the purpose of misrepresenting to the country the real facts in issue.

It is said in the press that campaign contributors toward both parties are willing to have the tax reduction bill as passed by the House defeated or vetoed, provided the 25 per cent horizontal tax cut for 1923 and 1924, proposed by Chairman GREEN of our committee, can be separated from the bill.

And let me say in passing that the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. GREEN] is the one who proposed that tax-reduction plan reaching $200,000,000 for 1923 and 1924, and caused it to be inserted in the bill. It never came from the President of the United States nor from Secretary Mellon nor anyone else originally, and Chairman GREEN deserves whatever credit there is for it. [Applause.]

Papers that insist we should pass the Coolidge or Mellon proposal do not know or care to know the facts.

If taken out of the bill, this plan would leave a generous share of $200,000,000 refund from the Treasury that would find its way back to the pockets of the proposed campaign contributors during the next two years, but defeat the $400,000,000 annual tax reduction as passed by the House. In other words, the so-called Mellon plan proponents and Wall Street interests, it is said, will permit no permanent tax reduction law this session unless the original indefensible Mellon plan is accepted by Congress. They will ask for a 25 per cent reduction for 1923 and 1924, which is concededly a political bid at Treasury expense that can be characterized by a far uglier word. With $21,000,000,000 national indebtedness and a soldiers' bonus bill passed up to the President, why is the 25 per cent temporary reduction now urged by the same interests that once urged the Mellon plan, and why do they oppose the tax cut bill as passed by the House?

Mr. Chairman, if tax-free securities could be taxed by direct law, as I proposed when the tax bill was before the House, or if the abnormal excess profits could be taxed, or if undistributed profits that go to make up stock dividends could be taxed, or if higher inheritance-tax rates and gift taxes can be imposed, we will be able to stop large tax evasions, and under the inheritance and gift taxes reach tax-free securities that now escape.

Mr. Mellon and those who press his proposed tax relief bill are all opposed to this kind of a real tax on big business, even as they oppose relief for the smaller taxpayers. Every amendment proposed in the House was opposed by such interests.

But we did pass a compromise tax bill that gave over 50 per cent tax cut to 3,500,000 small taxpayers, and that is the bill that is now before the Senate for action.

I wish you would pay attention to this further fact, my friends, because I believe it is the vital part of the whole tax proposition now pending in the Senate. If the tax bill passed by the House should fail to pass the Senate or should pass the Senate and then be vetoed, and the 25 per cent Treasury grab is passed in its stead, it will mean that the American public will not have any real tax-reduction measure for two years—and I am indebted for the reminder to a suggestion from our distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. GREEN—and the $400,000,000 annual tax reduction proposal passed by the House will be defeated, forsooth, because the Mellon rates were not placed in the bill and because an inheritance tax and gift tax have been inserted.

Mr. Chairman, a defeat or veto of the $400,000,000 annual tax reduction bill will mean that all nuisance taxes will remain as in the present law undisturbed. The candy tax, the jewelry tax, the movie tax that earned a liberal reduction through Mellon-plan propaganda, the $23,000,000 tax reduction for automobiles, all will remain a burden to the country. The 25 per cent reduction on earned incomes and the 50 per cent reduction in income-tax rates for 3,500,000 taxpayers will also be defeated because comparatively a handful of men are disappointed in their Mellon tax-propaganda investment. The inheritance tax, gift tax, and partial publicity of records will all go the same way.

Forgetting the repeal of the $450,000,000 excess-profits tax and $50,000,000 surtax reduction secured by them from Congress last session, these same interests now selfishly demand the major part of the next tax cut. Let responsibility rest where it may eventually belong if real tax reduction fails, but I pause a moment to congratulate the Republican leader of the House, who secured 408 votes, an unprecedented number, for the best and greatest tax reduction bill ever passed by the House, a bill that benefits primarily the man least able to pay but lifts tax burdens for all.

I congratulate any man who can hold together in a fairly good working organization 435 Republicans and Democrats of widely divergent views and who enjoys the respect and confidence of every man of the House because of his frankness and fair dealing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. WOOD. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That was an accomplishment which the leader could never have performed if he had not himself been so enthusiastic for those rates, was it not?

Mr. FREAR. I will say this to my friend from Texas, and I am very glad he suggested it, knowing, as I happen to know, the means by which we reached a compromise: That the Republican leader went more than halfway. And it required a strong effort, because he was pulled upon hard from all sides. I happen to know the situation, because others of us were much in the same position, but we finally reached a compromise supported in the House by 408 votes. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. You are doing pretty well. I did not rise to interrupt you.

Mr. FREAR. I assumed the gentleman did; and let me say that the gentleman from Nebraska has spoken some strong words on the tax bill that have been of value.

I congratulate the House and the country that the Republican leader refused to permit Mr. Mellon or Wall Street or any other outside interest to dictate his course.

I believe I voice the good will and high respect of every Member of the House in giving this halting testimonial from one who has frequently differed from the Republican leader but who has never found him wanting in fairness or in the qualities that make for successful leadership. It is easy to criticize but hard to construct. The respect and confidence of the House means more to the leader and to the country than any approval that could come to him outside these walls, for without such possessions legislation must falter or fail, while with them all heights of leadership and accomplishment are possible. That is one secret of Leader LONGWORTH's success. We respect him for the enemies he has made and for the good work he has done.

I am reminded of a letter which was handed me as I arose a few moments ago by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who is here, dated Chicago, March 20, 1924, wherein it is stated:

We suggest again that Republican contributors to party funds study the action of Mr. GREEN, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, a Republican; Mr. LONGWORTH, leader of the Republicans in the House, a Republican; and Mr. FREAR, leader of the radicals, who was elected as a Republican, and then decide how much money they want to waste on a party which has this brand of leadership. Let us be practical, gentlemen.

This remarkable advice is signed by a gentleman named William H. Barr, president of the National Founders' Association, who complains of you, my distinguished leader, of your attitude and of that of the chairman of my committee [Mr. QUINN], as well as of my humble self and of all you gentlemen who helped to prevent the adoption of the so-called Mellon plan, which would have enabled them to reap a rich harvest and then to make these generous contributions of which he speaks in this letter.

I thank you for your attention. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES].

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to make a few remarks concerning the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission. Notwithstanding the fact that I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations I do not agree to the appropriation that is carried in this bill for the Federal Trade Commission. When this bill is reached for amendment, I intend to offer on page 11, line 16, the following amendment: Strike out the figures "$680,200," and insert in lieu thereof "$885,200," which is really the appropriation that is carried for the current year.

I feel if there is one Government agency that earns all it gets in the way of an appropriation it is the Federal Trade Commission; and, for one, I am opposed to the cut in the appropriation, as proposed in this bill, of about $200,000.

I am aware of the fact there are certain interests in this Nation that would be glad—yes, extremely happy—if Congress would entirely wipe out the appropriation and say to this commission, "Close shop." I do not infer the Appropriations Committee has any desire to do this, nor do I feel there is any disposition on the part of this committee, or any member of it, to cripple the commission. This cut in the appropriation asked for by the commission is a desire to economize, to curtail governmental expenses. I am just as anxious to do this as any member of the Appropriations Committee, but in doing so I want the cut to come from an appropriation of some agency not so essential to the public good and public welfare as the Federal Trade Commission.

If I had the time I could and would go into detail and show what was done by this commission during the war in aiding the various Government agencies to ascertain the cost of production. This was very essential when these agencies were endeavoring to curb the profiteer. They were helpless in many instances but for the faithful Federal Trade Commission. I have not the time on this occasion to go into that, but I may some day when Congress is asked to provide greater powers to this commission, which I hope will be before the adjournment of the present session.

Now, as to the question before us, the contention is made that because we have offered a provision that any resolution passed calling for an investigation should be passed by both Houses of Congress as a joint resolution, carrying with it an appropriation to meet the expenses of same, will very materially reduce the present expenses of the commission; therefore, the appropriation called for at this time should be reduced accordingly.

I am speaking of this provision as suggested in the pending bill:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for investigations directed by the President or either House of Congress except those authorized by law.

This means that in case an investigation is called for by a resolution passed either by this House or the other body, no part of this fund shall be used unless it is a joint resolution.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I notice that the provision you have just quoted is not contained in the law passed by the last Congress.

Mr. AYRES. No.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Why was it inserted here?

Mr. AYRES. For the reason it was intended to reduce the appropriation in the neighborhood of $315,000; it is claimed that would be about the amount that these congressional investigations entailed in the way of expense, and that if a joint resolution should be passed, of course, under the proposed provision, it would carry with it an appropriation sufficient to meet the expense of the investigation called for by the joint resolution.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Would not that hamper the work of the Federal Trade Commission in making their investigations about violations of the antitrust laws, and so forth?

Mr. AYRES. The cases pending at the present time?

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. I mean with the appropriation provided for in the bill.

Mr. AYRES. It is my contention it would; yes. There is a further provision also suggested in this bill that this limitation shall not apply to investigations in progress on April 1, 1924; but, notwithstanding this provision, I can not agree with the members of the Appropriations Committee holding these views, for two good reasons: First, there is no assurance that the other branch of Congress will agree to this provision. As a matter of fact, I do not think it will; and should it agree that all resolutions passed by Congress calling for an investigation shall be joint resolutions carrying with them the necessary appropriation to defray the expenses of such investigation, it will not take care of all demands made on this commission, from an official standpoint. The President frequently calls on the Federal Trade Commission to make investigations. Some will say he can pay the expenses of such investigation out of his contingent fund. That may be true; but suppose he does not, and it may be he will not be so inclined. I do not know of any way of compelling him to do so, and therefore it will have to come out of the commission's funds. That is not all. The President and the Senate frequently call on this commission to furnish experts for various things to assist senatorial and presidential investigations not carried on by the Federal Trade Commission, but by the Senate or the President, as is being done at this time.

The commission is trying to get at the investigation of the increase of the price of gasoline in South Dakota upon the order of the President, at the request of the governor of that State, and also the Senate oil investigating committee is using, or has been using, several of the commission's best men on this investigation that has been going on for weeks. It can not be expected that when a demand is made on the commission by the President or a committee of either branch of Congress for some experts to look up some matter, that the commission will decline to comply with the demand. That is my first reason, or reasons. Second, even should this provision be passed compelling all joint resolutions to carry appropriations to defray the expenses, it certainly would do no good to pass such resolutions with appropriations as stated to make these investigations if the commission had no force to conduct an investigation. Suppose that this appropriation is decreased so that the commission is unable to carry a sufficient corps of efficient experts to conduct these investigations when ordered, it had just as well close its doors. Should there be two or three investigations ordered by joint resolutions, with appropriations sufficient to meet the expense, the commission can not go out and find efficient experts to put on the work, because it is a well-known fact that it is impossible for any governmental agency to go out and compete with the business world in securing expert accountants and other experts for the salary the Government pays. As a matter of fact, that is one of the troubles of this commission; it can not hold its good men at the salaries paid, because big business concerns pay three and four times as much salary for such services.

Therefore, it seems that anyone can readily see that for this commission to take care of the work that is coming to it daily from the business world it should be equipped not only to do this efficiently, but prepared also to take care, at all times, of any demand made by the President or Congress.

If this commission could devote all its time exclusively to the cases or applications it has on hand at the present time, and nothing else submitted to it, it would take 18 months to catch up. That condition, gentlemen, should not exist. This is the business man's commission. That is the legitimate business man's agency. Of course, the profiteers and combines would be happy to see this commission so far behind it could never get at them.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Did the Budget recommend this decrease?

Mr. AYRES. No. The Budget recommended a decrease of about $60,000. This would be a decrease of over $200,000.

Mr. TINCHER. And does your amendment put it back to the amount recommended by the Budget?

Mr. AYRES. It provides for the same appropriation as the current year, which is about $60,000 more than the Budget recommended. The appropriation should be for more than carried for the present or current year, but my amendment is to put it back to the same amount, as I have said, as the current year. And let me say the commission can make use of every dollar of the appropriation, and much more.

I will give one illustration which came out in the hearings before the committee. The jobbers in Los Angeles, Calif., had been holding up the retail grocers—at least the retailers thought so—and they organized 600 strong and began to buy direct from the manufacturers. Then these jobbers got together and served notice on the manufacturers that if they sold direct to this cooperative organization they could not do any business through them, the jobbers. The manufacturers, therefore, refused to sell to the retail organization. This case was taken to the courts and the commission won. An appeal was taken and the higher court sustained the lower court, but the commission got in so late that the jobbers wrecked the cooperative buying organization. That is one of many cases.

There is a case now which is, to my mind, more important to the farmer than most if not all of the proposed legislation in his behalf; that is the matter known as the "Eastern Farm Machinery Dealers case." On February 6, 1924, the Federal Trade Commission issued a formal complaint against the International Harvester Co., Emerson Brantingham Co., the Moline Plow Co., Deere & Co., the Oliver Chilled Plow Works, and 500 other corporations, firms, associations, and individuals engaged in the farm machinery business. This complaint charges that these institutions and individuals have combined and conspired to fix and maintain retail prices of farm machinery at high levels, and are boycotting local dealers who refuse or neglect to maintain those price levels; and, also, it is charged, this combine refuses to sell any cooperative farmers' organization or to sell even to any person or dealer who is willing to sell farmer organizations machinery or even parts.

This, without question, is the most extensive antitrust suit ever instituted by any agency of the United States Government. Here are over 500 wealthy institutions and individuals charged as conspirators, able and willing to employ the best legal talent to be had, and all they need. It will be a hard fought and long drawn out proceeding. It will be necessary to have the best experts in different lines to assemble the evidence against this combine. There will be hundreds, if not thousands, of witnesses called for the Government from different sections of the country, whose expenses and per diem will have to be met. In this case alone the Federal Trade Commission has matched its meager means against millions upon millions of wealth, also its experts against the shrewdest business men of the country.

Counsel for the commission are preparing to go to trial in this case at the earliest possible date. As I stated a few moments ago, I think this is one of the most important matters, so far as the farmers are concerned, of anything now under consideration, not excepting the various farm relief measures. While the price of the farmers' produce has gone down and down, the price of his machinery has gone up. We have passed laws allowing the farmer to form cooperative organizations, but here is a combine which is intended to destroy his cooperative organizations. If the appropriation asked for in this bill should enable the Federal Trade Commission to carry this investigation to a successful conclusion, and do nothing else, it would be a good investment on the part of the Government. I know the farmers who are hard pressed are watching the outcome of this fight on the part of the commission with a great deal of interest and anxiety, and should it be heralded to the country that because Congress had been niggardly in its appropriation for this purpose it will cripple the commission and thus make it doubtful of success in this case, it will be a great disappointment to the farmers and farm organizations all over the Nation.

I want to call attention to another case now pending which is of vital interest to grain producers of the West and the Northwest. It is the case filed against the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis and its board of directors and a publishing company, wherein it was charged that the chamber of commerce and the publishing company conspired to destroy the business of the Equity Cooperative Exchange, a competitor in the selling, buying, and distribution of grain, by the publication of false and misleading statements concerning the cooperative exchange, also its refusal to make available to the cooperative exchange and its members the telegraphic market quotation service, and boycotting the cooperative exchange by refusing to buy grain from it, and further suppressing competition among the members of the chamber of commerce, as well as nonmembers of it, by means of contracts binding country shippers to ship all or a greater portion of their grain to the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce. An order was made commanding the chamber of commerce to cease and desist from these unfair methods and practices December 23 last, and an appeal has been taken to the circuit court of appeals. This matter has not been concluded, but will have to be fought to a conclusion in order for the Federal Trade Commission to save what it has already accomplished. I want to state here and now that the grain growers are vitally concerned about such matters, and are constantly looking to this commission to see that they get justice.

Only a few days ago the Governor of South Dakota appealed to the President to prevent the sudden increase in the price of gasoline. The President, desiring to comply with the request, took the only course he could, and that was to refer the matter to the Federal Trade Commission with directions to give it their prompt attention, which the commission has done and is doing to the best of its ability, handicapped as it is at the present time with an inadequate force. The Governor of South Dakota charges that the supply of crude oil has been cornered by companies subsidiaries of or belonging to the Standard Oil Co. Naturally these oil companies deny the charge—it could not be expected they would admit it—therefore it is up to the commission to investigate and find out whether or not the governor's charge is well founded. It should be borne in mind that in such investigations as this one, and as, for that matter, most all investigations, the commission can not send out two or three men and investigate one or two local concerns in ascertaining the facts as to whether or not there is a combine, or a corner, or a boycott, or unfair business methods being practiced. If it should proceed in that manner, nothing would be accomplished. It should be able to place competent men all over the country wherever the institution being investigated operates its business and at a given time or order all proceed at once in their investigations. If a local branch of an institution sought to be investigated is called on by a representative of the Federal Trade Commission and is aware of what is being done, such information naturally is at once conveyed to the entire system, and unless the entire system is covered by the investigators of the Federal Trade Commission its efforts would be useless.

Another very important matter that has been referred to this commission is what is known as the bread investigation. I can not conceive of a more important matter than this. Somebody or some class of individuals or institutions are literally robbing poor, helpless people of the absolute necessity of life, and that is bread. When I say robbing, the price is being kept up so as to make it impossible for the poorer classes of people to provide themselves with a sufficient amount. Statistics can be had to show there are thousands of families in congested districts, I am told, that are undernourished because of the high costs of the absolute necessities of life, such as bread.

This condition is prevailing in the United States where there is plenty for all. Only a few days ago this Congress voted $10,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to help provide food for starving women and children of Germany, and a similar condition exists there as we have here. That is to say, reliable statistics show there is an abundant food supply in Germany, and the trouble is it is not evenly distributed. They have there the unconscionable profiteer, and a class that is rolling in luxury while the poorer people are starving, and for that relief Congress very generously voted $10,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, which will amount to only a drop in the bucket so far as relief is concerned. I understand there are in the Department of Commerce here in Washington reports showing there were 41,464,135 metric tons of breadstuffs and potatoes harvested in Germany last autumn. This means that for the entire year there is more than 3½ pounds of this kind of food daily for every man, woman, and child in Germany. This same authority shows the supply of fats is satisfactory. Even the city shops are fairly bursting with food, but notwithstanding all this about one-fourth of the population of Germany is undernourished. That condition to a remarkable degree exists here in the United States to-day, but instead of voting $10,000,000 out of the Treasury we are endeavoring to get an appropriation of a few thousand dollars to prevent the profiteers or human hogs from robbing the people who must have it or be undernourished, as in Germany.

Since the expiration of the war-time control of wheat in June, 1920, it has declined in price from about $2.95 per bushel in Chicago to about $1.20 in December, 1923, or about 60 per cent, while during the same period bread in New York City, for instance, has declined from 11.1 cents per pound loaf in June, 1920, to 9 cents per pound loaf in December, 1923, or about 19 per cent. It is these conditions the Federal Trade Commission is called upon to investigate. Who will say the wheat producer does not want to know or has not a right to know why with such high bread prices he gets such low prices for his wheat, or will say that the consumer should not know why with such low prices for wheat he is compelled to pay so much for bread? It seems to be an easy matter to get an appropriation of $10,000,000 to relieve the suffering in Germany caused by profiteers, but when it comes to getting a few thousand dollars appropriated to enable a Government agency to investigate the same kind of profiteers in this country and prevent a like condition being brought about it is a different proposition.

At this time the Federal Trade Commission is investigating why the continued high cost of furniture for furnishing the home. Statistics show there have been extensive declines in the prices of many of the raw materials of furniture manufacturers; but notwithstanding that fact, the high price of furniture—war prices, if you please—still stay with us, and this is especially true of the most necessary articles of furniture. The inquiry on the part of the Federal Trade Commission has already resulted in a report on domestic furniture which clearly shows one highly objectionable influence operating to keep up prices, and that is throughout the country various trade organizations have been deliberately promoting conspiracies on the part of their members to put up the prices of the furniture they make or deal in. This much has been accomplished up to date, but it is only a beginning, and to make the investigation effective it will be necessary to continue the inquiry and extend it to all other important lines of the furniture business. This can not be done, however, without sufficient funds with which to carry on the investigation to completion.

One of the most important investigations now being carried on by the commission is the "radio industry." The partial investigation made by the Federal Trade Commission has shown that unless some steps are taken by the Government to stop a gigantic combination or trust from being perfected, if it has not already been done, the radio business will soon be absolutely controlled and exclusively manipulated by a few members of the combine. When this occurs that part of the business world not in the combine is at the mercy of the trust. This investigation was called for by this House in a resolution—No. 548—passed just at the close of the Sixty-seventh Congress at the suggestion of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

There is a complaint before the commission at this time charging that the General Electric Co. and others had set up the Radio Corporation as a bogus independent, and by the use of tying contracts and price discrimination in the sale of its products was attempting to acquire a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of radio apparatus. The commission started on its investigation and on December 1, 1923, made its report, which consists of 346 pages, and some startling facts are set forth in that report.

It is shown there were contracts entered into between the General Electric Co., Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Western Electric Co. (Inc.), American Telephone & Telegraph Co., Wireless Specialty Co., United Fruit Co., and the Radio Corporation of America as to the interchange of patents, licenses, and so forth. This much has been ascertained by the commission. If the Members of Congress have not read that report, I suggest that they do so, and without doubt you will have no trouble in reaching a conclusion that the commission should pursue the investigation further and be furnished the means to do so.

I could mention many other matters pending before the commission at this time, some of them just as important as the few I have mentioned, and I expect to do this some time in the near future, when I shall ask for the passage of a measure to give the commission some power and authority to make examinations, for I admit the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the American Tobacco Co., handed down the 17th of this month, practically paralyzes the commission, if it does not destroy its usefulness; and for one I am in favor, at an early date, of passing a measure that will restore it not only to its former status but give it even greater powers than it ever possessed.

There has not been adequate provision made for this agency since the war. While it voluntarily reduced its force of employees from 640 to 367 soon after the signing of the armistice, there has been no let-up in the regular business that comes to it from the business world, to say nothing of the demands of Congress. With the appropriation made last year it was necessary to discontinue travel for the purpose of investigation in many very important matters. Being compelled to call these men in from the field of investigation has been a serious matter. Many inquiries have come in from business men which should have received immediate attention, but because of the lack of funds can not be investigated, and a further decrease in the appropriation will mean to stop practically all activity.

If Congress is satisfied for this commission to merely do nothing but draw salaries, then there is no need of this appropriation. While Congress might be satisfied for this to occur, there is one thing to a certainty—the people who are depending on the activities of this commission will not be satisfied.

I could produce a thousand resolutions in commendation of the Federal Trade Commission for its wonderful work, and these resolutions are from all classes of people, like the American Livestock Association, the National Board of Farm Organizations, creamery associations, dairy associations, the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, the typographical unions, the National League of Women Voters, all of the farm and labor organizations, and practically all of the leading newspapers of the country, showing the respect and feeling the people have for this commission.

An examination of the amount of unfinished work on hand at this time and more continually coming in from those who have a right to have their complaints heard and immediately investigated, to say nothing of the demands made by Congress and the President, would convince any fair-minded man that, to do justice to the people who are depending on the commission and as well do justice also to the commission itself, there should be a material increase in the personnel of the legal division, even to the extent of double what it is at the present, and also the same as to the economic staff. I am heartily in favor of making a decided increase in the personnel of all the departments of the Federal Trade Commission and to pass the necessary legislation at an early date to make it a useful and powerful governmental agency.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go on record at this time in saying that instead of decreasing the appropriation, as is proposed in this bill, I am in favor of increasing it and making the appropriation more than it is for the current year. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

[Mr. HASTINGS was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the ex-service men should understand the parliamentary trickery used in the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill.

The Ways and Means Committee had been considering the question of all kinds of options for more than 10 days. On Friday, March 14, before any bill was reported or made public, notice was given that it was to come up for action in the House on Tuesday, March 18, 1924. A confidential committee print was released and made public Saturday noon, March 15, 1924. It provided for payment, in cash, of adjusted service where the amount does not exceed $50, and for paid-up insurance for all where the amount is in excess of that amount. There were no other options. The amount of $1.25 per day is allowed for overseas service and $1 per day for home service. I favored an adjusted compensation payable in cash, filed a statement with the committee to that effect on March 10, and made a speech in the House March 14 to that effect. The Ways and Means Committee by a vote of 13 Republicans to 12—11 Democrats and 1 Republican—voted to exclude the cash option on amounts of more than $50. The bill was brought up on "suspension day," when a motion to suspend the rules of the House is in order. The precise motion made was to suspend the rules and to pass the bill as reported by the Ways and Means Committee. No amendment was in order and none could be offered. The bill contained 26 printed pages, affects 4,650,500 ex-service men—of this number 248,170 were either killed or wounded—and involves, it is estimated, an aggregate cost of $2,091,007,938. Yet under political trickery no amendment was in order and a Member of the House had to vote directly for the bill as a whole or against it; either to suspend the rules and pass the bill, or against the suspension of the rules and defeat the bill.

Under the circumstances I voted for the bill for the following reasons:

First. A vote against the bill would have defeated its consideration at this session of Congress.

Second. The bill now goes to the Senate, where an opportunity can be had to debate and amend it, and where it is expected a cash option will be included, and when it is returned to the House a direct vote can be forced upon the Senate amendments. I am determined that the ex-service men of my district and State shall know the parliamentary and political trickery used in the consideration of this bill to keep it from being debated and to keep amendments favorable to the ex-service men and other options from being offered for adoption. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURNETT].

[Mr. BURTNESS was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, before proceeding to discuss the agricultural situation and certain proposed agricultural relief measures I want to say that I was greatly impressed with the remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] a few minutes ago relating to the necessity for providing proper appropriations for the work of the Federal Trade Commission. Some of the work which is now being done by the Federal Trade Commission is of intense importance to this country, particularly such investigations as the bread investigation, the investigation into the production, distribution, and cost of gasoline, and the investigations involving the case which relates to alleged unfair practices on the grain exchanges.

Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that the Sixty-seventh Congress passed more remedial legislation intended for the direct benefit of agriculture than has ever been passed in the history of our country, we find agriculture in many sections in a deplorable condition.

It is not my purpose to review the record of the Sixty-seventh Congress on agricultural legislation but will simply mention the most important of such laws passed by Congress, most of them with the support of the Members of both parties and signed by President Harding. I recall at this time the emergency tariff act, the act reviving the War Finance Corporation and providing for agricultural loans, the act regulating the packers and stockyards industry, the law regulating trading in futures upon our grain exchanges, laws liberalizing the farm loan act with reference to maximum loans, as well as providing an additional $25,000,000 by way of a revolving fund, the law providing for direct agricultural representation upon the Federal Reserve Board, the filled milk act, the intermediate credit act, and last, but not least, the law affirmatively legalizing cooperative marketing associations and exempting them from the provisions of the antitrust laws.

At the opening of this Congress President Coolidge devoted a substantial portion of his message to agricultural problems. I quote the following therefrom:

Aided by the sound principles adopted by the Government, the business of the country has had an extraordinary revival. Looked at as a whole, the Nation is in the enjoyment of remarkable prosperity. Industry and commerce are thriving. For the most part agriculture is successful, 11 staples having risen in value from about $5,300,000,000 two years ago to about $7,000,000,000 for the current year. But range cattle are still low in price, and some sections of the wheat area, notably Minnesota, North Dakota, and on west, have many cases of actual distress. With his products not selling on a parity with the products of industry, every sound remedy that can be devised should be applied for the relief of the farmer. He represents a character, a type of citizenship, and a public necessity that must be preserved and afforded every facility for regaining prosperity.

On January 23 President Coolidge transmitted a special message to Congress containing special recommendations for legislation for the relief of distress in the wheat areas of the Northwest. Permit me to quote therefrom as follows:

The economic situation in certain wheat-growing sections of the Northwest is reaching an acute stage, which requires organized cooperation on the part of the Federal Government and the local institutions of that territory for its solution. In my message of December 4, 1923, I stated:

"The distress is most acute among those wholly dependent upon one crop. Wheat acreage was greatly expanded and has not yet been sufficiently reduced. A large amount is raised for export, which has to meet the competition in the world market of large amounts raised on land much cheaper and much more productive. Diversification is necessary. Those farmers who raise their living on their land are not greatly in distress. Such loans as are widely needed to assist buying stock and other materials to start in this direction should be financed through a Government agency as a temporary and emergency expedient."

Great numbers of individual farmers are so involved in debt, both on mortgages and to merchants and banks, that they are unable to preserve the equity of their properties. They are unable to undertake the diversification of farming that is fundamentally necessary for sound agricultural reconstruction of the area. They are unable to meet their obligations, and thereby has been involved the entire mercantile and banking fabric of these regions. Not only have there been large numbers of foreclosures on actual farms but there are great numbers of farmers who are continuing in possession on sufferance from their creditors. There have been large and increasing bank failures. Bills have been introduced providing for the lending by the Federal Government of moneys directly to the farmers for purposes of assisting them in conversion of their farms on the basis of diversified farming. I am heartily in favor of these bills, but they do not and will not compass the entire problem.

In this same message the President recommended that Congress extend the time until December 31, 1924, during which the War Finance Corporation may make loans for the benefit of agriculture. This particular recommendation was heeded by Congress and the necessary law was promptly passed.

In his message of January 23 the President also announced his intention of calling together the large business concerns interested in the country as a whole with a view of enlisting their help in a private movement to help out not only the banks which were failing fast but also to refund the past-due indebtedness of the farmer at lower rates of interest and on terms under which the farmer would have a reasonable opportunity to work out his salvation. Such a conference was later called. It was presided over by Secretary Hoover. Out of that conference resulted the Agricultural Credit Corporation, with a capital of $1,000,000 fully subscribed by the business interests of the country. Through the War Finance Corporation this Agricultural Credit Corporation can command ten times its capital, or $10,000,000, for the purposes intended. It has set to work and great hopes are entertained as to the good it may accomplish. It is too early to judge as to what the actual results may be. They now depend largely upon the skill, ability, understanding, and vision of the men in charge. The good faith of the President and his advisers in the matter can not be questioned. Already considerable has been done in the way of reestablishing confidence in our business institutions.

I regret, however, that Congress has failed to enact the specific bill recommended by the President and known as the Norbeck-Burtness bill. It has been defeated in the Senate by a vote of 41 to 32, 20 Republicans, 10 Democrats, and 2 Farmer-Laborites voting for it and 18 Republicans and 23 Democrats voting against it. Perhaps the bill was too sectional in its nature. It was not intended as general relief legislation, and was simply intended to accelerate diversification in the wheat areas by providing loans at a time when credit facilities are not otherwise obtainable.

In the wheat areas we claim that we are in all justice entitled to a little special consideration. Our case is stronger than that of any other section of the country. By the enactment of legislation in 1917 our Government reduced in value by the stroke of the pen every bushel of our wheat to the extent of almost $1 per bushel. We constituted the one industry which remained in private hands which was not allowed war profits.

In fact, the bulk-line production of wheat was sold even during the war in the spring-wheat States at a set price less than the cost of production. But that was not all. We had come to realize shortly before the war that we could not continue to raise one crop year after year. The weed problem, the partial exhaustion of the fertility of our soil, the diseases to soil and grain had convinced most of us that we must diversify our crops. We had made a fair start toward the raising of corn, alfalfa, cattle, and hogs. The demand of the Nation and our allies was for bread bullets as well as for lead bullets. We were urged to sell our cattle and our sheep, to plow up our pastures, and plant every available acre to wheat. The person who did not comply was regarded as unpatriotic. The war campaign for more wheat set us back in our program of diversification, not 2 or 3 or 5 years but at least 10 or 12 years. Our soil became further depleted, more wheat sick and diseased, necessarily resulting in poor yields, and the wheat crop every year, with one exception, since 1915 sold at less than the cost of production. Is that all? Scarcely. There is no way of estimating with a fair degree of certainty the exact amount lost by the wheat farmers of the country due to governmental handling during the war. We do know, however, that the United States Grain Corporation made considerable profits in handling the wheat, and that our Government did not do as the Government of Canada did, prorate such profits back to the wheat growers. As I told you during the discussion of the resolution for the relief of the starving women and children of Germany, Congress, on March 30, 1920, provided for the sale of 5,000,000 barrels of flour to relieve populations in the countries of Europe suffering for lack of food, and the act gave permission to the corporation to take securities in exchange for such flour. Securities amounting to $50,858,802.49 were accepted from the nondescript countries of central Europe, and not a dollar of those securities have been paid. That flour equitably belonged to the wheat farmers of the Nation.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman said a moment ago that it was difficult to estimate the amount that the farmers lost. Is it not a fact that an estimate was made that it was well beyond a billion dollars?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; that estimate is doubtless conservative. Other estimates have been made of two or three times that sum. I meant no one can tell to a certainty. Again, in December, 1921, Congress desired to be liberal to the starving peoples of Europe. In glancing about for some money to give away, Congress found that the United States Grain Corporation still had on hand approximately $20,000,000 in profits realized upon the sale of wheat; and so we gave that money away to Russia. In spite of the fact that under these two acts alone contributions totaling practically $77,000,000 out of funds equitably belonging to the wheat farmers have been made to Europe, Congress at this session has refused to loan $50,000,000 to the stricken wheat areas upon fair security, even though the President earnestly recommended the enactment of such legislation.

As Representatives from the wheat area, therefore, we are not further looking for legislation for our special benefit, but we are intensely interested in any legislation that would be for the benefit of agriculture in general. We realize also that the only legislation which can be of permanent value is legislation the enactment of which would tend to give us better prices for farm products, prices fairly comparable to the cost of commodities we must buy. Incidentally, I might say that in spite of the refusal of Congress to come to our help in changing our farming methods, the spring-wheat areas are going to diversify. The process will be slow and tedious and beset with difficulties, but in 10 years from now I firmly believe that the Red River Valley of Minnesota and North Dakota, so long known as the "bread basket of the world," as well as the rest of North Dakota and portions of Montana, will become as famous for its alfalfa, its corn, its livestock, and its dairy products as it once was for its No. 1 hard wheat.

But how can agricultural prices be improved by legislation? Several bills with that general purpose in view are pending, but the one in which the country has become more interested than in any other during the past few months is the so-called McNary-Haugen bill. Every Member of Congress has received communications favoring as well as opposing it.

My speaking on the bill to-day is in the hope that, without being technical, I may fairly set out what the bill will do and on what principles it is founded. The average person is not interested in details as to the machinery provided, but is and should be interested in the results accomplished. It is early enough to discuss the detailed machinery when the bill reaches the floor of the House, as I hope it will soon.

The McNary-Haugen bill provides for machinery, including an agricultural export commission and an agricultural export corporation, which may deal in certain specific farm crops and the products therefrom whenever it is necessary to do so in order to maintain fair, legitimate prices thereon.

Its proponents have two principal purposes in view: First, that of providing a price for such farm products on a parity with the cost of commodities which enter into the farmer's cost of living and his cost of production; secondly, to provide means to give crops of which we have an exportable surplus the same protection from the tariff as is given to crops like flax and wool, or given generally to the products of eastern factories, where the difficulties of an exportable surplus are not encountered.

Everyone will, of course, agree that the important factor in prices for farm products is not the exact number of dollars and cents that a person gets for a load of wheat, or corn, or hogs, or cattle, but, rather, how much a farmer can with the proceeds thereof purchase in food, fuel, and clothing for his family, and in machinery, equipment, labor, and all other commodities or services which enter into the cost of producing his grain, livestock, or other farm products. There is no guesswork as to whether farm prices have recently been fair or not, for that question can be determined with mathematical certainty due to the fact that the Government Bureau of Labor Statistics has for several decades kept a very complete and satisfactory record indicating the general cost of living.

The proponents of the McNary-Haugen bill have taken a 10-year period, from 1905 to 1914, inclusive, as a period which represents fairly normal conditions throughout the United States. No one will claim that the farming industry in the country as a whole was unduly prosperous during such period. The general relationship of farming to other lines of business was probably as nearly normal as at any time in the history of our country. Some farmers made money, others went broke, but the average thrifty and competent farmer was able to earn a living for himself and his family and secure a small return upon his invested capital. The market price of commodities selected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and properly weighted in accordance with their importance and use, during such period can therefore be accepted as a normal basis upon which to make a beginning. In other words, we can call that base 100. The question then arises as to what the market price for such commodities are now. The Bureau of Labor Statistics finds as a matter of mathematical certainty that the index of all such commodities for the year 1923 was 162.3. In other words, the general cost of commodities in 1923 was 62.3 per cent greater than in the 10-year period from 1905 to 1914. The important question, therefore, is whether in 1923 farm products maintained the same relative ratio. Unfortunately, most of them did not. To illustrate: The average grade of wheat should, during 1923, have sold for 46 cents more per bushel than it did in order to have maintained the proper ratio with the cost of other commodities. Corn should have sold for about 15 cents more per bushel than it did. Cattle should have sold for $1.17 more per 100 pounds. Hogs should have sold for $3.43 more per 100 pounds. Some farm products, like wool and cotton, sold at a price greater in exchange value than such commodities brought during the 10-year period. Everyone will concede the fairness, as well as the advisability, of maintaining such a fair ratio price for all staple farm products if reasonably possible to do so, and, as above indicated, that is the purpose of the McNary-Haugen measure.

On investigation it is found as a general proposition that crops which do not bring a fair relative price at this time are usually those of which the United States produces an exportable surplus. That is only natural, due to general conditions in Europe. The one outstanding exception to this rule is cotton, and the present high price of cotton is due almost wholly to the ravages of the boll weevil, which has so greatly reduced the available supply. Everyone concedes that it is difficult to get the full benefit of the tariff, or much appreciable benefit from the tariff, on crops or commodities of which we have an exportable surplus. The intent to give such products the same benefit of the tariff as other commodities get must also be conceded to be fair in principle. The interests of other lines of business or of consumers generally are not prejudiced thereby.

Now, then, how do the proponents of the McNary-Haugen bill expect to accomplish these two purposes? Let me put the matter very plainly by suggesting this question, and for convenience sake I will make the question apply to wheat: If one man—or one corporation or one cooperative association of producers—controlled the entire wheat crop of the country and realized that at least three-fourths thereof could be sold in the markets for local consumption and that about one-fourth would have to be sold abroad, what would he do? Would he sell the entire crop at the price of the world market? Would he not rather do what any well-regulated business does when it produces a surplus—sell such surplus at what it can get in the world's markets but so handle the matter as to receive the benefit of the import duty and thereby a reasonable price on the main portion? If the exportable surplus of wheat is segregated and sold in the world's markets, the balance could be sold locally for a price exceeding the world price by the amount of the tariff and the cost of transportation from foreign countries into our markets. The wheat industry, existing as it does over a large extent of territory, is not now organized, and can not be within a reasonable time, in such a way that the growers themselves can handle the matter as suggested.

Stripped of its seeming technicalities, the bill simply provides the machinery whereby the exportable surplus of such a crop as wheat can be segregated and sold in the world markets and the balance of the crop sold locally for a ratio price which is equal in exchange value to the price obtained for the crop during the 10-year period hereinbefore referred to. The export corporation must stand ready to buy the wheat offered at such ratio price, and that in itself will determine the minimum price within the United States. All of the producers of wheat will, however, pay their pro rata share of the loss upon the exportable surplus. That share is estimated in advance upon available information as to the amount of crop, the amount that must be sold abroad, and so forth, and a sufficient amount is in reality taxed against the producer when he sells such wheat by giving him the estimated tax or equalization fee in the form of "scrip." The export corporation gets the proceeds from the sale of the scrip by the Government in cash.

The opponents of the measure have attempted to prejudice the minds of the people against the bill because of the proposed use of such scrip, intimating that no one will know what the value thereof will be, and that it may become a vehicle for improper speculation. Of course, if the equalization fee could be determined with exactness in advance such scrip would be valueless, for no greater equalization fee should be assessed than sufficient to take care of the loss on the exportable surplus and the cost of operation. To prevent loss, however, to the taxpayers—that is, to the United States Treasury—naturally, the body determining the amount to be paid for in scrip must be conservative and will probably place that amount at a little higher figure than what may be sufficient to take care of the loss on the surplus and the expenses of operation. At the end of the year, when such loss and expenses have been ascertained, the balance on hand may be distributed pro rata to the holders of the scrip. In all probability the amount of the scrip in the case of wheat would not exceed 15 cents per bushel.

In other words, the difference between the present market price of wheat and the ratio price, based on the pre-war 10-year average, is approximately 50 cents per bushel. Producers can, under the plan proposed by the McNary-Haugen bill, get such additional 50 cents per bushel, providing they pay, so to speak, an assessment of approximately 15 cents per bushel on their entire production. Therefore, the question is simply whether a farmer prefers to get about $1 per bushel for his wheat as at the present time or whether he would prefer to receive $1.35 per bushel in cash for such wheat and receive further scrip representing a 15-cent assessment, which scrip may or may not become of any value. In all likelihood its value would be rather nominal. Of course, there is no doubt as to the reply of the farmer if this feature is plainly explained to him.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. If they are afraid of the scrip, why not try the principle for one year with the profit that the War Finance Corporation and the United States Grain Corporation made off the fund?

Mr. BURTNESS. That may be a good suggestion. One reason why I emphasize the amount of the profits of the Grain Corporation is to indicate the fairness of using such profits for a purpose such as this.

Mr. TINCHER. If that does hold the domestic consumption up to the ratio, the farmers would not kick on the scrip.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will.

Mr. ROACH. How are you going to build up an organization such as is provided for in the McNary-Haugen bill with the expectation that it would only function for one year? It is physically impossible for such an organization to be created for so short a time.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am not in favor of building it up for one year. I understand the House committee has agreed on five years, or at any rate that period has been suggested in the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. I understood the gentleman from Louisiana would yield me some time.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman from Louisiana is out. I have charge of the time. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BURTNESS. I notice that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] in a letter to the Illinois Agricultural Association attacks the bill, at least by inference, because it proposes to provide for the cost of operation and the loss from the exportable surplus by the so-called scrip. He assumes that this scrip will operate to bring about a period of expansion in our currency. In other words, he presumes that it will in effect be money, for he talks about increasing the circulating medium without increasing our gold base, and so forth. Of course the answer to that contention is that the scrip is not a circulating medium in any sense of the term. The use of that word in designating the paper that will be given the farmer is perhaps unfortunate, for, as a matter of fact, the scrip amounts to nothing more or less than a receipt for the assessment that it is necessary to make upon the entire crop to take care of the cost and loss referred to. It is identical in principle to the interest retained by any person who pools his wool, his wheat, his tobacco, or his cotton with some cooperative association, receiving an advance covering perhaps the greater portion of the purchase price, but who must await the final sale of all of the pooled crop or produce, as well as the determination of the cost of operation, before he can receive the balance of the purchase price. It is not dissimilar in operation to the arrangement made by most beet-sugar factories with the growers of beets and who guarantee such growers a minimum amount for the beets, but provide for a further payment for such beets, the exact amount of which depends upon a number of contingencies, including the wholesale price of sugar during the manufacturing season.

A very fair argument has been raised against the bill by the grain trade to the effect that the enactment of the measure will eliminate trading in futures on the grain exchanges, and will therefore make it impossible for a concern like a farmers' elevator to protect itself against a fall in the monthly ratio price by legitimate hedging. It is by no means certain that trading in futures will be eliminated, and it is quite possible, and probably likely, that such trading will continue on a basis above the ratio price. If that is so the farmers' elevators and like concerns will have the same protection in so far as hedging is concerned that they now have.

Assuming, however, that the argument of the grain trade is correct and that future trading would be stopped, then what is the result? I have strongly urged the proponents of the measure that they eliminate determining the ratio price upon the figures given for each month during the pre-war period and establish the ratio price simply upon the average weighted price which existed throughout the entire 10-year period without regard to what such price may have been in the arbitrary divisions of calendar months. I feel certain that the bill will be amended in that regard. What will that mean? The answer is plain. Practically a stable ratio price throughout the entire marketing season, thus eliminating any necessity for hedging and making it possible for farmers' elevators or other grain-buying concerns to buy their grain on a lower rather than a higher margin. In any event with such change the price could not vary from month to month unless the price of all commodities should vary, and past experience tells us that such variations are not likely to exceed more than 1 per cent. I think every person concedes that it is now impossible for an elevator company to so handle its hedging operations as to give perfect protection. No buyer knows during the business hours of the day during the marketing season whether outstanding storage tickets amounting to 500 or 5,000 bushels are likely to be surrendered and sold before night. Hedging must now of necessity be based in part upon estimates as to the business that may be conducted on any given day or before the market again changes, and we all know the large fluctuations that may occur. Hedging now can only be done in 1,000-bushel lots. Assuming therefore the adoption of the McNary-Haugen measure, with the amendment suggested, I am convinced that the need for any hedge would be eliminated unless trading should occur on the market above the ratio price level, in which event the same protection would be afforded as at the present time.

There is some merit to the objection by the organized grain trade that the plan will result in increasing the production of such a crop as wheat. When they make that criticism they admit that the price of wheat will be increased to the producer. The danger of overproduction, however, should not be great where all that is accomplished is to place the value of wheat on the same relative basis as it was from the years 1905 to 1914. Such prices must be generally maintained unless American agriculture is to perish. The additional difficulties in raising wheat now, as compared with that period, due to foul weeds, exhaustion of soil fertility, and so forth, must be recognized by every intelligent farmer, and ought not to tend to encourage production above what it was during normal times, but should on the other hand tend to keep the production at a lower figure. Another factor in that regard, however, is of great importance, and that is the fact that this bill can be applied to other farm products mentioned in it, and that the tendency will be to raise simultaneously such other farm products, maintaining all of them in the same relative position. In other words, there will be no specific inducement to change the relationship of acreage sown in so far as ratio prices are concerned.

But let us assume for the sake of the argument that the result would be an enormous increase in wheat acreage. Production in recent years in round figures has been about 800,000,000 bushels. Domestic consumption amounts to approximately 600,000,000 bushels. How much can such production be increased? During the war when every effort was made to increase wheat production throughout the United States, and when the farmers responded patriotically in most cases, and almost under the lash of the Government in others, the wheat crop of the country amounted to considerably less than 1,000,000,000 bushels. In 1917 the crop was, in round figures, 636,000,000 bushels; in 1918 it was 921,000,000 bushels; in 1919 it was 967,000,000 bushels; and in 1920 it fell to 833,000,000 bushels. It is inconceivable that our wheat acreage would again be raised to the point that it was during the war, but assuming that it should be, what would be the actual result in the operation of the proposed law? It would simply require an increase in the equalization fee from the estimated 15 cents per bushel to approximately 20 cents per bushel, thus reducing the net return to the farmer from about $1.35 per bushel to $1.30. In other words, a 20-cent equalization fee on 950,000,000 bushels would amount to $190,000,000, and would more than pay a 50-cent loss on an exportable surplus of 350,000,000 bushels.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has addressed himself entirely to wheat. Does not the bill go much further and deal with other crops more perishable?

Mr. BURTNESS. I have used wheat in my argument for illustration purposes. It applies with equal force to other staple crops and would operate as well on most crops, although I concede that as to cattle and beef it would be more difficult, on account of the difficulty of establishing standard grades.

Mr. TILSON. Wheat and cotton are two commodities almost imperishable, or at least they keep for a long time, and the conditions that might apply to them would not apply to other crops which are perishable.

Mr. BURTNESS. Beef under present cold-storage facilities is not very perishable.

I also doubt whether there is any merit to the objections raised by some in the spring-wheat States that the passage of the act would tend to eliminate or reduce the premium paid for spring wheat above the prices paid for the winter wheats. Why is there a difference in the price at the present time? The answer is plain. The hard spring wheat is worth more to the millers. The passage of legislation can not change the relative inherent value of one wheat over another. If millers are compelled to pay the ratio price upon the winter wheats in order to get it, they will, of course, pay that much more in order to get the hard spring wheat, and the amount paid in addition will be determined by the actual desirability of the wheat. Furthermore, this objection is predicated upon the assumption that the ratio price would be established for all classes of wheat. That is not true. The ratio price would be established for the various varieties of wheat and be based upon the relative values of such various varieties as indicated by actual prices at terminal markets during the 10-year period taken as a basis. If the difference thus established in the ratio price itself is not sufficient to cover the actual difference in relative values between wheats under present milling conditions, there seems no good reason why such additional advantage, if any, will not be further reflected in the price. In other words, if a definite ratio price is established and maintained on the poorest quality of wheat, will not better qualities of necessity demand a premium commensurate with their additional values on the open market?

To those who argue that it would be better for the Government to simply fix a price and to buy all the wheat at such price and then let the United States Treasury stand whatever loss may be incurred on the sale of the exportable surplus I need simply state that there is not the least chance of that sort of legislation being enacted by Congress. Members representing districts not primarily engaged in raising wheat will not approve such a law. Responsible leaders of the administration will not subject the Treasury to such unlimited risks. The large majority of Congress properly hesitate and refuse to establish that sort of a precedent. The appeal which the McNary-Haugen bill should have to Members of Congress from districts not selling farm crops is the fact that no drain on the Treasury is demanded, except some working capital; that no loss on the exported surplus will be borne by the taxpayers but by those engaged in the business itself; and that no attempt is made to procure an unduly large price, but one simply sufficient to put us back on a relatively normal pre-war basis. Senator Gooding, who introduced a $1.75 price guaranty bill for wheat, has abandoned such bill because he believes that the McNary-Haugen bill is much the better and sounder measure.

Critics may charge that the McNary-Haugen bill is paternalistic, communistic, socialistic, and what not; but, after all, in its final analysis it simply establishes the governmental agencies which make it possible for the agricultural producers under postwar conditions to market their crops in the same way that a well-organized corporation, like the International Harvester Co. of America, can do, and that is to prevent the price that has to be accepted from the war-ridden countries of Europe for surplus production to largely control the price charged within the United States.

Not only does the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Union heartily endorse this bill but it has also been endorsed by some of the best economists, some of the shrewdest business men, and some of the most capable bankers in the United States. True, it is quite generally opposed by the organized grain trade and the milling industry and by the Wall Street Journal. It seems significant, however, that an excellent business man like Mr. George N. Peek, president of the New Moline Plow Co., whose business is directly dependent upon the prosperity of the farmers, has spent so much time and money and effort in behalf of this measure. Surely no one is disposed to call Mr. Peek a communist or a Bolshevik. Can not the same be said about such men as John R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National Bank, of St. Paul; Mr. Noyes, of Noyes Bros. & Cutler; Louis Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad; and others, who could be named as supporters? Even the well-known conservative banker Otto Kahn is favorable to the principles underlying the measure.

To be in a position to maintain the ratio price, authority is granted in the law to increase the tariff so as to prevent shipments from Canada or any other country. That plainly is a necessary power in order to make the legislation effective. Incidentally such power will also assure the saving of the American market to American producers alone.

Personally, I think the bill can be further perfected and amended. I should recommend simplification by eliminating the so-called export commission and giving its powers to the directors of the export corporation. I would be inclined not to allow the minimum ratio price when once established to be changed at all during a given marketing season, but to provide in the case of wheat for an increase in such ratio price by the addition of a small carrying charge from month to month not to exceed 1 cent per bushel. Such matters, however, are details which will be considered and carefully perfected before the bill can be finally enacted into law. The persons criticizing the measure are rendering excellent service, for they point out possible defects which should, and I believe can, be eliminated.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The purpose is to help the farmer, I presume.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would not be speaking here to-day unless I thought it would help the farmer.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman remember the speech of the gentleman from New York, Bourke Cockran, in which he said that he represented 5,000,000 consumers in New York and he was going to put us on notice that those 5,000,000 consumers wanted everything they ate and everything they wore just as cheap as they could get it? Now, you are going to have to contend with that side of it when you pass a bill of this kind.

Mr. BURTNESS. I realize that; but I am also pleased to find that the representatives of the American Federation of Labor have stated before the Agriculture Committee that they are willing that legislation with this purpose should be passed, and they are willing to pay fair prices for these farm products. Of course they know and realize, if they give the matter any thought, that they can not continue to be employed at high wages in the manufacture of shoes, clothing, farm machinery, lumber, woolen goods, automobiles, or anything else unless the purchasing power of the farmers of this country can be maintained.

The spring-wheat States of the Northwest have contributed to the plan embodied in the bill. The resolutions passed last summer at meetings in Fargo and Minot, N. Dak., in Wheaton, Minn., and elsewhere were based upon identical principles, but did not set out in detail the machinery for which provision is made in the bill. The committee appointed by the meeting of the bankers of the ninth Federal reserve district, held at Fargo, N. Dak., about September 1 last, and which came on to Washington and interviewed the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, and other administration leaders, carried the movement forward to a very considerable extent.

In conclusion let me say that the bill embodies a crystallization of the best thought of literally hundreds of people who have given the solution of the difficulties confronting us in the present agricultural emergency very thorough study. Let us as Members of Congress earnestly set to work to perfect it, if need be, and then pass it for the preservation of agriculture and for the best interests of commerce and all other industry as well. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, on March 18 I submitted to the House from the Committee on the Judiciary House bill 7190, to amend the China trade act, 1922, approved September 19, 1922, together with a report, No. 321. I trust that this legislation will receive the early and favorable consideration of the House. It is badly needed to enable the China trade act of the Sixty-seventh Congress to properly function as contemplated by the House when it passed the House bill 4810 of that Congress. Amendments and changes made in this legislation in the Senate of the last Congress, and which make it unworkable as originally contemplated, necessitate the amendments to the law heretofore referred to. If the law is amended as recommended, it will have the effect of putting American interests doing business in China on an equality with other nations. It also will have the effect of inducing Chinese capital to participate with American capital in undertakings in China to encourage American trade there. It will also provide a uniform and practical manner for creating corporations under a Federal law to do business in China. I trust that the Members of the House will study the bill and the report referred to, so that all may see our responsibility and duty in the premises.

The great nations of the world are strongly contending for the trade of China. The world's commerce of the future is in the Pacific, with China as the principal goal. Many splendid Americans, representing American trade and business, are in China to develop American trade there. They have to contend against heavy odds, due to favored laws that other nationals enjoy. This legislation is an effort to give to Americans an "equal opportunity" for trade in China. We seek no advantage for our citizens, but simply an equal chance.

Some Americans in their efforts to establish trade in China and the Pacific have succeeded against the adverse conditions, but many have failed. The hazards have been too great. The United States needs now, and more for the future, an increase in foreign trade. The only field of consequence is in the Pacific. China is a vast country with immense resources and occupies a stretch of territory one-sixth larger than continental United States. Her population is four times as large as our population and her climatic conditions and natural resources are quite similar to ours. For years through the work of our missionaries and educators and the operation of our "open-door" policy we have been building up a great asset of good will toward America on the part of the Chinese people. They know that America has no designs on their territory and that the close commercial relations of the two Republics will do much to strengthen China and enable her to more successfully cope with aggressors who do have designs upon her territory. The recent revival of American trade with China may mislead some to think commercial relations with that country are of short standing. Such a supposition is not borne out by history. One hundred and thirty-six years ago an American ship visited Canton, China, with such good results that a regular trade followed. American clipper ships were an important factor in the commerce of China from the visit of that first vessel in 1778 to 1860, when our commerce was driven from the seas by the development of the British merchant marine. During the height of the period, along about 1825, American shipping and trade led in the Far East.

In 1805, 37 American ships carried nearly $6,000,000 worth of American merchandise from American ports to China and returned laden with Chinese products for our markets. By 1852 more than 50 per cent of the foreign shipping entering the port of Shanghai was carried in American bottoms. You do not have to search very far back into the archives of Boston, Providence, New York, Baltimore, and Charleston to find interesting records of this old profitable trade between China and the young American Republic. And the trade was mutually satisfactory, of which fact there is ample evidence.

American firms occupied a leading position with their imposing office buildings and warehouses or "go-downs" in both Canton and Shanghai, and American shipping even had the lead on the China coast and on the Yangtze River. During this period of trade there were naturally many financial panics and we learn of many instances where the Chinese merchants in Canton extended credits to their American merchant friends and enabled them to pull through.

But this profitable trade with China and the Far East stopped at the beginning of our Civil War, which absorbed our entire interest and resources and enabled the development of the steamship in Europe to drive our sailing ships from the seas. In the long period from 1860 to the beginning of the European war, our commercial relations with China were small and never averaged much above $50,000,000 a year for both imports and exports. Our chief concern was in the internal development of our own continent, and without a merchant marine there was little foreign commerce. Much of the commerce that we did have with China was handled for us by foreigners—the British and German, and later the Japanese. Who can see what changes might have been wrought in the development of the Orient in this half century from 1860 to 1914 had we been able to maintain our commerce as it existed in the previous half century?

With the World War our trade with China and the Far East greatly increased, but we must remember that these were war times, when our European competitors were almost entirely out of the game. Germany, our chief competitor in machinery, was entirely out of the China market and we were able to absorb a good part of the trade that the German merchants formerly enjoyed. England, by an almost superhuman effort, was able to keep her trade alive in the essentials. We were handicapped at the beginning of the struggle by a scarcity of shipping. This was soon remedied. With the splendid ships that we now have upon the Pacific, and with the needed legislation, we have every reason to look to the future, so far as our trade with China and the Far East is concerned, with confidence.

In 1922 the United States enjoyed 16.11 per cent of China's total trade, as compared with 7.69 per cent in 1913. We sold China 17.33 per cent of her total imports from all countries in 1922, as against only 6.04 per cent in 1913. Our trade with China in 1922 was only exceeded by that of Japan and Hongkong. At least a quarter of the 25 per cent of China's trade attributed to Hongkong—which is merely a transshipment point—and of the 24 per cent of China's trade attributed to Japan was in reality American trade entering and leaving China by way of these places. It is estimated that at least 12 per cent more of China's trade than is shown by the direct trade is with the United States, so that the United States is really China's largest customer. China's principal imports, including machinery, iron and steel, cigarettes, kerosene, dyes and chemicals, wheat and flour, and leather goods are also the principal exports of the United States. In other words, the trade of the United States with China shows the following in figures:

	1921	1922	1923
Imports.....	$112,658,000	$151,975,000	$211,818,000
Exports.....	132,331,000	126,998,000	134,881,000
Total.....	244,989,000	278,973,000	347,699,000
Per cent of total trade.....	.035	.04	.0437
Per cent of total imports.....	.045	.048	.068

On comparing our trade with some of the principal European countries with China, we find the following:

	1913	1922
Per cent of China's total trade with—
Great Britain.....	10.29	10.39
United States.....	7.69	16.11
France.....	4.7	2.8
Germany.....	4.5	2
Per cent of China's imports with—
United States.....	6.04	17.33
Great Britain.....	16.53	14.90
Germany.....	4.83	2.54

Hon. Herbert Hoover, the able Secretary of the Department of Commerce, has been doing much to improve our facilities and knowledge for increasing our trade with China. At the head of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is a very able man, Director Julius Klein. He has also given special attention to our trade with China. The American commercial attaché to China, as well as the registrar of the China trade act, trade commissioners, and so forth, all under Secretary Hoover and Director Klein, have been most helpful. I have never met a finer class of men in the foreign service. In addition to the Department of Commerce great assistance has been rendered by the Department of State through its diplomatic and consular officers. They are men able and painstaking, and are doing everything they can, not only to increase our trade with China but to maintain friendly and helpful relations with China. In the last appropriation bill we gave some increase to aid in this work in China under the Department of Commerce. In a recent hearing before the Appropriations Committee, in answer to a question by Chairman Shreve, Director Klein made, in part, the following statement touching the results accomplished:

"There was a very considerable stimulus to the trade directly as the result of that work. The investigation, for example, of construction material trade, or the possibilities for construction material and machinery. Immediately, as the result of that appropriation, we sent over an engineering expert who had had experience in the equipment of factories and buildings over there, and he has already facilitated a number of important orders which have come through.

We also provided in that appropriation for a very careful inspection of the situation at Canton. You will remember we were discussing the possibilities of a Canton office. As the result of that additional fund the commercial attaché and the trade commissioner accompanied the American minister on a recent tour through that southern district, and the plans have now been definitely made for that office, which will be open probably within a few weeks.

That survey was one of the most exhaustive economic inspections of this whole territory of South China, and it has a large number of unusually favorable angles from the American point of view.

As I understand it, there are a larger portion of young Chinese of American university training in that area than in any other area over there; furthermore, the intensive drive by our competitors in that part of China, in Hongkong and along the coast, is becoming more and more aggressive, and it is quite evident that the committee was wise in authorizing the expansion of the service in that direction.

Director Klein, in further testimony before the Appropriations Committee, being questioned concerning the China trade act, 1922, testified as follows:

At the present moment the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives is considering some very necessary amendments. The act passed by Congress last year has developed some very obvious defects. A number of companies have been incorporated under it, with a total capital of nearly $3,000,000; but there has now come a need for a further modification of it, and that matter is in the hands of Congressman DYER, who is much interested in it. If the modification is effected, it is quite certain that there will be a large number of firms going in. It will interest the committee to know that already 160 firms are considering actively the possibilities of the act.

To date there have been nine companies granted certificates of incorporation. Of these, four have been capitalized in gold dollars with an issue of stock of $1,050,050 gold paid in full. There have been five of the companies capitalized in Shanghai taels totaling Shanghai taels $1,490,900, which would make a capital value of about $1,128,275 gold. The above would total $2,184,925 gold.

The companies so far have been very conservatively capitalized and the initial balance sheets as of the date of starting business will probably show a total capital stock value of close to $2,750,000 for the nine concerns.

It is difficult to estimate the amount of business done, as none of the concerns have been in business over eight months of the year 1923 as China trade act corporations. It would appear, however, from preliminary information that the annual turnover of these corporations would at least equal their capital or will be approximately $3,000,000 gold for the nine concerns which have incorporated under the China trade act to date.

Mr. Chairman, our relations with China since our first contact have been almost continuously peaceful and friendly. In the preamble of a treaty that we made with China on June 18, 1858, there were the following words:

They shall not insult or oppress each other for any trifling cause so as to produce an estrangement between them, and if any other nation should act unjustly or oppressively the United States will exert their good offices on being informed of the case to bring about an amicable arrangement of the questions, thus showing their friendly feelings.

This serves to show that Chinese-American relations are not of recent origin, but have existed on a friendly basis to the mutual advantage of the two peoples during practically the entire national life of the United States.

It is impossible to place your finger upon any one single element that has been responsible for this general prestige and friendship that exists in China toward this country or the similar feeling that exists over here toward the Chinese people. It has stood the test of time, and as a Nation we have been a pretty good sport in our relations with China, a weaker power. We have never as a Government participated in the territorial aggressions which have been the established customs on the part of both Europe and Japan. We have never supported our citizens in obtaining monopolies or exclusive spheres of influence upon the continent of Asia. We have never participated with other powers in infringements upon Chinese administrative autonomy except to a limited extent necessary to prevent us from being thrown out of her markets entirely by our competitors, and in these cases our influence has always been exerted to the benefit of China rather than to ourselves.

The Chinese are a splendid people; they are industrious; they have a vast country, rich in its resources. As a nation and as a people they will become great and powerful in commerce and otherwise. They must be given time to work this out themselves with their own leaders, of whom they have many splendid ones, able and honest. This class predominates and will soon have firmly the reins of government. Tsao Kun, the new President of China, according to those who know him, is straightforward. Tsao Kun was elected President last fall by parliament to succeed Li Yuan-hung.

Tsao Kun is 60 years of age. Thirty-five years ago he was a common soldier. An officer, attracted by his qualities of leadership, had him sent to a military school. After graduation he directed a training school for soldiers of the old Manchu court.

In 1911 he aided in suppressing the first revolution in Chihli Province. In 1915 he offered unsuccessful opposition to Gen. Tsao Ao, the restorer of the republic, who was fighting the imperialistic movement of Yuan Shih-kai.

Tsao Kun then was made military governor of Chihli. In 1917 he was commander of the troops of several Provinces in the war against the south.

So far as their internal and sovereign problems are concerned, no nation or people can do China any good in this regard by interfering. The world must recognize the "open door" for China proclaimed by John Hay in the fall of 1899, and endorsed and ratified by the American people many times. We want to see China become the great republic of the east as we are of the west.

The Chinese have had, and will continue to have for some years to come, great difficulties in making their people into a great unified nation. Their history of thousands of years need but be studied to understand their difficulties in the new situation that has come to them in changing their form of Government. I have studied the Chinese people, their country, opportunities for rendering them assistance in commerce, and in other ways during my visits there, and my judgment is that we should relieve China of its financial debts to other nations and assume them all ourselves and arrange a just plan for China to pay us. China could then go ahead more rapidly and get rid of her financial troubles. One of the wrongs done China was the exacting from her of an immense amount of money as indemnities for the so-called Boxer uprising. She has been paying off this debt year by year. It has been one of the causes of her poor financial situation. A great part of this debt was not actual damages done to foreigners, but was what is known as punitive damages. The United States, as well as all other countries that are yet unpaid a portion of these indemnities, should remit them. This country did remit a portion of its indemnity some years ago, and we should cancel the balance of it, as well as return to China that which we have collected over and above the actual damages and expenses sustained by our people. We should urge other nations to do the same. China has many splendid men working faithfully and honestly for the salvation of the country. They should have our hearty good will and active support. I recently received a letter from an American official who has been in China for a long time and who knows the Chinese people. He writes me as follows:

As I view China, the forces which are working beneath the surface in this country will have to be accorded sufficient time to make themselves a commanding factor in the situation. There is no mistaking the fact that the thinking people of China have changed during the past few decades from a mental attitude of self-sufficiency to one of receptivity to influences from without. Contact with the West, physical and mental, has been responsible for this. As a result their society to-day is undergoing probably the most important transition in its entire history of 4,000 years. In adjusting themselves to changing conceptions in the economic, social, and political phases of their society, they are confronted with problems the gravity of which is accentuated by the vast area of the country, the tremendous population involved, the decades and centuries of traditions differentiating them from any other people, and last but not least, bad internal communications. To develop from a laissez faire society, which characterized China for decades, into a modern organized state with representative government will require time. The forces working beneath the surface are of such a nature and of such proportions that I believe the Chinese people will succeed in this task.

There is no disputing the fact that during the past 20 years the Chinese have made tremendous strides toward the development of a national spirit. An educated public opinion is gradually becoming manifest. They have reformed and modernized their educational system. The country is undergoing a literary renaissance. There are also evidences of a spiritual reawakening on the part of the Chinese people.

The Chinese now appreciate the necessity of railways and modern means of communication. No country is in greater need of modern transportation than is China. Industry and business are being reorganized in China along modern lines. It is not strange that, under the conditions which have existed in this country, government, in the sense in which it is appreciated in the west, should be slow of development. Personally, I am not at all pessimistic as to the future of China or the Chinese people. The developments which have taken their inception during the past few decades have progressed in such a way that one should, rightly speaking, be optimistic. The pessimists in China to-day are those who lack a sense of proportion or fail to comprehend the situation in its perspective.

It must be borne in mind that, fundamentally, conditions in this country are sound. The Peking Government may be bankrupt or nearly so, yet the fact remains the country has continued during all these decades and centuries on a specie basis, and the resources of China are such that if they are marshaled and organized they can be made to meet all the financial requirements in connection with the Government's obligations, and provide for an extensive program of development. The per capita debt of the nation is small, ridiculously so when compared with that of certain European countries to-day. Intellectually and physically the Chinese people possess the potentialities of any other people in the world.

We can help the Chinese most when we help them to help themselves. In my opinion we shall be doing more for China and the Chinese people when we devise ways and means of helping them to improve their economic conditions, for I believe that China's ills to-day are more economic than political. Thus we shall strike at the root of the needs of these people when we tackle its economic problems.

It has been stated, and probably in truth, that there are in China to-day upward of 1,000,000 men under arms. There are a number of military Tschuns, or feudal overlords, in power, each claiming independent supremacy in certain regions and holding this power through their military organizations. To disband the armies of these military Tschuns is China's present pressing problem. The great bulk of these soldiers are following this activity from necessity rather than choice. The bandits and brigands in China are the results of bad economic conditions. It will be practical to disband these troops when means of employment are devised which will make it possible for these hundreds of thousands of men to secure a living by following peaceful pursuits. If they are disbanded without according them means of employment, they may break up into small bands, and we shall have disorganized disorder rather than the present what may be called organized disorder. The Chinese are naturally a peaceful and industrious people, and it should not be difficult to impress the soldiers of to-day into constructive employment if a practical plan could be devised whereby avenues for honest labor were opened.

In an economic way China needs railways to the extent of tens of thousands of miles. Railways will open vast areas of unsettled, undeveloped lands to cultivation, thereby relieving the congestion of population in other sections. They will also connect the populated regions with new markets, thereby increasing the wealth of this region. Conservancy, good roads, reclamation work, etc., abound in potentialities in the employment of labor and the development of resources. If American finance would come to China to the aid of its economic conditions more could be done for the future of these peoples and at the same time assist our trade and commerce in this wonderful section of the world than probably could be accomplished in any other way. A constructive program of financial assistance, working in cooperation with the Chinese business men and bankers, is in my opinion possible of consummation. It may be advisable to do this work on an international basis, if the cooperation of other nations could be enlisted in a helpful sense. Constructive assistance of this character would also do much to effect a consolidation and union of the various contending factions.

Mr. Chairman, what I have read to the House is the judgment of an American of 20 years' residence in China. Now, let me present the views of a Chinese regarding his own people.

Among the splendid Chinese whom I have met and learned to know and admire immensely is the Chinese Minister to the United States, Sao-Ke Alfred Sze. In a recent speech touching the Chinese he said, in part:

We are a people who, of all living races, go farthest back into the past. We were a nation long before the Roman set foot in England. For more than 20 centuries we were living in the valleys of our great rivers before the English entered Thames Valley. And the whole of Europe was pagan when Confucianism was already, for more than 500 years, a living creed and a social code in our midst. The peoples and the races who were our contemporaries in those distant days have all disappeared into the night of the past. But we survive. And we survive, not as a dying race, but as a great coherent body of 400,000,000 people. And note this fact: Whilst we are the oldest living race on earth, our mind possesses a vitality and elasticity which has enabled us to adopt the most advanced forms of parliamentary government—namely, republicanism.

What is the reason for this survival—for this passage of the Chinese people, as a living nation, through the ages? It is, no doubt, difficult to explain a great historical fact like this in terms of a single cause. But I suggest that it is largely to be explained by Chinese adaptability—by the capacity of the Chinese to respond to the demands of change and adapt and readjust themselves to any new environment in which they may find themselves.

This, perhaps, may sound strange to those who have always been told that China is changeless. But this is a saying that is not only untrue but full of mischief. It is mischievous because it causes people to think that the present state of China, with its unrest and disarray, is due entirely to the incapacity of her people to adapt themselves to the new conditions of life which foreign pressure and influence have set up around them. And from this belief you get that very sinister view which would see China, with her illimitable man power and vast natural resources, placed under the tutelage of some other state inspired with a greater will power.

It is, no doubt, true that there exists a certain degree of unrest and political disturbance in China to-day. But it is very important to realize that this is a state of things which occurs and has occurred in every country where a new system of government or some other fundamental change in the life of a people has taken place. You see this fact of unrest and disorder in nearly every country in Europe to-day. The Great War has released ideas and forces which go to the foundation of what is called the European system. And there are observers who hold that this period of unrest and disturbance will continue for at least a generation. It is argued that a new system of life is being introduced into Europe, and until you have bred and trained new men to work this new system the men trained under the old dispensation must go on with the task of government. And, it is added, as it is impossible to have the new system properly worked by these men, a period of disturbance must ensue and continue pending the appearance of the new workers.

Twenty-five hundred years ago Confucius defined this same problem of government. "Let there be the men," the sage said, "and government will flourish; but without the men government decays. With the right men the growth of government is rapid, just as vegetation is rapid in the earth. Therefore the administration of government lies in getting proper men."

Whether this Confucian view of the European situation is sound or not, there can be no doubt that we are faced in China with the same sort of problem which seems to confront Europe. And most Chinese who think over the matter believe its solution lies in the direction indicated by the master. Up to the date of the Chinese revolution in 1911-12 China was ruled by an autocracy. The revolution destroyed the autocratic system of government and replaced it by a democratic system. This point was emphasized some little time ago by a Chinese publicist in one of the daily papers in London. China, he said, is now passing through a period of transition and is adjusting a system of government created under autocracy into a democratic system.

Under autocracy the country was considered the property of the ruler, whereas now it is regarded as the common possession of the Nation. And he went on to point out that the present difficulties in China were largely due to the inevitable disorganization caused by this transition. To work the democratic principle you must have the necessary machinery in the form of parliamentary institutions; and this machine has hitherto been worked by men trained under the old system of government, because the country must be governed in one way or another, even if mistakes are made. And he insisted that in every instance where a nation had passed through a fundamental change there had always been a period of unrest and disturbance, which was but an expression of the nation's efforts to adjust its old life to the conditions and demands of a new environment.

This view of the situation in China implies that the present political and economic difficulties of the country are not the outcome of racial incapacity or faults of character, but the marks and signs of a period of transition. In other words, these difficulties are the surface effects of the great movement of life that is daily changing the whole face of China. They are signs of vitality, not of decay.

Mr. Chairman, China is the only great undeveloped country in the world. It is rich in resources and man power. Shall we take our proper part for the good of the United States and China?

We of this country who do not look to the opportunity that is ours in China to participate in its great commerce and trade development for the present and the future are unfaithful to the great destiny of the American people. With legislation that will remove our technical handicaps, most Americans familiar with present developments in the Orient believe that we may in a comparatively few years take a position of commanding influence for our own and China's good and benefit.

One of the best authorities on America's future as to commerce in the Pacific, and especially China, is Capt. Robert Dollar, the head of the Robert Dollar Co. In a recent statement upon this subject he said:

Few as yet recognize the great field for foreign trade afforded by China. Take the Province of Szechuen, for instance. Formerly only junk, hauled by 120 men, penetrated into it. Our passenger steamers now go as far as Chung King, 1,600 miles inland from the ocean, but the Province, with its population of 70,000,000, is not yet open to foreign trade.

Formerly China bought all her cotton piece goods from Great Britain and the United States. Now she has a number of mills scattered all over the country and is manufacturing much of her own cotton goods. She wants to use her other raw materials. The Chinese people are very eager for trade, and particularly with the United States, whose friendship and good will they prize highly.

We have passed the period when jackknife swapping among ourselves was sufficient. We need all possible trade with other nations. We produce and manufacture more than we need, probably 33½ per cent more. Let that 33½ per cent of excess manufactures and products go out and bring back gold; if not gold, raw materials which we use for more manufactures, and that adds to the country's wealth.

To make foreign trade profitable in the shipping business we must have return cargoes. To-day there are large numbers of ships lying idle because they can not get such cargoes. When we take lumber out and can find no return cargo let us buy commodities to bring back.

I remember some years ago—12 or 13, I think—wading ashore to one of the islands of the Philippines to look into the lumber possibilities. We were over there without a return cargo and were desperately in need of one. I found copra. As that was the only possible cargo in sight I set about getting it. But as this was the first shipment of copra to the west coast I had to promise, on contract, to deliver 12,000 tons a year for three years to get it.

I took the chance, and the copra and coconut-oil business grew rapidly to an annual value of $22,000,000.

What Capt. Robert Dollar and his splendid sons and associates have done to build trade for America in the Pacific, and especially in China, has been and can be done by many others. Give to Americans an equal opportunity with all other nationals in China and we will forge far ahead in trade and in commerce. This country is now producing much more than it needs for its own use. We must find foreign markets. China has more than 400,000,000 of people to purchase from us. We in this country can use much that China has and produces. We should build factories and mills in China with American and Chinese capital, to be operated under American and Chinese management for the joint benefit of the people of both countries. Our engineers, with American and Chinese money, should help to develop the resources of China and build its railroads, so as to bring its products and resources to the markets of China and the world. The problems of China are the problems of America. When we build the Panama Canal we brought China closer to the United States. President Roosevelt, when he made the proposal for the construction of that canal, said:

The Mediterranean era died with the discovery of America. The Atlantic era is now at the height of its development and must soon exhaust the resources at its command. The Pacific era, destined to be the greatest of all, is just at its dawn.

Some 60 years before this former Secretary of State Seward, when Alaska was added to the United States, said:

The Pacific Ocean, its islands, and its vast regions beyond will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter.

The Pacific era is here; the Pacific Ocean is at our doors; China is our friend and our neighbor, and the Congress of the United States, its Government, and its people should take heed of these prophetic warnings and fast make ready to take our place and do our part in the development of China for American trade as well as render to its people every needed assistance that will redound to the good of China and our own people. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8233 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. HAWES, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, for 10 days, on account of important business.

Mr. SINCLAIR, for 10 days, on account of death in family.

Mr. CROSSER, for to-day, on account of illness.

MINORITY VIEWS—TEACHERS' SALARY BILL.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight to file minority views on the teachers' salary bill which comes up on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the chairman of the Committee on the Territories have agreed to a rereference of the bill H. R. 7407 from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I inquire if the Chair agrees that the reference is proper?

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumed that when the two chairmen agreed to it that would be sufficient.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would be very persuasive.

The SPEAKER. The bill is to extend the Federal farm loan act to Hawaii and Alaska and was originally referred to the Committee on the Territories. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 31, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 31, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou who art the God of hope and who desires for us that we may be filled with joy and peace in believing, and abound in hope, we pray Thee that this morning we may look out upon a world bettered in many conditions, elevating our thoughts in the highest degree of glad expectation, believing that Thou wilt lead us even when darkness seems to gather about us. Help us, Father, to see Thy face, to believe in Thy promises, and to labor hopefully for gracious results. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I present a letter in the nature of a petition from the Maricopa County Medical Society at Phoenix, Ariz., relative to certain features of the Federal tax law applying especially to physicians, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

MARICOPA COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY,
Phoenix, Ariz., March 22, 1924.

HON. RALPH H. CAMERON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Maricopa County Medical Society—which, by the way, is the largest county medical society in the State you represent—I ask your consideration of certain features of the Federal tax law which apply especially to physicians.

Under the amended Harrison Narcotic Act an annual tax of $3 is exacted from every doctor prescribing narcotics. This tax was increased from $1 a year, required to give the Federal Government jurisdiction, to $3 as a war-revenue measure. We submit that so far as this particular tax is concerned it is time the Federal authorities took cognizance of the fact that the war is over.

Another matter is that physicians are not permitted, in computing their income tax, to deduct the necessary expenses of attending medical conferences and meetings of medical societies. This ruling is by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but it has the force of law. It needs no argument to show that a physician in order to do his best work must make contact with his fellow practitioners and keep in touch with the progress that is made in the complex and difficult work of his profession. A medical association is not a trade association. Its purpose is primarily to spread information among its members and to enable them to give better service. Whatever loss of revenue might occur through the exemption from income tax of that part of the doctors' income which they spend attending medical meetings is more than repaid by the better service they render to their public, often for little or no compensation.

I take it that a legislator is not much troubled by letters from physicians or from medical societies, nor does he have much opportunity to learn what the large and silent group of busy professional men, many of them with no party affiliation, are thinking about. What we want of the Federal Government is, briefly, less taxation, both direct and indirect; less diffuse and wasteful expenditure; less meddling on the part of Government bureaus and their agents with people who, if let alone, would be decent and useful citizens; in a word, better government and less of it.

Respectfully,

E. W. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2736) authorizing use of Government buildings at Fort Crockett, Tex., for occupancy during State convention of Texas Shriners (Rept. No. 321); and

A bill (H. R. 593) authorizing the issuance of service medals to officers and enlisted men of the two brigades of Texas cavalry organized under authority from the War Department under date of December 8, 1917, and authorizing an appropriation therefor; and further authorizing the wearing by such officers and enlisted men on occasions of ceremony of the uniform lawfully prescribed to be worn by them during their service (Rept. No. 322).

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 116) to amend section 196 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 323);

A bill (S. 2265) to provide for a rearrangement of the public alley facilities in square 616 in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 324); and

A bill (S. 2848) to validate an agreement between the Secretary of War, acting on behalf of the United States, and the Washington Gas Light Co. (Rept. No. 825).

Mr. BALL also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1782) to provide for the widening of Nichols Avenue between Good Hope Road and S Street SE., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 326) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 327) thereon.

Mr. COUZENS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 696) authorizing and directing the Treasurer of the United States to convey certain land in section 21, Huron County, Mich., to the Pointe Aux Barques Resort Association, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 328) thereon.

Mr. HARRELD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1704) for the relief of dispossessed allotted Indians of the Nisqually Reservation, Wash. (Rept. No. 329); and

A bill (S. 2902) authorizing the acquiring of Indian lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in Idaho, for reservoir purposes in connection with the Minidoka irrigation project (Rept. No. 330).

Mr. HARRELD also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3852) providing for the final disposition of the affairs of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians of North Carolina, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 331) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2261) for the relief of Arthur A. Smith, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 332) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 105) authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1037) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 333) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. WATSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 28th instant they presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 214) for the relief of the Old National Bank of Martinsburg, Martinsburg, W. Va.

RENTAL CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, under the resolution (S. Res. 158) authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to make an investigation of rental conditions in Washington, the committee was to file report on the 31st day of March, which is today. I ask for an extension of one week in which to submit the report. The investigation itself is completed, but the report is not yet ready to be presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RIO GRANDE VALLEY OF TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in further reference to the lower Rio Grande Valley and the investigation thereof now in progress under Senate Resolution 133, I desire to state that I have been furnished by Hon. A. B. Cole, mayor of Brownsville, Tex., who represents the various chambers of commerce in the valley, with a detailed statement as to soil conditions and irrigation facilities in that section. The statement is based on affidavits and statements by the engineers and managers of the 12 major irrigation projects in the valley and by more than 300 representative and responsible landowners located on these projects. As a matter of justice to all concerned, I ask that this statement be published in the Record.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Facts concerning the Lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas.

I. GEOGRAPHICAL SITUATION.

Although commonly called the Lower Rio Grande Valley, the irrigated district in the counties mentioned constitutes, in fact, the delta of the Rio Grande, and includes, roughly, the southeastern quarter of Hidalgo County and the western half of Cameron County, extending along the Rio Grande for about 65 miles, from Mission eastward to an irregular line about 8 miles east of Brownsville, with a width varying from 12 miles at Mission to 25 miles or more near Brownsville. About 600,000 acres in this fertile belt are available for cultivation, but of this tract about 40,000 acres in Cameron County are as yet without irrigation facilities. Various tracts adjacent to the river, aggregating about 10,000 acres, are irrigated directly from the Rio Grande through small private irrigation systems; while the remaining 450,000 acres are irrigated by, or entitled to irrigation from, 12 independent irrigation systems, 6 in Hidalgo County and 6 in Cameron County. All of the Cameron County systems and 4 of those in Hidalgo County are owned and operated by water improvement districts, which are defined districts organized under the laws of Texas as public municipal corporations for the purpose of supplying water for irrigation to the lands within their boundaries. These districts possess the power of taxation to support bond issues for construction purposes and of assessing the lands benefited for operation and maintenance purposes. They are managed by a board of directors chosen by the qualified voters residing within the particular district. The two remaining Hidalgo County irrigation systems are owned and operated by solvent and responsible private corporations.

II. SOIL.

The soil in this irrigated district is composed entirely of the alluvial deposits of the Rio Grande, and experts are agreed that it is of unsurpassed fertility. It is in fact far more productive than equally fertile lands elsewhere, because seasonal and climatic conditions permit the growing of three crops in two years or, with care and good judgment in the selection and rotation of crops, two crops may be grown on the same land in a single year. During the year 1923 this irrigated district, having about 220,000 acres in actual cultivation, marketed cotton, cottonseed, and cottonseed products of the gross value to the growers of more than $10,000,000, and since November 1, 1923, it has already marketed more than 6,000 carloads of winter vegetables of the minimum value to the grower of not less than $500 per car, or exceeding $3,000,000, besides several hundred cars of citrus fruits and vegetables moving in less than carload lots.

These shipments are continuing at the average rate of 150 cars per day, and will continue in similar volume through April, May, and early June, during which months new potatoes, tomatoes, string beans, green corn, cantaloupes, and early melons are marketed. Much of the land from which the vegetables are harvested will be at once planted in cotton, which will be harvested and marketed in August, leaving the land ready for another crop of winter vegetables. In July a considerable acreage of broomcorn will be harvested. Broomcorn is regarded as a minor crop, but during the five-year period 1919-1923, inclusive, this district has marketed 1,575 cars of broomcorn, at an average price to the grower for the five-year period of nearly $200 per ton, the most important and profitable crops of broomcorn having been those of 1919, when this district moved 843 cars, at an average price of $240 per ton, more than $3,000,000 in all, and 1923, when 446 carloads were moved, at an average price to the grower of $160 per ton, or $1,100,000 in all. Corn is grown principally for home consumption, and only 7 cars were marketed by rail during 1923, but for several years prior to 1922 the Rio Grande Delta marketed an average of 800 cars of corn each season.

IV. IRRIGATION FACILITIES.

The law authorizing the creation of water improvement districts requires that the districts in each county shall be designated numerically in the order of their creation. For convenience, however, the 10 districts of this character in the Rio Grande Delta, along with the two important systems operated by private corporations, are individualized by identifying them with the localities to which they pertain rather than by their corporate appellations. The 12 large systems, located from west to east along the Rio Grande, are as follows:

LOCALITY AND CORPORATE NAME.

- Mission-Sharyland: United Irrigation Co.
- Edinburg: Hidalgo County Water Improvement District No. 4.
- McAllen: Hidalgo County Water Improvement District No. 3.
- Alamo-Pharr-San Juan: Hidalgo County Water Improvement District No. 2.
- Donna: Hidalgo County Water Improvement District No. 1.
- Mercedes-Westlaco: American-Rio Grande London Irrigation Co.
- Santa Maria: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 4.
- La Feria: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 3.
- Hartington: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1.
- San Benito-Rio Hondo: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 2.
- Brownsville-Les Fresnos: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 6.
- Brownsville-El Jardin: Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 5.

With the exception of the Edinburg system, now in the process of reconstruction, each of the above-mentioned irrigation systems has ample pumping capacity and canal facilities to supply water for irrigation to the land which it is intended to serve, as follows:

Irrigation system.	Net acreage under canals.	Acreage in cultivation, 1924.
Mission-Sharyland.	30,000	25,000
Edinburg.	40,000	20,000
McAllen.	7,700	7,300
Alamo-Pharr-San Juan.	63,000	50,000
Donna.	34,000	25,000
Mercedes-Westlaco.	85,000	5,000
La Feria.	28,000	14,000
Harlingen.	43,000	22,000
Santa Maria.	5,000	3,000
San Benito-Rio Hondo.	68,000	26,000
Brownsville-Los Fresnos.	18,000	9,000
Brownsville-El Jardin.	21,000	11,500
Total.	441,800	272,800

V. PARTICULAR DISTRICTS.

1. MISSION SHARYLAND.

The mission irrigation system, privately owned, cost exceeding $2,000,000. Besides ample pumping capacity, it has 20.56 miles of main canals, 22.57 miles of submain canals, and 129.8 miles of laterals. Upon learning of the Senate resolution, 50 farmers on this irrigation system signed voluntary affidavits stating facts as to land costs and crop yields, and that the company which supplies water to their lands has rendered satisfactory service.

2. EDINBURG.

Nine-tenths of the complaints which formed the basis for the charges contained in the Senate resolution resulted from the troubles of the private irrigation corporations chartered to irrigate the lands of the present Edinburg district. With the organization of the water improvement district, which now owns them, the existing canals and pumping plants have been put into condition to irrigate all the lands now under cultivation, and plans have been carefully prepared by a competent engineer, and adequately financed, to enable this district to supply the additional acreage it is intended to water. As a municipal corporation its financial troubles are ended, since the lands it serves are among the best and most fertile in the delta.

3. McALLEN.

The McAllen district is the smallest of the great Hidalgo County irrigation systems, but its physical and financial condition is sound and it is backed by a prosperous and contented farming community and by the thriving city of McAllen, an exceptionally handsome town of 6,500 people.

4. ALAMO, PHARR, AND SAN JUAN.

The largest water-improvement district in the delta surrounds the growing towns of Pharr, San Juan, and Alamo. The Pharr-San Juan territory was developed in 1911 by Louisiana interests incorporated as the Louisiana-Rio Grande Canal Co., and its lands have always received proper irrigation. The Alamo section of this district has been developed since 1917 by Alamo Land & Sugar Co. and is noted for the high grade of its citizenship. Hidalgo County water improvement district No. 2, which has acquired the former Louisiana-Rio Grande canal system, possesses facilities which are entirely adequate to pump and deliver all the water needed to irrigate the full 63,000 acres entitled to receive it, and for the past two years it has, in fact, irrigated approximately 50,000 acres in actual cultivation without receiving a single complaint as to the service rendered.

5. DONNA.

The district which centers at Donna, a growing city of 4,000 inhabitants, is the oldest of the water improvement districts in the valley, having been incorporated in 1914 to take over a small irrigating plant operated by a private corporation. Since 1915 the growth of this section and the improvement in its irrigation facilities have been steady and continuous. This water improvement district is now prepared to furnish water upon any land under its canals—34,000 acres in all—upon five days' notice or less, and for three years past has supplied efficient irrigation to all applicants without receiving a single complaint. Twenty-five thousand acres are in cultivation for 1924.

6. MERCEDES—WESTLACO.

The largest and most expensive irrigation system in the Rio Grande Delta is operated by American-Rio Grande Land & Irrigation Co. in the district which includes the important towns of Westlaco and Mercedes. Westlaco, the youngest town in the delta, is probably the busiest farming center in the United States, while Mercedes is a thriving city of more than 5,000 inhabitants. This system represents an outlay of more than $2,000,000, and is not only prepared to irrigate adequately and efficiently all of the 85,000 acres or more now under its canal system but up to 100,000 acres of land in actual cultivation.

7. SANTA MARIA.

The smallest water improvement district in the delta is operated at Santa Maria for the irrigation of about 5,000 acres of especially fertile soil. The cost of irrigating this small and compact district is very low, and the distribution of its water is directly in the hands of the relatively few farmers who receive it.

8. LA FERIA.

The La Feria water improvement district absorbed a badly designed private irrigation system in 1918, since which date it has entirely replaced the former inadequate canals and pumping plants and is now in about the best physical and financial situation of any of the public districts. It has at present exceeding 28,000 acres of land under canal, with half that acreage in actual cultivation, and will take over the irrigation of several thousand additional acres whenever satisfactory financial arrangements shall have been made by the owners of the land. The La Feria lands are of unsurpassed fertility.

9. HARLINGEN.

The Harlingen irrigation system has supplied efficient irrigation to all lands entitled to receive it continuously since 1917, and the city of Harlingen and surrounding territory have during the past seven years experienced the most rapid and continuous growth of any community in the delta. A notary public commissioned to take depositions of witnesses at Stuart Place, west of Harlingen, in this district, on March 18, 1924, heard the sworn testimony of numerous farmers who have resided in that community for the past several years as to the market value of an average tract of 20 acres of land in that community, and none of them fixed its value at less than $600 per acre.

10. SAN BENITO-RIO HONDO.

With the exception of brief interruptions, due to market conditions, the prosperity of the lands now irrigated by Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 2 has been continuous since 1911. This district surrounds San Benito, a progressive city of 6,000 inhabitants, and Rio Hondo, a growing town flanked by beautiful farms. It is served also by the San Benito Rio Grande Railroad, which has loading stations in many portions of the district. The water improvement district is in splendid physical condition to supply water for irrigation to all lands in the district. For many years San Benito has originated the largest tonnage of any railway station in the delta.

11. BROWNSVILLE-LOS FRESNOS.

Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 6 is an enlargement and continuation of the oldest cooperative irrigation systems in the delta. It was originally designed for rice irrigation, and portions of its lands have been under continuous cultivation under irrigation for the past 20 years. Practically all its farmers who have farmed continuously during the period are now wealthy, or at least independently well to do. The northern or Los Fresnos portion of this district has been in profitable cultivation since 1917. Most of the potatoes marketed from the delta are grown in this and in the adjacent Rio Hondo and El Jardin districts.

12. BROWNSVILLE-EL JARDIN.

Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 5 illustrates the absolute necessity for the vigorous development of irrigated districts in the delta by sales to actual farmers by the expensive and intensive methods of "colonization" by "land companies." The district east of Brownsville has long been known as one of the most fertile portions of the Rio Grande Delta, besides possessing certain climatic advantages even as compared with other Delta districts. Successful and profitable farming on lands there, so situated that they may be irrigated directly from the Rio Grande by individual enterprise, has been practiced for more than 40 years. Relying on these special advantages successive attempts were made in 1907 and 1915 to irrigate portions of this district on a cooperative basis. Both attempts failed because the land was not developed and placed in cultivation rapidly enough to support the overhead cost of cooperative irrigation, and the irrigation companies became bankrupt from lack of adequate financial support. Much of the land in this district was acquired by James-Dickinson Farm Mortgage Co. and allied interests in 1918; Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 5 was organized with adequate financial support, and in five years this district has been transformed from a wilderness into a garden, cultivated by numerous families of prosperous and contented people, scores of whom, since the introduction of the Hedlin resolution, have made voluntary affidavits that they have found their lands fertile and productive; irrigation prompt and abundant, and their relations satisfactory with the companies from which they bought their land.

VI. OVERFLOW CONDITIONS.

With regard to damage or possible damage from overflow, the Rio Grande Delta must be considered in three distinct sections: (a) Cameron County, which is a true delta, where possible damaging effects from overflow are relatively inconsequential; (b) the "second lift" lands in Hidalgo County which form a shelf or bench 25 miles long by 10 miles wide, extending from Mission to Westlaco, which are entirely above any conceivable overflow; (c) the "first lift" lands in Hidalgo County, a portion of which are subject to overflow in case of extreme rises in the Rio Grande.

For a correct understanding of this condition, it is necessary to explain that the true Valley of the Rio Grande ends at the western extremity of the irrigated district near Mission; and the irrigated district commonly called the "valley" is in fact a semidelta from Mission to Mercedes and a true delta from Mercedes to Brownsville and Rio Hondo. The "second lift" lands, in Hidalgo County, slope gently to the north or northeast but are bounded on the south by an abrupt descent, or bluff, called the "sejo." At the foot of the "sejo" there is a chain of lakes and depressions called "resacas," which diverge from the Rio Grande near Mission and form a natural wasteway for the flood waters of the Rio Grande. These flood waters begin to break over into this series of resacas approximately at the point where the valley ends and the delta begins. As is usual in delta formations, the banks of the river below Mission are higher than the adjacent country, which slopes gently to the northeast to the foot of the "sejo," where the land rises abruptly before again sloping toward the northeast, requiring the use of "second lift" pumping plants for water for irrigation. The chain of lakes and depressions above mentioned is thus inclosed in a semivalley between the "sejo" on the north and the high river banks on the south.

West of Mercedes the "sejo" ends, thus permitting the bulk of the flood waters to escape to the north and northeast, following the slope of the country, and these waters eventually find their way through a series of natural depressions to Laguna Madre in Willacy County and the northern edge of Cameron County, 30 to 40 miles north of the mouth of the Rio Grande. In the true delta region below Mercedes, a series of natural drains, called "arroyos," and of ancient river beds, called "resacas," on both sides of the Rio Grande receive and distribute the surplus flood waters which follow the river channel below Mercedes, and such overflow conditions as are to be dealt with in Cameron County are caused by some artificial interference with one or more of these natural outlets or drains. These are generally unimportant, and opinions differ as to whether the net effect of these sporadic minor overflows is not more beneficial than otherwise to the relatively small tracts of land affected.

Since the immense canals necessary to carry water for the irrigation of the Hidalgo County "second-lift" lands necessarily cross the depressions which serve as spillways for the flood waters of the Rio Grande, thus acting as protection levees for some tracts of land which would otherwise overflow, while forcing water upon other tracts which are otherwise above the flood level, it is difficult to estimate the proportion of the Hidalgo "first-lift" lands which are in fact liable to overflow. Much of this territory, in the case of extreme rises in the Rio Grande, does, in fact, overflow to a depth varying from several feet in the beds of the natural spillways mentioned to a few inches in the case of lands nearer the Rio Grande. This fact undoubtedly affects to some extent the value of the land in question, but, except in the actual beds of the resacas and depressions which serve as wasteways, by no means renders the overflowed land unsuitable for profitable farming purposes; in fact, nearly 12,000 acres of this possible "overflow" land is in actual cultivation in the Alamo-Pharr-San Juan district alone, and similar acreages in the other districts, for the year 1924, and this land is cultivated by men who are familiar with flood conditions, know exactly what to expect from possible overflows, and have deliberately chosen to farm this overflow land. Such tracts as overflow to a depth of a few inches only are benefited rather than harmed since they receive a free irrigation and a rich deposit of soil from the silt-laden waters. Major floods in the Rio Grande occur between May and October and there is no known instance of winter crops being harmed by floods, while the chance for a cotton, corn, or broomcorn crop to be destroyed in any given season is too remote to influence the choice of such lands by farmers, especially those who prefer to farm on a large scale, in view of the surpassing fertility of the soil. For certain crops, especially canteloupes, true overflow lands are preferred by the growers.

VII. CITRUS FRUITS.

Experimental orchards of citrus fruits were planted a decade ago by numerous far-seeing delta residents but the majority of the farmers were content to await the results from these experimental orchards before investing heavily in citrus production. The older orchards have now yielded their owners an average of $800 per acre per annum for the past five years, and 20,000 acres of delta land are now set in citrus fruits in the various districts. The major portion of this acreage is in grapefruit, Rio Grande grapefruit having already earned a nationwide reputation for superior quality, juiciness, and flavor.

CHILD LABOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in relation to the child-labor amendment to the Constitution pending before Congress, I have a very instructive article published in Barron's Weekly of March 24, 1924, which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The article referred to is as follows:

CHILD-LABOR FACTS AND BUNCOMBE—EMOTIONAL PLEAS WITH LITTLE FACT BASIS FOR A DANGEROUS AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

(By Aaron Hardy Uim.)

"We have great fortunes piled up by exploiters of child labor that kill children in their mills, mines, and factories. More than one man with a big fortune might put up outside his front door the skull of a young child for every $10,000 that he owns if he could get back from the graveyard what he has sent there."

This is typical of the arguments being advanced widely and emotionally for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to prohibit or regulate the working of children. Some of the arguments are more specific.

One made by a publicist of note is based on a declaration that the hands of 2,000,000 little children working daily in mines and factories are raised in appeal to the Federal Government as the only agency which can save them.

In others woeful pictures are drawn of alleged hordes of child laborers in the cotton mills of the South.

Other sad pictures of little children working in canning factories, on truck farms, and in beet fields are put forth in tearfully worded form.

All who have been urging the proposed constitutional amendment lay emphasis on the census finding of 1920, to wit, that there are more than 1,000,000 children in the United States who are gainfully employed.

CATER TO SENSATIONALISM.

Several newspapers and magazines lately have carried on extended campaigns of "exposure" on behalf of this tremendously far-reaching proposed change of method in dealing by law with a subject of extremely delicate potentialities.

Is there any merit in these campaigns or any truth in the "exposures"? There is some basis of fact for both.

This fact basis, however, rarely has been put forth in true perspective by those advocating full congressional authority over the children of the country.

Those who have presented it in correct perspective state frankly that the arguments commonly made and the facts underlying those arguments comprise mostly buncombe.

"The attempt to sensationalize the present child-labor situation in terms of past conditions or the whole situation in terms of a part is decidedly unfortunate," says Raymond G. Fuller in his recently published volume, Child Labor and the Constitution. Mr. Fuller, for long an attaché of the National Child Labor Committee, has specialized in child-labor reform and is now an earnest advocate of the proposed child labor amendment to the Federal Constitution, but he declares candidly that much of the propaganda made on behalf of the amendment affronts the intelligence of the average citizen.

This propaganda rests chiefly on the assumption that the child-labor problem is one of industry—that is, mills, mines, and factories—or of exploitation by what generally is termed big business of the children of the country. It rests, too, upon another assumption that is more implied than stated, which is that work is per se harmful, especially to children.

Neither of these assumptions is well founded.

The business and industrial world has paid very little attention to the movement in its present form, for the reason that this world has very little interest in it aside from the false aspersions cast upon business and industry by emotional advocates careless as to facts.

BETTER TREATMENT OF THE CHILD.

The truth is that, as the intellectually honest advocates of the proposed reform admit, the child-labor problem, in so far as there is one, is "no longer a matter of cruel slavery of little children in mines and factories."

No doubt there is a child-labor problem, as there will be so long as there are children, no matter how many amendments are tacked onto the Federal Constitution or statutes passing by Congress and State legislatures.

But the essentials of this problem are now almost entirely different from what they were 30, 20, or even a dozen years ago. Probably in no other aspect of American life has there been such tremendous change during the last 20 years as in the working or rather the nonworking of children.

Though, no doubt, a million or more persons less than 16 years old are profitably employed at some time in the United States now, there is comparatively little of the kind of child labor over which many people far removed from the sentimental class used to weep. There no doubt still is some as there always will be, and as there must be if anything like an equitable adjustment of the problem prevails. For it is as important that some persons under sixteen be employed as that others be not employed, and it is very probably impossible for fully correct selections to be made in either case, by law or otherwise.

STATE SUPERVISION SEEMS ADEQUATE.

In truth it seems apparent that in so far as the employment of children in industry goes—the kind of employment which leads many good people to advocate a Federal constitutional amendment covering the subject—laws have done almost if not quite so much as they can or should do.

Every State now has laws governing the employment of children in industry. Some probably are not quite so complete as they should be. In some cases the laws are not well enforced. These laws, however, are undergoing steady improvement, as is their enforcement; and in no case, in so far as the writer can find, are these laws being weakened or their enforcement relaxed. Only last year seven State legislatures added to existing child-labor statutes.

State laws on the subject are not uniform, which may be one good argument for the handling of this subject from Washington. But some of the lack of uniformity is more apparent than real. To get excited over the fact that three States still permit children under 14 years old to work in factories is a waste of emotion, when there are virtually no factories of the kind which employ children in any of those States. It is equally foolish to wax sensational over the fact that a State famous for its mining operations does not forbid the working of children in mines; for it happens that in that State no children ever had been employed in mines.

Moreover, the laws governing child labor in the so-called industrial States are becoming more and more uniform, thereby eliminating the once important competitive factor arising, for example, from the lack of such laws in cotton-manufacturing areas in the South and the prevalence of them in New England.

In 1912 the child-labor laws of 21 States were below the standards set up by the uniform child labor act drafted by the national labor committee at that time. Now the laws of only three States are below those standards in important particulars, and these are not industrial States. In seven States the standards written into laws are above those considered to be ideal in 1912.

LESS EXPLOITATION EVIDENT.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. There are excellent figures showing how the child-labor problem of old has been ameliorated far beyond what most of us who worked on it 15 or more years ago ever hoped to see come about.

As late as 1910, the census disclosed practically 2,000,000 persons under 16 years of age as being gainfully employed in this country. These amounted to 18.4 per cent of all children, to practically 25 per cent of all boys.

But in 1920 only 1,000,858 persons under 16, or 8.5 per cent of all, were so recorded. As in former census years, the bulk of these were employed on farms, mainly home farms, that is as working units of households.

Only 413,549 were reported as gainfully employed in all kinds of urban occupations—carrying or selling newspapers, clerking in stores, serving apprenticeship to trades, or working regularly in mines, mills, or factories.

The above figures looked at without notice of other figures seem very big.

At the time they were recorded there were 12,500,000 persons under 16 years old in the country.

Moreover, when analyzed, the figures covering the working of children become much less formidable than when looked at in single groups.

More than two-thirds of the children were in their fifteenth or sixteenth years. For those employed in manufacturing and mechanical industries, all but 10,000 had passed their fourteenth birthday. Practically all who were doing any kind of work around mines were thus advanced in age.

MILLS HAVE BETTER RECORD.

The last census showed that the "tiny tot" who used to plod its weary way to work in dusty and gloomy mills, no longer is to be found, barring isolated individual instances. The small child has all but disappeared from southern cotton mills which for long were lending offenders in the matter of child labor.

The southern mills now make a slightly better showing in this respect than do the mills of New England. In 1919 only about 5 per cent of the persons employed in the cotton mills of either section were under 16 years old, and practically all of these were from 14 to 16. In the mills of only three southern or New England States did the proportion of persons under 16 comprise 6 per cent or more of all employees. One of these was Rhode Island, whose record was the same as that of North Carolina. South Carolina was 6.3 per cent.

Yet persons agitating for an amendment to the Constitution giving Congress power to exercise complete control over the children of the country often declare that cotton mills are being built with the view of capitalizing the labor of small children. In the face of patent facts, it frequently is stated that mills are being moved from New England to the South chiefly or solely because of a plentitude of available child labor for mill operation in the latter section.

And thousands of people believe this buncombe, because at one time there was something to such statements.

Sixty-one per cent of all gainfully employed children in 1920 were on farms. Only a few of these were reported as working out, that is, for other than their own homes. Even on the farms there was a 50 per cent reduction, in the number of children gainfully employed, between 1910 and 1920. This happened in spite of the fact that virtually no States attempt to regulate the employment of children on farms.

PART-TIME WORK.

It doesn't follow necessarily that those reported as gainfully employed on either farms or in cities work all the time or do work which keeps them from school or does them harm in any way. No doubt some do work all the time, and some don't go to school at all, and some work under conditions not altogether beneficial.

But the figures include thousands who work only during vacation or after school hours or on Saturdays or during the planting and harvesting periods. Many thousands of the children employed in manufacturing industries work in establishments that operate only for short periods, such as fruit packing and many canning establishments. Other thousands are apprentices who are getting some of their education in the workroom instead of depending on schools for it all—an educational process now becoming obsolete, but once considered equal or superior to the schools. Several thousand of the 185,000 persons under 16 recorded in 1920 as employed in mechanical or manufacturing lines were put down as apprentices. No doubt a great many others in these and other lines are, in fact, apprentices. Once upon a time the majority of telegraph operators were evolved from messenger boys. This and several other similar avenues of occupational training and even education in its best sense are now all but closed to the youth of the country on account of rigid child-labor statutes.

While improvement still is needed in many State laws, close students of the subject are of opinion that nearly all the real child-labor reform that can be accomplished by law has been achieved.

Experience indicates that it is virtually impossible to reach by law some of the worst but yet limited forms of child labor. One of these forms is home factory work, carried on extensively in some of the large cities. An effort has been made to regulate this in New York, but with poor results. For the laws fully to reach this and some other forms of oppressive child labor in homes, including farms, would call for putting virtually all the homes of the country under the surveillance of Government inspectors. It would mean regulations which would interfere with proper as well as improper working of children. And as nearly every person who came up, unpampered, before 1900 knows, a certain amount of work is all but necessary for the sound development of children—it is a vital part of their training for life.

SCHOOL VERSUS WORK.

"The best school in the world," says Dr. G. Stanley Hall, "is an eastern farm, where a variety of crops are produced and a variety of work goes on."

"The perpetual dismay of the urban home," says Prof. Charles J. Galpin, "is in finding that there is nothing for the urban child to do except go to school."

"There is a general feeling," says Dr. Arthur T. Hadley, of Yale, "that education is so good a thing and indoor work in shops so undesirable for growing boys and girls that we ought to try to keep everybody in school, as far as we can, till the ages of 16 and 17."

"If the student is going to evade doing his own part in his own education, then I say it is better for him to work nine hours in a shop than to shirk five hours, play two hours, and loaf two hours, which is about what he does if compelled to go to school where he does not pull his own weight in the boat. And it is not only better for him, it is infinitely better for the other pupils and for the teachers."

Any Federal law on the subject would have to apply uniformly to all the country, making no distinction on account of peculiar conditions in different sections, such as those inhering to the large negro population in the South.

FEDERAL VERSUS STATE LAWS.

It is clear that no Federal law is needed, if even desirable, in so far as city conditions go. Three-fourths majority of the States now have child labor laws substantially as strong as the congressional acts which the Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional. In several of the States the laws are even stronger. In some they are remiss in matters of detail; in several of these, however, there is no need for some of the regulations which Congress attempted to set up.

But the proposed amendment would give Congress power to legislate regarding farm as well as city children. In fact, it is the farm children who many of the advocates of the amendment especially want to be brought within Federal jurisdiction. The diversity of farm conditions throughout the country would make this a very dangerous venture.

In the case of urban employment of children, Federal supervision in great measure would only duplicate what is already now being done at considerable expense. For the amendment would not deprive the States of power to legislate, equally with and beyond Congress, on the subject. As was demonstrated when the acts passed by Congress were in effect, there would be all kinds of conflict between State and Federal authorities, with much costly bother to parents and employers.

The point this writer would emphasize here is that the amendment is being advocated and favored widely for reasons which no longer are tenable—that is the exploitation of children by large employers. Very few of the amendment's advocates are so candid as Raymond G. Fuller, who says:

"The bulk of child labor in this country does not correspond with the old conceptions and its elimination is not likely to be achieved by dependence on the traditional methods of child-labor reform."

But in expanding—via a far-reaching amendment to the Federal Constitution—the traditional methods, there is involved the risk of extending Federal Government bureaucracy into the most intimate and delicate realms of life, that of parent and child and that of the home.

The great progress made by the States and caused also by influences—such as the increasing use of machinery—having nought to do with the statutes—in curbing the improper working of children indicates very clearly that the subject can be left safely to local control.

POLICY OF WILSON ADMINISTRATION AS TO LEASING OIL LANDS.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer for the RECORD an article which appeared in the New York Times—a very well written article—on the policy of the Wilson administration as to leasing oil lands.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE OIL SITUATION—POLICY OF WILSON ADMINISTRATION AS TO LEASING OIL LANDS.

The attempt to justify the secret leasing of all the naval reserves, the entire Teapot Dome and Elk Hills, to Sinclair and Doheny, by the specious and confusing statement that 150 leases were made by Secretary Payne outside the naval reserves, and that certain lands or wells were leased in a naval reserve during the Wilson administration, is like comparing the making of a back fire to prevent the spread of a prairie fire, with the deliberate starting of an incendiary fire such as caused the destruction of Smyrna. What the Wilson administration did was to follow the national policy established by Presidents Taft and Roosevelt, and by the Congress when it passed the leasing law, to protect and conserve the naval reserves, to keep the oil for the use of the Navy for some great emergency; while Secretaries Fall and Denby deliberately defied this national policy and secretly leased the reserves, thus destroying the reserves.

A simple statement of fact will make this plain.

Before the passage by Congress, February 25, 1920, of the leasing act authorizing the leasing of Government-owned oil lands on a royalty basis, the only law by which the public could take out oil was the old placer mining law which allowed a person to make a mining location on 20 acres or eight persons to club together and locate 160 acres, the same law which applied to gold or silver. If the claimant followed up his claim with diligence and brought in a producing well he became the owner and entitled to a patent and the Government received nothing.

The leasing act changed this policy, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to issue rules and regulations, to fix the royalty to be paid at not less than 12½ per cent of the oil taken out, and pursuant to such regulations to lease the public lands. Thus the Government received substantial royalty and retained ownership of the lands.

Before the passage of the leasing law two things had happened—

First. Many locations had been filed under the placer mining law by people who thus claimed title to the lands; to the extent that these claims were valid, the claimants had to be recognized; this was true even inside the naval reserves where locations were made in good faith before the reserves were created.

Second. The Government established the national policy of setting aside oil lands for the use of the Navy for a future emergency, it being well known that our supply of commercial oil would in a few years be exhausted, thus—

Naval reserve No. 1, in California: The Elk Hill, containing some 32,000 acres, was created by President Taft, September 2, 1912.

Naval reserve No. 2, also in California, was created by President Taft, December 13, 1912, containing roughly 30,000 acres, but more than 20,000 acres of this was at the time privately owned, and much of the remainder covered by mining locations.

Naval reserve No. 3, Teapot Dome, in Wyoming, was created by President Wilson, April 30, 1915; this contained 9,481 acres; was all Government land.

Some claims under the old placer law had been filed on lands in these naval reserves before the reserves were created.

WHEN PAYNE BECAME SECRETARY.

This was the situation when John Barton Payne was appointed Secretary of the Interior, February 28, 1920 (qualified March 15, 1920). The leasing law (in force February 25, 1920) made it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to administer the law, i. e., to issue rules and regulations for prospecting the leasing, and to fix the royalty to be paid on lands outside the naval reserve, and to decide not only as to the validity of claims pending under the old law, but where two or more persons had conflicting claims, to decide between them. It was the policy of the Congress that lands outside the naval reserves should be leased—but that the naval reserves should not be leased, unless a claimant under the old law came strictly under the terms of the leasing law.

REPUBLICAN SMOKE SCREEN.

The Republicans try to defend Secretaries Fall and Denby and attempt to make a smoke screen of the fact that Secretary Payne leased certain oil lands. They do not state what every one should know, now fully brought out by the Senate committee, that Secretary Payne made no secret leases, that his door was wide open, everything was public, and the leasing law strictly followed and the policy of the Government upheld and maintained; that with the approval and support of President Wilson and Secretary of the Navy Daniels the naval reserves were fully protected, and, but for Secretaries Fall and Denby, would now be safe and intact.

A brief reference to the leasing law and the undisputed facts make this clear.

1. THE LAW AS TO LANDS NOT KNOWN TO CONTAIN OIL OUTSIDE NAVAL RESERVES.

Following the policy of Congress to develop and lease oil land the leasing act provided (sec. 13) that persons who desired to prospect for oil on lands not known to contain oil might obtain permits, as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right for a period not exceeding two years to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field, upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months."

If a prospector found oil or gas, section 14 provided in terms that he should be entitled to a lease, as follows:

"That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any permit the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit . . . for a term of 20 years upon a royalty of 5 per cent . . . and shall be entitled to a preference right to a lease for the remainder of the land in his prospecting permit at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent . . . the amount of the royalty to be determined by competitive bidding or fixed by regulations prescribed by the Secretary."

And in section 16 it is provided:

"That no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands within the permit, unless adjoining lands belonging to private persons."

2. AS TO PUBLIC LANDS KNOWN TO CONTAIN OIL.

Section 17 of the leasing act provides:

"That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands—lands not entered under the old law—containing the same, not subject to preferential lease, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior to the highest responsible bidder by competitive bidding under general regulations to qualified applicants in areas not exceeding 640 acres . . . such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such bonus as may be accepted, and of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than 12½ per cent in amount or value of the production, and the payment of $1 per acre per annum."

As to lands where locations had been made under the old placer law, and the claimant was willing to compromise by accepting a lease under the leasing act, section 18 provided:

"That upon relinquishment to the United States . . . of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed prior to July 3, 1910, and continuously since . . . under the pre-existing placer mining law to any oil or gas bearing land upon which there has been drilled one or more oil or gas wells to discover embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued—by President Taft—September 27, 1900, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment as royalty . . . If in possession of such land, undisputed by any other claimant prior to July 1, 1919, shall be entitled to a lease thereon from the United States for a period of 20 years at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent."

[NOTE: From the foregoing sections it is clear that as to lands not known to contain oil Congress desired to encourage prospecting, and gave the successful prospector the absolute right to a lease; and as to lands known to contain oil, but outside the naval reserves, provided in terms for their leasing by the Secretary of the Interior by competitive bidding; and required that the rights of persons who in good faith had made locations under the old law should be protected, and gave them the right to come in and surrender their claims acquired under the old law and accept leases under the leasing act. For the Secretary of the Interior to have refused to carry out these provisions would have been an arbitrary violation of the law and would have made him subject to action by mandamus.]

B. AS TO LANDS WITHIN THE NAVAL RESERVES.

Section 18 provides also—

"That as to all like claims (under old placer law) situate within a naval petroleum reserve the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee."

Then this provision as to the President:

"The authority of the President—must use his discretion."

The act continues:

"Provided, however, That the President may in his discretion lease the remainder of any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe."

"No claimant guilty of fraud shall have a lease."

NOTE.—From the above it is clear that where a claimant under the old placer law had located on lands within the naval reserve before the reserve was created, and had brought in a producing well, he was entitled as of right to a lease on his producing well. The Secretary of the Interior had no authority to refuse such a lease and had no authority to grant a lease for anything beyond the producing well with land adjacent only sufficient for its operation. The President, however, in his discretion had the right to lease to the claimant the remainder of his claim, or to permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant within the 660 feet; this authority was vested in the President and denied to the Secretary.

Under section 18a the President was also authorized to direct the compromise and settlement of any controversy as to lands withdrawn under the order of September 27, 1900, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds.

Section 19 of the leasing act provides for the protection of persons who had made a bona fide claim and expended money but not brought in a well. This, however, did not apply to lands within the naval reserves.

This sufficiently shows the provisions of the law and policy of the Government as embodied in the leasing act.

WHAT WAS DONE UNDER THE WILSON ADMINISTRATION.

The leasing act became effective on February 23, 1920. Prior to this time there had been filed and were pending an enormous volume of claims for locations under the old placer law on lands both within and without the naval reserves, and many suits were pending. Rules and regulations, with a fixed scale of royalties providing for the carrying out of the law, were promptly issued under section 13, and leases were issued under sections 14, 17, and 19. The legal rights of claimants were recognized, and such was the care under which the law was executed that not a single public criticism resulted, notwithstanding the tremendous volume of work imposed upon the Secretary.

NOW, AS TO THE NAVAL RESERVES.

As to naval reserve No. 1: Not a single claim was allowed nor a single lease made. It was left intact.

The contrast between the two administrations, aside from the general policy, is shown by the record as to section 36 in this reserve. The title to this 640 acres passed to the State of California with the distinct provision that it contained no minerals. When it was found to contain mineral—oil is mineral—and became a part of the naval reserve, the question was whether the title still belonged to the United States. Meantime, the Standard Oil Co. had acquired the right of the State of California to the major portion of the section and the Doheny interests the remainder, and were in possession. In February, 1921, Secretary Payne gave all parties in interest a public hearing, and decided that the title had not passed to the State of California, but remained in the United States; that the Standard Oil Co. and the Doheny interests acquired no title and were wrongly in possession; and Secretary Payne directed the Land Office to make entry accordingly, and made formal written request to the Department of Justice that proceedings be instituted in the courts, and to recover for the United States the land and oil taken out.

After Secretary Fall came in, he reversed this action, withdrew the request made by Secretary Payne to the Department of Justice to proceed against the oil companies, and permitted them to remain in possession.

Due to the Senate investigation, counsel has recently been appointed to sue the oil companies to recover this land, and to do now what Secretary Payne directed be done in February, 1921.

This naval reserve No. 1 was therefore left intact.

As to naval reserve No. 2: In this reserve it was found that claimants had brought in about 50 producing wells. These, under the mandatory provision of the leasing act, were leased to the claimants. With the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and the President, five offset wells were leased, i. e., where it was manifest that private wells had been drilled so near the line of the reserve as to drain the Government oil from the reserve, a well was drilled just within the reserve on a 25 per cent royalty basis, so that the Government would receive the royalty and not permit the private interest to take the oil out without payment of royalty. Another claimant for 540 acres in section 28 was compromised with and given lease on 120 acres.

With these exceptions, naval reserve No. 2 was left intact.

In this reserve the Honolulu Oil Co. claimed title to 17 quarter sections (some 2,000 acres), and applied for a patent. Secretary Payne, after a public hearing, decided the claim invalid and the company not entitled to a patent, and denied the same. The only criticism directed against the Wilson administration in the oil matter grew out of this Honolulu decision, and that, of course, came from the oil company and its friends.

As to naval reserve No. 3, the Teapot Dome, Wyoming: All of the claims on this reserve were rejected and no leases made. Among other claimants filed against this reserve was John C. Shaffer, who testified before the Senate committee. He said his claim was later recognized by Secretary Fall, and he was paid some $92,000 by Sinclair.

The Wilson administration left reserve No. 3 intact.

ACTION OF REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION—STRIKING CONTRAST.

Within less than three months after the close of the Wilson administration, upon the recommendation of Secretaries Fall and Denby, President Harding issued an Executive order purporting to transfer all of the powers and discretion the law imposed upon the President under the leasing act, and the powers and discretion conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy by the act passed June 4, 1920, to Secretary Fall. How Secretary Fall used this power in disposing of the naval reserves is well known. Whether this Executive order has any validity will be decided by the courts.

As to naval reserve No. 1: Secretary Fall reversed the decision of Secretary Payne as to section 36 and secretly gave that to the Standard Oil Co. and to Doheny, and secretly leased all of the remainder of reserve No. 1 to Mr. Doheny's companies.

In naval reserve No. 2: Where Secretary Payne had leased only the producing wells, Secretary Fall leased claimants their entire claims, and then leased the remainder of the reserve; and as to the 17 quarter sections claimed by the Honolulu Oil Co., which Secretary Payne had held invalid, Secretary Fall reversed to the extent of making the company a lease for the entire 2,000 acres.

As to naval reserve No. 3, which the Wilson administration had left intact, Secretary Fall secretly leased the entire reserve to the Sinclair interests.

REPUBLICAN DEFENSE.

Secretaries Fall and Denby protest that their action was in the public interest. The fallacy of this claim is conclusively shown.

(a) The national policy established by the Taft and Wilson administrations and approved by the Congress was reversed secretly by them without opportunity for public discussion or consideration.

(b) While the negotiations for naval reserve No. 1 were pending with Mr. Doheny, he sent Mr. Fall $100,000 in currency in a satchel delivered to Fall by Doheny's son. Sinclair sent to Mr. Fall $25,000 in Government bonds. What other secret considerations passed have not yet been disclosed.

(c) By action of a unanimous Senate (except Senator ELKINS) the United States Government has recently employed Messrs. Pomerele, Roberts, and Knight special counsel to undo the work of Messrs. Fall and Denby. Suits by the United States against the oil companies in possession of reserves Nos. 1 and 3 have been brought in the courts of the United States charging fraud and unlawful acts, and preliminary injunctions restraining the operation of the wells have been granted, and receivers have been appointed.

More need not be said.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2963) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under the extension by the Commissioner of Patents of the patent granted to Frederick G. Ransford and Peter Low as assignees of Marcus P. Norton, No. 25036, August 9, 1859; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 2964) to amend paragraphs 3 and 4 of section 13 of the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. BRUCE:

A bill (S. 2965) to amend the national prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 2966) granting a pension to Myra K. Emmons (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 2967) granting a pension to Amanda Shannon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COUZENS:

A bill (S. 2968) for the purchase of land in Oakland Township, Oakland County, Mich., to be used for a rifle range; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2969) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under the extension by the Commissioner of Patents of the patent granted to Frederick G. Ransford and Peter Low as assignees of Marcus P. Norton, No. 25036, August 9, 1859; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2970) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey of Westport Slough, Oreg.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 2971) to establish a fish-cultural station in Georgia; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 2972) granting a pension to Newton Ernest McElvain; and

A bill (S. 2973) granting a pension to James Shaw; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 2974) granting a pension to Augusta C. Harris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LADD:

A bill (S. 2975) validating certain applications for, and entries of public lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REDUCTION OF TAXES.

Mr. McKINLEY (for Mr. McCORMICK) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCORMICK to House bill 6715, the tax reduction bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COPELAND submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6820, the naval appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 14, line 1, after the word "Provided," to insert the word "further"; on the same page and at the end of the same line, after the colon, to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof not to exceed that authorized to be issued to other classes of the Naval Reserve Force, and to be charged against the clothing and small-stores fund."

And, on page 14, at the end of line 3, to insert after the colon and the proviso just above proposed to be inserted, the following additional proviso:

"Provided further, That until June 30, 1925, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia, shall constitute a Naval Militia; and until June 30, 1925, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1925, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $173,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States warehouse act, including the payment of such rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7220, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hattigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; also that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 43 to the said bill H. R. 6349, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 44 and had concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2625. An act to detach Jim Hogg County from the Corpus Christi division of the southern judicial district of the State of Texas and attach the same to the Laredo division of the southern judicial district of said State; and

H. R. 7449. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments to the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

March 29, 1924.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 43 to the bill (H. R. 6349) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and concur therein with amendments as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "Fiscal Assistant Secretary" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Undersecretary."

In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "and," insert the word "hereafter."

In line 10 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "Treasury," insert "hereafter."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,250,000."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 44. The adoption of this motion will close the disagreements on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator explain what the amendments are?

Mr. WARREN. The first applies only to the change of the name "Fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury." The House insisted upon the title "Undersecretary." The other amendment refers to the appropriation for airplane mail service. The Senate appropriated $1,500,000 and the House reduced the amount to $1,250,000. Those are the only changes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

A. W. MELLON, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, Senate Resolution 200.

The resolution (S. Res. 200) submitted by Mr. McKELLAR on the 28th instant is as follows:

Whereas section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provided as follows: "No person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, or first comptroller, or first auditor, or treasurer, or register shall, directly or indirectly, be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State or of the United States, or take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury Department other than what shall be allowed by law; and every person who offends against any of the prohibitions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and forfeit to the United States the penalty of $3,000, and shall upon conviction be removed from office and forever thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States; and if any other person than the public prosecutor shall give information of any such offense upon which a prosecution and conviction shall be had, one-half the aforesaid penalty of $3,000, when recovered, shall be for the use of the person giving such information"; and

Whereas section 3168 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows: "Any internal-revenue officer who is or shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production, rectification, or redistillation of distilled spirits, shall be dismissed from office; and every officer who becomes so interested in any such manufacture, or production, rectification, or redistillation, or in the production of fermented liquors, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000"; and

Whereas it appears from a letter from A. W. Mellon addressed to KENNETH MCKELLAR, dated March 5, 1924: "The refunds to the Gulf Co. and its subsidiaries were charged against three appropriations, depending upon the year in which the taxes refunded were originally collected. The payments were $766,112.29 out of the appropriation for 'Refund of taxes illegally collected, 1918, and prior years'; $1,350,884.63 from a similar appropriation for 1919; and $1,211,143.07 for 1921"; and

Whereas it appears that in April, 1921, after A. W. Mellon had become Secretary of the Treasury in March, 1921, the Treasury refunded to the Gulf Refining Co. sums in amounts shown by excerpts from said letter; and

Whereas it is further shown in said letter that an abatement and settlement has since been made with the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co., a company in which said A. W. Mellon is interested, in the sum of $2,631,381; and

Whereas other settlements made with other companies in which the said A. W. Mellon is stockholder or otherwise interested; and

Whereas it appears that the said A. W. Mellon is interested in the Overholt Distilling Co.: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be and is hereby requested and instructed to hold hearings by itself or by a subcommittee and report with the least delay practicable: First, whether the said A. W. Mellon is directly or indirectly concerned in carrying on the business of trade or commerce. Second, whether he is the owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel. Third, whether he is holding the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in violation of section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or any of the laws of the United States. Fourth, whether he is holding the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in violation of section 3168 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in passing upon the resolution which is now before the Senate it appears to me to be of the highest importance that the Senate should understand exactly what the facts are. In some previous actions that we have taken on other similar resolutions we have been guided, I think, by the charges made, without any reply having been made to those charges and without any statement of facts to guide us. Therefore, I want as briefly as I can to call attention to some misstatements in the recitals of Senate Resolution No. 200.

When Mr. Mellon was offered the post of Secretary of the Treasury by President Harding in the winter of 1920-21 he considered it for a time and finally told the President that he would accept it. One of his counsel for many years had been former Judge James H. Reed, of Pittsburgh. When Judge Reed learned that Mr. Mellon had agreed to accept the place he went to Mr. Mellon and called his attention to the provisions of section 243 of the Revised Statutes and to the provisions of the Federal reserve law, which, by the way, are not mentioned in the resolution, and to the provisions of one or two other statutes that might interfere with the investments which Mr. Mellon then had. He called to Mr. Mellon's attention the fact that he would not be permitted, if he accepted this position, to retain stocks in national banks; and he also called his attention to the fact that he could not continue to be in the active management of any business or continue to be a director or an officer of any active corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Pennsylvania?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator is passing along and mentioning these various matters, I wish to inquire whether the provision of law prohibiting the Secretary of the Treasury from being a stockholder in national banks is one of the provisions of the Federal reserve act?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; Mr. President, but I shall come to that in a moment, and shall read the section when I refer to it.

Mr. Mellon had no particular enthusiasm for the proposed change in his life, and he thought he saw in this suggestion a reasonable excuse for telling President Harding that he did not feel free to become Secretary of the Treasury. He went first to former Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, who had been consulting President Harding in regard to the make-up of his Cabinet, and who, I believe, with the late Senator Penrose, had been among the first to name Mr. Mellon to President Harding for the position of Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Mellon came to Washington to call this matter to Senator Knox's attention, and to ask Senator Knox to go to Mr. Harding and explain that the existence of these statutes made it difficult for him to become Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Knox replied at once, "Why, I am familiar with those statutes; I had occasion to refer to them while I was Attorney General, and while it is true that you will have to sell your bank stock, and while it is also true that you will have to resign from the various boards of directors on which you are serving, if you do that there will be no reason in the world why you should not go on, under the law, and become Secretary of the Treasury. However, to make sure of that," said Senator Knox, "I will ask Faust & Wilson, a firm of lawyers here in Washington in whom I have great confidence, to look up the case. It is my impression that there is a Supreme Court decision which makes it clear, but I will ask Faust & Wilson to look it up." And he did so.

Mr. Knox asked this firm of attorneys in Washington to look into the matter and to advise him whether those statutes would in any way operate to make illegal Mr. Mellon's acceptance and retention of the post of Secretary of the Treasury. On the 25th of January, 1921, that firm of lawyers submitted to Mr. Knox a long and well-considered opinion, in which they reached the conclusion that there was nothing in the ownership by Mr. Mellon of stocks in various corporations to disqualify him from becoming Secretary of the Treasury, although clearly he could not conduct an active business and that he probably had better not remain on any board of directors.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present that opinion of January 25, 1921, and I ask that it may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania not have the opinion read, Mr. President?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The opinion is very long. However, I think it is so material that it ought to be read, and I will ask that, without my yielding the floor, the opinion may now be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the opinion, which is printed at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania as Appendix A.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, when that opinion had been rendered to Senator Knox, he sent it to Judge Reed in Pittsburgh, and told him orally that he, Senator Knox, agreed with the conclusions in the opinion. Judge Reed, who at that time was my senior partner, brought the matter to me and asked me to look into it as well. I made some study of it and came to the conclusion that that opinion was exactly right. But when I came upon section 10 of the Federal reserve law of 1913, which provides—

No member of the Federal Reserve Board—

Of course, that would include the Secretary of the Treasury—shall be an officer or director of any bank, banking institution, trust company, or Federal reserve bank nor hold stock in any bank, banking institution, or trust company, and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath to the Secretary that he has complied with this requirement.

That was called to Mr. Mellon's attention and also to Senator Knox's attention, and Senator Knox again applied to Messrs. Faust & Wilson for a brief, or opinion, with that section in mind. They rendered an opinion on February 10, 1921, which I will now send to the desk to be read; but I will ask to have it incorporated, like the other one, at the end of what I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the opinion, which is printed at the end of Mr. REED's remarks as Appendix B.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Having taken the advice of former Senator Knox, of Judge Reed, of Mr. Faust, of Mr. Wilson, and of my poor self, finding all of us agreed that the effect of the law was, first, to make it impossible for him to continue as an officer of any corporation; next, to make it impossible for him to continue as a director in any business corporation; and, finally, to make it necessary for him to dispose of all stocks that he had in any national bank or State bank or trust company, Mr. Mellon after a considerable amount of urging agreed to surrender all those offices and to sell all those stocks and to accept the position of Secretary of the Treasury.

He was one of the largest holders of stock in the Union Trust Co., of Pittsburgh. He sold every share before he took the oath of office as Secretary of the Treasury. He was one of the largest stockholders of the Fidelity Title & Trust Co., of Pittsburgh. He sold every share before he took the oath of office. He was one of the large stockholders of the National Bank of Commerce in New York, and he sold every share before he took the oath of office. He was the president and a director of the Mellon National Bank, the largest national bank in Pittsburgh and one that was founded by his father more than half a century ago. He surrendered his presidency and his directorship and sold every share that he owned before he took the oath of office as Secretary of the Treasury. He was a director in many corporations in many lines of industry. He resigned from every directorate before he took the oath of office. He was an officer in several corporations, and he resigned from every office that he held before he took the oath of office as Secretary of the Treasury. He even came to us to ask whether, in our opinion, he could properly retain his membership on the board of trustees of the University of Pittsburgh and on the Carnegie Institute and on hospitals and charities of that kind in which he had been very active. Of course, we told him that he could properly stay on, because the law did not relate to charities in which no director had any possible pecuniary interest.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I ask if Secretary Mellon has resigned as a stockholder from the various corporations other than banks and trust companies?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am just coming to that. Of course, one does not resign as a stockholder. One sells his stock. Mr. Mellon did sell his stock in every variety of corporation—and he had stock in many of them—that is mentioned in the Federal reserve law and the Federal farm loan law and the foreign bank corporation act and all those other acts of Congress that relate to stock ownership, and—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did Secretary Mellon sell his stock in all the business corporations?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator had waited until the sentence was finished, his question would have been answered. Mr. Mellon was also a stockholder in a number of business enterprises, foremost among them being the Aluminum Co. of America, the Gulf Oil Corporation, and the Standard Steel Car Co. In each of those he was and is a minority stockholder; and on the advice of the five lawyers whom I have named Mr. Mellon did not sell his minority interest in the stock of those corporations. He still owns it; and in our opinion then, and in our opinion now, his right to do so is unquestionable.

Furthermore, he is not at present actively concerned in trade or commerce of any description whatever. As I said, he is not a director and not an officer of any corporation engaged in trade or commerce of any kind—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And he does not give his time or his attention to the active conduct of any incorporated business. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to ask the Senator if Mr. Mellon is still a stockholder in what is known as the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Co.?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am coming to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. And is he also interested in the company known as the Overholt Distilling Co.?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am just as much interested as is the Senator from Tennessee in getting the truth of these things, and I promise him I shall not omit either of those subjects in what I have to say.

I want to correct an error in the first opinion of Faust & Wilson, which was read at the desk, and that is the statement that when Mr. Stewart resigned as Secretary of the Treasury in President Grant's Cabinet, Senator Sherman was appointed in his stead. I think that Messrs. Faust & Wilson were in error on the name and that it was Mr. Boutwell who was appointed to succeed Mr. Stewart in Grant's Cabinet. It is not important, but I thought, for the purpose of accuracy, it was well to make the correction.

Mr. FESE. Senator John Sherman was appointed in President Hayes's Cabinet.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. In Senate Resolution No. 200, now before us, occurs the statement that "it appears that the said A. W. Mellon is interested in the Overholt Distilling Co." The resolution does not say where it appears. I want to state what the facts are.

For many years past—probably more than 100 years—there has been a partnership known as A. Overholt & Co., which was in the business of distilling whisky in western Pennsylvania. For a great many years—I do not know how many, but I think over 40 years—Mr. A. W. Mellon was one of the partners in that partnership. On the 15th day of December, 1918, three years and one month before the prohibition amendment went into effect, that partnership absolutely ceased from the manufacture of whisky and from doing any of its manufacturing business. The statute which is mentioned in Senate Resolution No. 200 is section 3168 of the Revised Statutes and forbids any internal revenue officer from being interested in the manufacture, production, rectification, or redistillation of distilled spirits. The fact is that if the Secretary of the Treasury is a revenue officer within the meaning of that section—and I am willing to grant that he is for the purpose of the argument—Mr. Andrew W. Mellon has not at any time since December 15, 1918, engaged in the manufacture or production or rectification or redistillation of distilled spirits.

Before Mr. Mellon took office, after this corporation had been passive for more than four years, four years after it ceased from its manufacturing operations and before he took the oath of office, he transferred his whole interest in that enterprise to the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh as trustee to close up the business absolutely. He himself has retained no control or discretion or authority whatsoever in that matter. He will, when the business is finally liquidated, be entitled to his proportion of the net proceeds and no more.

But I am told, and I think I might as well say it parenthetically here, that, so far as Mr. Mellon is aware, not one single quart of the whisky that the partnership owned when the prohibition amendment went into effect has been sold by the trustee or has been stolen from its warehouse. They have employed extra guards at their own expense to make sure that nothing could be taken from that warehouse, and nothing has been taken. They have not sold one penny's worth of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point to permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would like to have the Senator's statement a little more full as to the Secretary's present ownership of this property. He said that before the Secretary took office he created the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh a trustee. Of course, under those circumstances the Secretary of the Treasury owns the property. To what extent does he own the Overholt Co., and what is the extent of its business?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thought I had answered that.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much liquor do they own?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let me try it again. On January 31, 1921, Mr. Mellon's whole interest in that partnership was transferred to the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh as liquidating trustee to close out the business.

Mr. McKELLAR. That makes it an active trust, of course, in which Mr. Mellon is interested.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, it is an active trust. Of course, Mr. Mellon is interested to the extent of his share in the net proceeds after the business has been entirely wiped out; but the business itself is stopped. It has been stopped for over eight years. The property lies there in the warehouse, and when the trustee does finally dispose of it and parts with the whole of the physical property, then Mr. Mellon is entitled to his share in the net balance remaining after that liquidation. I hope that is very clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only thing that is not clear is the extent of Mr. Mellon's share in the trust estate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. Mellon's share is less than a majority. He is not a majority partner. Further than that, I do not think it is any of our business or anyone else's business what his proportion is.

As to the quantity of spirits still in the warehouse I am not sufficiently advised to answer accurately except that I can say positively that every quart that was left there when the prohibition amendment went into effect is there now in so far as it was owned by them. There may have been some withdrawals on certificates that were then outstanding, but the partnership has not sold either a certificate or a drop of the stuff itself nor has the trustee.

Let me take up the next thing in the recitals of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield again to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. While the subject of the distillery is before us, what is the value of the liquors owned by the partnership that is now in the hands of the active trustee for sale?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know what the value of liquor is to-day. I do not buy it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I join the Senator in that thought, but the Senator could give some information. I have no doubt, as to what its value was or what the number of gallons is. If the Senator could tell us the number of barrels or gallons, of course we would not find anybody in the Senate who would know about the value of liquor, but we might find somebody on the outside.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As I do not know the quantity and I do not know what it is worth per barrel or per quart or per drink, I am sorry that I can not enlighten the Senator at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. I did not quite understand the statement of the Senator, as I came into the Chamber late, as to the character of the title transferred by the partnership of which Mr. Mellon is a member to the Union Trust Co. Did they create in the trustee a full and unlimited authority to make disposition of the affairs of the partnership or was there any reserving of interest or right in the partners to direct the operation or control? In other words, was there a complete and indefeasible title passed to the trustee so that the partners have no right to control the operations of the trustee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not seen the agreement for three years, but my recollection of it is very distinct. I think I speak by the book when I say that the conveyance includes all of the property of the partnership; it gives the trustee unlimited discretion in liquidating, but gives the trustee no discretion to operate. I want to make that clear. The trustee's only function is to dispose of the real estate and the personal property of the partnership without control by the former members of the partnership. They have retained no control over what the trustee does.

Mr. KING. Then the instrument was irrevocable in the transmission of title?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely.

Mr. KING. So that the trustee has absolute control?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It has absolute control.

Mr. KING. And there could not be any reassertion of title by the former owners?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There could be absolutely none. All that Mr. Mellon is interested in is the money that may result from the liquidation.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania two questions. First, I suppose that the conveyance to which he has referred, in which a trust was set up, must have been joined in by all of the members of the partnership?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct. It was so joined in.

Mr. NORRIS. Between 1916, when the firm ceased the manufacture of distilled spirits, up to 1921, when the transfer was made, what was the nature of the business of the partnership?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was absolutely passive; they were not manufacturing anything. The partnership owned the property, but it had absolutely gone out of the manufacturing business.

Mr. NORRIS. And the firm did not do any business during that time?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They may have sold off some of the stock on hand before the era of prohibition.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the object in going out of business of the creation of this trusteeship? Why could not the partnership itself, or its proper officials, simply have sold whatever goods they had on hand and then have ended the business?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There were two reasons, Mr. President. The first was that one of the partners, who owned an equal interest with Mr. Mellon, had recently died, and his executors were anxious to have the business wound up. The surviving partners, however, were not in a position to act as active liquidating partners. In the next place, Mr. Mellon was going to become Secretary of the Treasury, and he wanted to be rid of any interest in the business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can the Senator from Pennsylvania give us any information as to what extent the trust has been executed and in what manner the trustee is selling the liquors of the cestui que trust in the United States at this time?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to give an answer, though I thought the Senator had caught what I said before on that point.

Not one single quart of liquor has been sold or stolen from that warehouse. I will go further than that and say that there was an offer made for the purchase of the whole contents of that warehouse, to be delivered in England; and while the Secretary of the Treasury had no right to forbid that—for under the trust agreement he had parted with any control—he appealed to the trustee not to sell the liquor for fear it would be reimported and smuggled into the United States, and he did not want to be responsible, even unintentionally, for such a result. The liquor will have to be sold for medicine or be used in some way so that it can not be peddled by bootleggers.

Now I wish to come to the next clause in the recitals of the resolution. It is further recited in the resolution:

Whereas it appears that in April, 1921, after A. W. Mellon had become Secretary of the Treasury in March, 1921, the Treasury refunded to the Gulf Refining Co. sums in amounts shown by excerpts from said letter.

Which letter is referred to in the resolution.

The facts are, Mr. President, that in the years 1918, 1919, and 1921 the Gulf Refining Co. was forced by the Internal Revenue Bureau illegally to pay vast sums in taxes. Millions of dollars were exacted from it without warrant of law. It paid those sums into the United States Treasury. A claim for a refund was made and was under consideration for a long time while Secretary Houston was Secretary of the Treasury under President Wilson. Finally, after much argument and thorough consideration, the Democratic Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Williams, acting under a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Houston, on the 28th day of February, 1921, made a decision fixing the assessment of that corporation for those years, and thus fixing the amount of the refund. In the Treasury Department, according to the usual routine, an order was issued for the writing out of the check. That check was actually written on the instructions of the outgoing Democratic administration, although the warrant was mailed to the Gulf Co. after the change of the administration—that is, after Mr. Mellon had come into office—but so far was Mr. Mellon from prompting the sending of that check that he did not even know it had been sent until long after it was received and deposited by the company. What was sent and what was paid was the exact amount that was decided to be due on February 28, 1921, when Mr. Williams was Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Mr. Houston was Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, I want to come to the next allegation in the resolution, and this is the last one. The resolution states:

Where it is further shown in said letter that an abatement and settlement has since been made with the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co., a company in which said A. W. Mellon is interested, in the sum of $2,631,381.

It is true, Mr. President, that an abatement and settlement were made with that company, and I believe it was in the amount stated by the resolution; but the further truth is that Mr. Mellon does not own one single share of stock in that company, and he never has owned one single share of stock in that company. He is not an officer or a director of the company and he never has been an officer or director of the company. He does not own one bond or one promissory note or a security of any kind in that company and never has owned any bond or promissory note or security in that company. So the statement in the resolution that this is a company in which Mr. Mellon is interested is now and always has been absolutely without foundation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that company is a holding company for a number of shipping companies. Is Mr. Mellon not interested in any shipping companies?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. Mellon is not interested in the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co. or in any company which it controls or in any company which controls it. He has not any interest in it in the remotest degree, and he told me this morning that, so far as he is aware, he did not know a single person who was on the board or in office in that company and he never has known one. He has no more interest in that company or its subsidiaries than he has in the planet of Mars and he never has had.

Mr. President, I have taken the time of the Senate in the exposition of these facts, most of which I know of my own personal knowledge, and the balance of which are readily provable by documents, because I think it would be the height of injustice to have this resolution debated as if there was any possibility of truth in the recitals with which the resolution begins.

APPENDIX A.

[Faust & Wilson, attorneys and counselors at law, Woodward Building.]
WASHINGTON, D. C., January 25, 1921.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,
United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We have made a careful search of the law bearing on the question of eligibility of Mr. A. W. Mellon to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury, and beg to advise as follows:

The only statutory enactment bearing directly on the subject which we have found is section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides:

"No person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, or first comptroller, or first auditor, or Treasurer, or register shall, directly or indirectly, be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be the owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State or of the United States, or take or apply to his own use or emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury Department other than what shall be allowed by law; and any person who offends against any of the prohibitions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and forfeit to the United States the penalty of $3,000, and shall, upon conviction, be removed from office and forever thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States; and if any other person than the public prosecutor shall give information of any such offense, upon which a prosecution and conviction shall be had, one-half of the aforesaid penalty of $3,000 when received shall be for the use of the person giving such information."

The original act from which the above section is taken was approved September 2, 1789 (1 U. S. Stats. 67), and while the records of the proceedings in Congress at the date of its enactment are not sufficiently complete to throw any light on the subject, it is a fair assumption that the restriction imposed was intended primarily to apply to the foreign trade and commerce of that early day coming under the supervision and control of the Secretary through the administration of the customs and navigation laws.

The language of the statute, however, is sweepingly comprehensive, and upon its face may be fairly said to now include all trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, of interstate character, including transportation of persons and property by common carriers.

So far as we can ascertain, no case involving the interpretation of this section has ever arisen in any Federal court. In Ex parte Curtis (106 U. S. 371), the Supreme Court of the United States in construing an act forbidding the soliciting and collecting of political campaign contributions between Federal employees declared, in the course of its opinion, that the act there under consideration was similar to section 243 of the Revised Statutes and was constitutional.

This is the only reference we have found to section 243 in the reported decisions of any Federal court.

An examination of the opinions of the Attorney General show but three instances in which the construction of section 243 was involved.

In 4 Op. 555, in considering the restriction of the act as applied to the accounting officers of the Treasury, Attorney General Clifford said:

"One of the principal objects of the restriction was to withdraw from the accounting officers of the Treasury every motive of private interest in the performance of their public duties, and to guard the Nation from the consequences frequently to be apprehended when the business affairs of public officers are suffered to lie commingled with the financial concerns of the country."

In a later opinion by Solicitor General Hoyt, and approved by you as Attorney General (25 Op. 99), holding that no legal objection existed under section 243 to the Treasurer of the United States receiving from the Philippine government the principal and interest of certain Philippine bonds and distributing the interest to the holders of such securities, it was said:

"The obvious purpose of that law, as shown throughout the section, is to prohibit personal interest in such bond issues and certain other affairs and business, and private emolument or gain in the transaction of any business in the Treasury Department."

The third instance in which the Attorney General (Williams) was required to consider section 243 is found in 14 Op. 352, wherein it is said:

"The provisions prohibiting the purchase by certain officers of 'public lands or other public property,' according to its terms, would seem to apply only to the purchase of such property as belongs to, or is in the ownership of, the United States; and, being highly penal, it should be taken strictly and not extended by construction. The purchase of lands sold by the tax commissioners for taxes under the direct tax law is not within the prohibition of the section."

The case of A. T. Stewart is apparently the first and only instance in which the inhibition of the section has been directly invoked to debar an individual nominated to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Stewart while engaged in a mercantile business in New York which included the importation of merchandise was nominated by President Grant to be Secretary of the Treasury and was promptly confirmed by the Senate.

Several days later President Grant in a special message to the Senate called attention to the prohibition of the act of 1789 (now section 243, Revised Statutes) and asked, in view of its provisions and the fact that Mr. Stewart had been unanimously confirmed by the Senate, that he be exempted by joint resolution of the two Houses from the operation of the act.

Mr. Stewart in an effort to meet the inhibition of the statute offered to convey his entire business to trustees or to retire from it altogether, but this was not considered as meeting the prohibition imposed.

Thereafter President Grant in a special message requested permission of the Senate to withdraw his message asking the passage of the joint resolution. Mr. Stewart in the meantime retired, and Senator John Sherman became Secretary of the Treasury. (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 7, p. 89; National Encyclopedia of American Biography, vol. 7, p. 362.)

The inhibition of the statute as applied to the office of the Secretary is that no person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury shall directly or indirectly be concerned or interested in carrying on (1) the business of trade or commerce, or (2) be the owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or (3) purchase by himself or another in trust for him any public lands or other public property, or (4) be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State or of the United States, or (5) take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury Department other than what shall be allowed by law.

We think there can be little doubt that a director of a corporation actively participating in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, foreign or interstate, or a corporation engaged in the purchase or disposal of public securities, State or National, is within the inhibition of the statute and is debarred from holding the office of Secretary of the Treasury.

The question of whether a mere stockholder in such corporations is similarly debarred, solely by reason of a minority ownership of stock, is more difficult of solution and turns upon the inquiry as to whether ownership of stock alone makes the owner directly or indirectly concerned or interested in carrying on the business of the corporation within the meaning of the statute.

Inasmuch as practically all commercial and industrial corporations of the present day are engaged in trade or commerce, and practically all banking corporations in the purchase and sale of securities, State and National, it results, if the words of the statute are to be given a strict and literal interpretation, that all stockholders of practically every business and banking corporation in the United States are ineligible to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury, unless and until they dispose of all holdings of shares of stock therein.

It is indeed unreasonable to suppose that Congress, by the enactment of this section, intended to restrict the President in his selection of the Secretary of the Treasury—and the restriction applies to the head of no other executive department—to such a limited circle of men owning no stocks in commercial, industrial, or financial corporations; or to make it a condition precedent to appointment that the man selected should forthwith completely divest himself of all such holdings at whatever sacrifice. Such a construction is repugnant to common sense and would tend to eliminate the men best qualified by training and experience to administer the intricate business of the Treasury.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Humphries v. McKissock (140 U. S. 312) in reviewing the relation of stockholders to the rights and property of a banking corporation, quotes with approval a decision by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Smith v. Hurd (12 Met. 371, 385), and declares the same doctrine applies to the relations of stockholders in all business corporations, as follows:

"The individual members of a corporation, whether they should all join, or each act severally, have no right or power to intermeddle with the property or concerns of the bank, or call any officer, agent, or servant to account, or discharge them from any liability. Should all the stockholders join in a power of attorney to anyone, he could not take possession of any real or personal estate, any security, or chose in action; could not collect a debt, or discharge a claim, or release damages arising from any default; simply because they are not the legal owners of the property, and damage done to such property is not an injury to them. Their rights and their powers are limited and well defined."

Thompson in his work on corporations (2d ed., vol. 4, sec. 446d), in dealing with the same question, says:

"Where there is no confidential relation involved the rule of law is well settled that a stockholder has the right to deal with the corporation in the same manner as a stranger has, and in doing so he acquires the same rights and incurs the same liabilities as a stranger would where the transaction is proper, fair, and in good faith. He is not a trustee of the corporation and rests under no obligation to serve the corporation. Among other things he may lend money to the corporation and take a mortgage or pledge to secure the same; he may guarantee the corporate obligations and take proper indemnity therefor; he may sell or lease to the corporation or purchase or take a lease from the corporation, and reserve a vendor's lien in case of sales; he may buy the bonds of his corporation; he may purchase the corporate property at public, tax, judicial, or sheriff's sales; he may become a surety on a bond given to dissolve an attachment of the corporate property. The stockholder may represent a third person in a business transaction with his corporation. There is no duty resting on a stockholder to acquaint the directors of the corporation with the fact that he is interested in another corporation with which the directors of the former are about to make a contract, and such a contract, if otherwise valid, is valid notwithstanding the failure of the stockholder to disclose the fact of his interest. A stockholder who has settled a corporate liability is entitled to recover the amount so paid."

The Supreme Court of New York in an action brought to set aside a contract made by a trustee to convey to a corporation with which he was connected, on the ground of fraud, said:

"A stockholder has no title or interest in the tangible property of the corporation. The holding or ownership of shares gives the owner a right to his proportion of the profit while a corporation is a going concern and entitles him to his distributive part in case of a distribution of the assets upon dissolution.

"The legal title of the property is in the corporation, not in the stockholder, and a stockholder is not an agent of the corporation.

"A stockholder has a right to deal with a corporation in the same manner as a stranger has, provided the transaction is free from fraud, and in so doing he acquires the same rights, he incurs the same liabilities as a stranger, where the transaction is proper, fair, and in good faith. He is not a trustee of the corporation and rests under no obligation to serve the corporation. He may lease or sell property to the corporation or purchase or take a lease from the corporation.

"When, therefore, Mr. Pierce, as trustee, was contracting to sell property which he held as such to the corporation, in which, even assuming his ownership of a minority interest, he was not dealing with himself directly or indirectly." (Van Heusen v. Van Heusen Charles Co. et al., 131 N. Y. Sup., pp. 401, 406.)

If this be the rule as to relations of individual stockholders to the business and property of corporations in civil proceedings, the same rule applies with far greater force to the relation of an individual stockholder to corporations under the strict construction required of penal statutes.

The rule is well expressed as to the relations of public officials in the discharge of their duty to the State in re Duell, 111 N. Y. Sup., p. 909. In that case the charter of Greater New York (Laws 1901, p. 605, ch. 466, sec. 1416) forbids a justice of the court of special sessions to "carry on any business," but requires him to devote his whole time and capacity, so far as public interests demand, to the duties of his office. The court held that to "carry on a business" implies such a relation to the business as identifies a person with it and imposes upon him some duty or responsibility in connection with its management, and the prohibition is not violated by one acting as vice president of a corporation where the incumbent of that office has no specific duties in relation to it, and is not actively engaged in the conduct of the business of the corporation and is not responsible either to the corporation or its stockholders for the conduct or management of the business and does not actively interfere in any way in relation to it.

The foregoing construction appears to be the reasonable and sensible interpretation of the restriction imposed by section 243, and, in our opinion, would be conclusive of the question here under consideration but for the language of section 243, which declares that no person shall directly or indirectly be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade and commerce.

Circuit Judge Taft, in United States v. Scott (74 Fed. 216), in construing the phrase "being concerned in" in a penal statute, said:

"The statute makes it a misdemeanor for any officer of the United States 'to be concerned in' soliciting or receiving a political contribution. The offense described was a new one. 'Being concerned in' is not a legal term or conclusion which needs a specification of facts for completeness of description. It is a colloquial expression, equivalent to 'being engaged in' or 'taking part in,' and sufficiently informs the defendant of what the Government intends to prove."

Our difficulty in this case arises from the fact that while a stockholder may not be directly interested or actively concerned in the carrying on of the business of the corporation or participate in any manner whatsoever in its management, direction, or control, yet, nevertheless, his ownership of stock gives him a right to his proportion of the dividends and profits from the carrying on of the business when and as declared, and also to a pro rata share of the assets of the corporation upon dissolution, hence, to that extent, at least, may be said to be indirectly concerned and interested in the carrying on of the business of the corporation.

Fortunately this question has been considered and squarely decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (218 U. S. 366).

In that case the United States sought by mandamus and injunction to compel certain railway carriers to refrain from interstate transportation of coal under what is commonly known as the "commodities clause," of the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906 (34 R. S. 584), whereby it is declared unlawful for railway carriers to transport in interstate commerce articles or commodities "manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect."

The Government contended under this clause that the railroads were prohibited from transporting coal in interstate commerce mined or produced by a corporation in which the transporting railroad company was a stockholder, irrespective of the extent of such stock ownership, and that it was the duty of such railroads, in order to bring themselves within the law, to completely dispose of all their interest in coal-producing properties in whatever form enjoyed.

The court rejected this contention and held that the ownership by a railway carrier of stock in a bona fide corporation manufacturing, mining, producing, or owning the commodity carried was not the "interest, direct or indirect," in such commodity, forbidden to the carrier by the Hepburn Act, but such words should be taken as embracing only a legal or equitable interest in the commodities in which they refer.

In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice White, now Chief Justice, said:

"It remains to determine the nature and character of the interest embraced in the words 'in which it is interested, directly or indirectly.' The contention of a government that the clause forbids a railroad company to transport any commodity manufactured, mined, or produced, or owned in whole or in part, etc., by a bona fide corporation in which the transporting carrier holds a stock interest, however small, is based upon the assumption that such prohibition is embraced in the words we are considering. The opposing contention, however, is that interest, direct or indirect, includes only commodities in which a carrier has a legal interest, and therefore does not include the right to carry commodities which have been manufactured, mined, produced, or owned by a separate and distinct corporation, simply because the transporting carrier may be interested in the producing, etc., corporation as an owner of stock therein. If the words in question are to be taken as embracing only a legal or equitable interest in the commodities to which they refer, they can not be held to include commodities manufactured, mined, produced, or owned, etc., by a distinct corporation merely because of a stock ownership of the carrier. (Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Missouri, P. R. Co., 115 U. S. 588, 29 L. ed. 499, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194; Conley v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 406, 47 L. ed. 1113, 23 Sup. Ct., Rep. 728.) And that this is well settled also in the law of Pennsylvania is not questioned.

"It is unnecessary to pursue the subject in more detail, since it is conceded in the argument for the Government that if the clause embraces only a legal interest in an article or commodity it can not be held to include a prohibition against carrying a commodity simply because it had been manufactured, mined, produced, or is owned by a corporation in which the carrier is a stockholder."

It is not without significance, as is pointed out in the opinion of Justice White, that "in the legislative progress of the clause in the Senate, where the clause originated, an amendment in specific terms, causing the clause to embrace stock ownership, was rejected, and immediately upon such rejection an amendment, expressly declaring that interest, direct or indirect, was intended, among other things, to embrace the prohibition of carrying a commodity manufactured, mined, produced, or owned by a corporation in which a railroad company was interested as a stockholder was also rejected." (40 Cong. Rec., pt. 7, pp. 7012-7014.)

In the case of United States v. Reading Co. (253 U. S. 26), decided at the last term, the Supreme Court had occasion to reaffirm its former ruling in the Delaware & Hudson case, but distinguished the two cases on the ground that the question presented in the Reading case was not the technical one of whether mere ownership of stock by a railroad in a coal company renders it unlawful for the former to carry the product of the latter, which was the question decided in the Delaware & Hudson case, but that the real question presented for decision was whether, combining in a single corporation the ownership of all the stock of a carrier and all the stock of a coal company, results in such community of interest or title in the product of the latter as to bring the case within the scope of the commodities clause of the act. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Clark said:

"It results that it may confidently be stated that the law upon the subject now is, that while the ownership by a railroad company, of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful under the commodities clause for the railroad company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent or instrumentality or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require."

Applying the rule as thus announced in the Delaware & Hudson case and reaffirmed in the Reading case, to the language of section 243, which is highly penal and must, therefore, be rigidly construed, it necessarily follows, in our opinion, that mere ownership of stock in corporations carrying on the business of trade and commerce and in the purchase and sale of securities is not an interest or concern, direct or indirect, within the inhibition of that section, and hence that Mr. Mellon would not be required, to become eligible to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury, to divest himself of ownership of stocks in such corporations.

While it is not strictly within the scope of your inquiry, we deem it advisable to direct your attention also to section 41 of the Criminal Code, which provides that—

"No officer or agent of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, and no member or agent of any firm or person directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm. Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than two years." (36 Stat. 1,1097.)

This section was drawn from section 1783 Revised Statutes (act of March 2, 1863), and was there restricted to "banking or other commercial corporations." These words have been omitted from the provision of section 41 of the Criminal Code and the language broadened so as to include any joint-stock company or association.

This law was construed by you while Attorney General in an opinion rendered the Postmaster General upon the question as to whether he was prohibited by law from awarding a contract for furnishing coal to his department to a firm, which was the lowest bidder, one of whose members was an officer of the Post Office Department (24 OP. 567). In your opinion, construing section 1783, you said:

"You do not state in your letter the exact nature of Mr. Machen's duties, except that he is general superintendent of the free-delivery system. I assume, for the purposes of this opinion, that he has no official relation with the purchase of coal for the use of the department, and if this be the fact section 1783 is inapplicable, for Mr. Machen as such superintendent does not 'act as an officer or agent of the United States' with reference to such purchase of coal."

This section, it will be observed, does not relate to the eligibility of the individual to hold the office of Secretary, but imposes a limitation upon the Secretary in the transaction of business as an officer or agent of the United States in the manner and to the extent therein specified.

We do not regard this question as important at this time, however, for in the event of Mr. Mellon becoming Secretary of the Treasury any business of the department with corporations in which he owns stock could readily and properly be transacted by an Assistant Secretary or some other officer of the department.

Yours very truly,

FAUST & WILSON,
By C. F. WILSON.

APPENDIX B.

[Frederick De C. Faust, Charles F. Wilson, and Robert E. McNamara:
Faust & Wilson, attorneys and counselors at law, Woodward Building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 19, 1924.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your suggestion, we have examined the Federal reserve act and the amendments thereto with reference to its effect, if any, on the question of Mr. A. W. Mellon's eligibility to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury.

The original act of December 23, 1913 (38 U. S. Stats. 251), creates a Federal Reserve Board to consist of seven members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall be members ex officio, and five members appointed by the President, at least two of whom shall be persons experienced in banking or finance.

Section 10 of the act provides further that:

"No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any bank, banking institution, trust company, or Federal reserve bank, nor hold stock in any bank, banking institution, or trust company, and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath to the Secretary that he has complied with this requirement."

The language of this provision is clear and explicit beyond dispute. It does not debar the appointment of officers, directors, or persons holding stocks in any bank, banking institution, or trust company as members of the board, for it expressly declares that of the five members appointed at least two shall be persons experienced in banking or finance, but merely requires such persons when appointed to surrender such offices and divest themselves of stock held in any bank, banking institution, or trust company, and certify to that fact under oath "before entering upon (their) his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board."

This construction of the act is fully confirmed by the report of the House Committee on Banking and Currency—then numbered section 11—which accompanied the original bill, as reported to the House by Chairman GLASS, wherein it was said:

"Finally, it has been thought wise to insert a provision that at least one of the four persons chosen by the President shall be an experienced banker. This, of course, does not mean that other members of the board would be inexperienced in or ignorant of banking. On the contrary, the assumption is that they would not be chosen unless at least tolerably informed in the banking field, and that in all probability they would be not only experienced in banking but men of broad business knowledge and culture. This, however, is a matter that must necessarily be left to the appointive power, which not only should but must, in order to give good results, be vested with discretionary authority sufficient to enable it to make careful choice from among all of the best material available for such a board. It might easily be that a man of high business caliber thoroughly desirable as a member of the board would not have had a technical banking experience, notwithstanding that he might be well equipped for the work. The Comptrollers of the Currency in times past have not always been bankers in the technical sense, and some of the most efficient among them have had least technical experience in banking at the time when they assumed office. It is therefore believed safe to vest this whole matter in the hands of the President with large authority, believing that he will be able to use the same care and discrimination that he employs in choosing the Supreme Court of the United States. For obvious reasons it is considered wise that every member of the Federal Reserve Board designated by the President shall surrender any banking connections he may have had at the time of his nomination."

This course was actually followed by Mr. Paul Warburg, who, as you will doubtless recall, was appointed by President Wilson in 1914 as one of the original members of the Reserve Board. Mr. Warburg at the time of his nomination was a member of the banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. His confirmation was opposed by certain Senators, chiefly on the ground of his banking connections, and he was asked to appear and submit to examination before the Senate committee. He declined to do so, and was subsequently confirmed, notwithstanding his request that his nomination be withdrawn. He thereafter qualified as a member of the board, having severed his connection with the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Mr. William P. G. Harding, the present governor of the board, was at the time of his selection the president of the First National Bank of Birmingham, Ala., but surrendered his connection with that bank before assuming the duties of his office.

This view of the act is further confirmed by the subsequent amendments and additional enactments upon the same subject.

For example, in the act approved December 24, 1919 (Pub. 106, 60th Cong., 2d sess.), which added a new section to the original act to cover banking corporations authorized to do foreign banking business, it is provided that:

"No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section nor of any corporation engaged in similar business organized under the laws of any State nor hold stock in any such corporations, and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has complied with this requirement."

Likewise, the Federal farm loan act of July 17, 1916 (39 Stat. 1360), created the Federal Farm Loan Board, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is a member and chairman ex officio, and provides that:

"No member of the Federal Farm Loan Board shall during his continuance in office be an officer or director of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking, or in the business of making land mortgages, loans, or selling land mortgages."

A similar provision, but more sweeping in its language, is contained in the act of April 5, 1918 (40 Stat. 1506), known as the war finance act, which provides that the management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be chairman of the board, and four other persons, and further that:

"No director, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the corporation shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested."

In this connection we invite your attention to the further fact that by the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act of March 3, 1919 (40 Stat. 1315), the Secretary of the Treasury is ineligible to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank for two years after he ceases to be Secretary.

From the foregoing we are clearly of the opinion that Mr. Mellon's present banking connections do not in and of themselves constitute an insuperable obstacle or render him ineligible for appointment as Secretary of the Treasury. In order to accept the appointment, however, it is equally clear that it will be necessary for him before entering upon his duties to surrender all his banking connections and divest himself of all stocks which he may hold in any bank, banking institution, or trust company.

Very sincerely yours,

FAUST & WILSON,
By C. F. WILSON.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that part of section 243 of the Revised Statutes which has been referred to and which is pertinent to this resolution reads:

No person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury shall, directly or indirectly, be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce.

I first take up the question of the ownership by Secretary Mellon of stock in the Gulf Refining Co. In a letter to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CANAWAY] dated March 4, 1924, and found on page 3684 of the Record, Mr. Mellon admits that he owns stock in the Gulf Refining Co. Now, the question arises if the owner of stock in a great business corporation is not "directly or indirectly concerned or interested" in the business conducted by that corporation.

Mr. President, I submit that upon the undisputed facts in this case, Mr. Mellon being a stockholder in the corporation, there can not be any doubt about his being "directly or indirectly concerned or interested" in that business within the inhibition of this statute.

The learned opinion of Faust & Wilson, which was read at the desk, does not seriously controvert that statement; at all events, it does not produce a single authority in support of the contention that a stockholder in a business is not interested or is not concerned in that business. No one could be really and actually more interested in a business than a stockholder in it. Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Did the Senator note the decision of the Supreme Court in the Delaware & Hudson case in Two hundred and thirteenth United States? That is exactly what they did hold in that case.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was on an entirely different question and an entirely different statute. It has not the remotest connection with this case except to muddy it. It can not be regarded as an authority. It does not support the contention that Mr. Mellon is eligible to this office. Here there is laid down by the lawmakers the proposition that no Secretary of the Treasury shall be an owner or shall be concerned in the ownership of any business.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; it does not say quite that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If a stockholder in a corporation is not directly or indirectly concerned or interested in carrying on that business, then I am utterly unable to know what language means.

The second opinion of Messrs. Faust & Wilson virtually admits that, when under a different statute they required Mr. Mellon not only to resign his official positions with these companies but they required him to sell his stock.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if all the Senator from Tennessee states is correct, is it not a matter absolutely for the courts to decide rather than for an investigating committee? Has it not assumed now the attitude of being a question of the interpretation of law?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree to that proposition at all. The Senate has a perfect right to take action in reference to the matter.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at it just a little further and see whether it is the transaction of business. Here is the Gulf Refining Co., which, of course, has to do with the Treasury Department. Under our present system of income taxes it has to do business with the Treasury Department, and it has done business with the Treasury Department; in fact, $3,300,000 have been paid to it by the present Secretary of the Treasury under the conditions that he mentioned.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one minute. It is no doubt true, just as the Secretary said, that the arrangements were made for its payment under a previous administration; but the transaction was closed under this administration—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just one moment—and, in my judgment, in direct contravention of the statute, because the purpose of those who passed this statute was to divorce from the Secretary's official position any personal interest.

Let us take any man who is a stockholder in a corporation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I promised to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania first. Then I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator to yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; then afterwards I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to say that this transaction was closed under the Republican administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It was closed under the other administration. The decision was rendered and the warrant was ordered. The warrant was sent out—if that is the closing, the mere mechanical process—under the Republican administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the closing of a money transaction is the passing of the money. The money passed under Secretary Mellon's administration. No actual payment was made or warrant issued under a Democratic administration.

Mr. LODGE. The decision was rendered before.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I will say to the Senator—it is undisputed; there can not be any question about it, and I am not questioning it—

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there is the slightest question about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am taking Secretary Mellon's statement that the transactions and negotiations were carried on in a previous administration and substantially agreed to, and that it was closed in his administration by a transfer of the money from the Government to the Gulf Refining Co.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was not substantially closed in a previous administration, Mr. President; it was absolutely closed in the Democratic administration, and the directions were given for the sending of the check. The actual, mechanical delivery of the check took place after the change in the administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what I have said—that the money was passed after Mr. Mellon became Secretary of the Treasury, more than a month after he became Secretary according to Mr. Mellon, and that is the thing that is forbidden in this act. There can not be any doubt about it. Mr. Mellon says so here in perfectly plain language. He says:

The refunds to the Gulf Co. and its subsidiaries were charged against three appropriations, depending upon the year in which the taxes refunded were originally collected. The payments were $766,112.29 out of the appropriation for "Refund of taxes illegally collected, 1918, and prior years"; $1,350,884.63 from a similar appropriation for 1919; and $1,211,143.07 for 1921.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if the Senator will have patience with me and yield once more—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I want to correct another statement that I think the Senator made inadvertently. There has not been one cent in refunds to the Gulf Refining Co., so far as I can learn, since the refund made on February 28, 1921. Not one cent has been ordered refunded to that company by the administration of Mr. Mellon in the Treasury Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now read from a letter from Mr. Mellon:

The quotation from the Washington Post inserted in a recent issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD appears to be a copy of portions of reports to Congress of refunds which have been on file for some months, and consequently available to anyone's inspection.

The amount of the refunds and all details in connection with the settlement of the Gulf Co. cases were determined by the Bureau of Internal Revenue before my appointment as Secretary of the Treasury, although the actual payment of the amount refunded took place in April, 1921, shortly after I had become Secretary. I had no personal knowledge of these refunds at that time.

The reference to the Atlantic, Gulf, and West Indies compromise I need not read in view of the Senator's statement.

I read further—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read this, and then I will yield. I want to read Mr. Mellon's explanation now, so that there can not be any unfair or unjust statement made. Here is his explanation of it:

As I have already stated, I have never interfered in any way with the Bureau of Internal Revenue in any tax matter. Last of all would I do so in cases in which it might be charged that I was personally concerned. I feel, however, that it is due to me, and to the companies involved, that your committee make an immediate investigation in order that you may thoroughly satisfy yourself and the public whether or not these companies have received any favors from the Government.

Mr. President, I am not charging that these companies received favors from Secretary Mellon as Secretary of the Treasury. I am charging that Mr. Mellon was directly or indirectly concerned or interested in these companies, which were doing business in this country, and which were doing a tax refund business with the Treasury of the United States.

Now I quote a very distinguished authority on that subject. Here is a corporation, the Gulf Refining Co., in which Mr. Mellon is a stockholder, and I believe it is undisputed that his brother is president of it. It is a large institution. It had claims for millions of dollars against the Treasury. I am not passing upon the claims. I do not know anything about the claims. I do not know anything about the justice of them; but that company is doing business, and Mr. Mellon is interested in it; that is what appears from the undisputed facts. Now I quote from the President of the United States written in another matter.

In a recent letter that President Coolidge wrote Mr. Daugherty, he says this:

You have a personal interest in this investigation which is being made of the conduct of yourself and your office, which may be in conflict with your official interest as the Attorney General. I am not questioning your fairness or integrity. I am merely reciting the fact that you are placed in two positions, one your personal interest, the other your office of Attorney General, which may be in conflict. . . . These two positions are incompatible and can not be reconciled.

Here is a business corporation in which the Secretary of the Treasury is a large stockholder. Personally, he is interested in the affairs of that company. To my mind it is ridiculous to talk about a stockholder not being interested in the affairs of a company in which he owns stock. He is interested in it. He is also interested on the side as a public official. That is the thing that the statute prohibits. Whether those claims are fair, whether they are honest, whether they are transacted in part by him and in part by some other administration is immaterial. The material thing is that there is a conflict of interest, as President Coolidge said. One is the personal interest; the other is the interest of the Government. So there is a prohibition in this statute against an officer of the Government acting in a dual capacity, as I quoted here not long ago.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I should have yielded to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], but I will yield to him immediately afterwards. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the construction which the Senator suggests is right, and if the five lawyers who advised Mr. Mellon on the faith of the decision of the Supreme Court were wrong, then does it not necessarily result that the only place where the President can look to find a Secretary of the Treasury is either the poorhouse or heaven?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because every person in the United States who is not either insolvent or dead has to pay taxes, and consequently has these unfortunate relationships with the Treasury that the Senator has been talking about.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary, I will say in reply to the Senator. The Senator has just pointed out and has had read from the desk a statute which prohibits members of the Federal Reserve Board from holding stock in any bank or being an officer or director in any bank. Here is a position that naturally calls for a man who is acquainted with the banking business, and yet the law, believing that a man ought to have but one interest to serve when he becomes a member of the Federal Reserve Board, requires that that man part with every dollar of his stock and resign every office in the bank before he can be a member of the Federal Reserve Board, whether as Secretary of the Treasury or otherwise. And I will say to the Senator there is no trouble about getting members of the Federal Reserve Board to serve, even if they do have to sell their stock in banks. In a similar way the fathers of this Republic provided exactly the same or exactly similar inhibitions for the Secretary of the Treasury. They wanted the Secretary of the Treasury divorced from any personal interest, and therefore, knowing that there would be an interest and a conflict in his rights and duty as between himself and the Government, the law specifically provides that he shall not be engaged in any business, directly or indirectly. As the lawyers who rendered this opinion well stated at the outset, it is a sweeping statute, and it includes everybody who comes within its ban, and then the opinion undertakes to except the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, has the Senator noticed the decision quoted from the Supreme Court of New York in the Faust & Wilson opinion?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not had time to go into it carefully.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In that case it was noted that the law of New York forbids a justice of the supreme court of that State from carrying on any business, just like this section the Senator talks about; and the court of last resort of New York held that to own stock in a corporation was not within the meaning of that statute and was not carrying on business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I say to the Senator, I have not examined that case or the statute on which it is based. I never heard of it until just a moment ago when it was read by the clerk, and I did not get it very well. I will do so; but I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States never has construed this statute under consideration. It remains just where it began. It never has been interfered with, though efforts have been made to modify it; but it never has been done.

In 1869, before many of us were born, the matter came up in the Senate of the United States in this way:

President Grant, at the height of his popularity, became President of the United States on the 4th of March, 1869. He immediately appointed his Cabinet, as is usual and customary. The Secretary of the Treasury appointed by him was the merchant prince of New York, Alexander T. Stewart. His name was sent in, and the Senate confirmed him. That was on the 4th of March. On the 6th of March this message was sent by President Grant about that matter:

Mr. Horace Porter appeared before the bar and delivered a message in writing from the President of the United States:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that in accordance with the usage of the Senate it is now his duty to lay before the Senate the resolutions offered yesterday and then laid over.

Then the message was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

Since the nomination and confirmation of Alexander T. Stewart to the office of Secretary of the Treasury I find that by the eighth section of the act of Congress approved September 2, 1789, it is provided as follows, to wit:

Then he quotes the statute which has been quoted. Then President Grant said:

In view of these provisions and the fact that Mr. Stewart has been unanimously confirmed by the Senate, I would ask that he be exempted by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress from the operation of the same.

I stop here long enough to say that it is contended that there is a distinction between Mr. Stewart's case and Mr. Mellon's case. If there is a distinction, it is all in favor of Mr. Stewart. There was no income tax law then. The tariff law provided specifically for duties, and there was not near as much chance that there would be any trouble arising in regard to that situation in which Mr. Stewart would have his personal interest conflict with his official interest.

Not only that; Mr. Stewart at that time offered to sell every dollar of his property so that he could become eligible. But this is what occurred:

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill, which of course will have to go over if there is any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message of the President is before the Senate, and it must be disposed of before there can be any other action.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the message be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce the bill (S. No. 34) relating to the Secretary of the Treasury, which was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at the present time?

Mr. SUMNER. I object. I think that it ought to be most profoundly considered before it is acted upon by the Senate.

And again, two or three days later:

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred a bill (S. No. 33) to repeal a part of the eighth section of the act to establish a Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1789, and a bill (S. No. 34) relating to the Secretary of the Treasury, have instructed me to report them back and recommend their indefinite postponement.

On that day A. T. Stewart resigned, and George S. Boutwell was appointed Secretary of the Treasury. In other words, President Grant obeyed the law of the land. Mr. A. T. Stewart, first offering to sell every dollar's worth of property that he had, so that he could conform to the statute, obeyed the law of the land, this very statute, and resigned his office.

It is said there is a distinction between the case of Mr. Stewart and that of the present Secretary. If there is a difference, it is all in Mr. Stewart's favor, and not in Secretary Mellon's favor.

Secretary Mellon, according to statements made, is interested in many business corporations. These corporations constantly come before the Treasury of the United States in the matter of abatements of taxes, in the matter of refunds of taxes, in the matter of settlements and adjustments and compromises of taxes, some of them in enormous sums, as the records show.

It is said that it does not apply to Mr. Mellon, because he is just a stockholder in the companies, that if he had retained his directorship in any of these companies, then he would be subject to the inhibition of the act, but the simple fact that he is a stockholder in a business corporation does not bring him in conflict with the statute, however much interest he may have; that it is immaterial what his interest may be, the inhibition of the statute does not apply to him.

Mr. President, what difference does it make whether these settlements are fair or unfair, whether they are made by Mr. Mellon directly, or whether some agent or employee of his in the department makes them? The statute prohibits it, and provides for cases where the Secretary is interested in certain companies directly or indirectly, or is concerned in them. Surely he is concerned in the Gulf Refining Co. Mr. President, the case of the distilling company is also important. Surely he is concerned in the Overholt Distilling Co. Of course, he is just as much and just as vitally concerned in that company as a partner as he ever was. What is the purpose of the partnership? What is the purpose of the business? It is to make money out of the distilling business. When it is closed up, when the trusteeship is closed up, when this property is disposed of, what is to be the result? Of course, Mr. Mellon would not handle it personally.

His share of the proceeds and the profits will go to Mr. Mellon. He is not indirectly interested in this concern but, on the undisputed facts, he is directly interested in it. The mere fact that he creates an active trust to sell the property and turn back the proceeds to him shows he is still interested in it. The statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania that Secretary Mellon prevented the sale of the property of the company the other day shows exactly the situation. It shows beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the Secretary is really the owner of the property. He is engaged in that business, and not only this statute but another section of the law absolutely prohibit participation in such a business by one who is Secretary of the Treasury.

I am making no charges against the fairness of Secretary Mellon in these transactions. I am merely saying that he is transacting business in which he is interested, with which he is connected, with which he is concerned, in absolute violation of that statute. Mr. Mellon thought so, too, according to the Senator from Pennsylvania, when this matter was first broached to him. It is greatly to the credit of Mr. Mellon that when this statute was first discovered to him he promptly said that he was ineligible, that he should not take the office. Then he was induced by other people; he was induced by this very specious opinion. The truth about it is that he was induced by this very specious opinion, which has no authority back of it. The conclusion of the opinion in each case is in direct conflict with the premise with which it starts out. So it seems to me, Mr. President, upon the undisputed facts, upon the facts as admitted by Mr. Mellon, two parts of the resolution should be left in. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the whereas at the top of page 3, reading:

Whereas it is further shown in said letter that an abatement and settlement has since been made with the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co., a company in which said J. W. Mellon is interested, in the sum of $2,631,381.

I ask to be allowed to perfect the resolution by striking that language from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Without objection, the resolution will be modified as requested by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, in my judgment it requires a very severe stretch of the imagination to consider the Secretary of the Treasury unqualified under the statute, or from any other angle, to occupy that high and important post in the Government of the United States.

Apparently we have gone back to 1789—140 years ago—to find a statute—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. EDGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely the Senator does not object to going back that far for our laws, does he?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator does not object in the slightest degree, but insists that he has a right to refer to the length of time that statute has been on the statute books.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Constitution of the United States is a little older than that. The Senator thinks that is still good, does he not?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; and if we would adhere to the Constitution or its intent a little more specifically we probably would be much better off.

In 1789, about 140 years ago, when this statute was passed, I think I am correct in the statement that it was not known what a corporation was. Obviously, the words employed in the statute at that time, "engaged in trade or commerce," referred to the business of the time, the direct engagement in trade and commerce.

Since that time we have had many Secretaries of the Treasury. I do not know how many we have had, and it makes little difference in the observations I am going to make, but with the one exception which has been discussed here, and the reasons in connection with that case were pretty well defined on both sides of the Chamber, I do not know of any Secretary of the Treasury whose eligibility was questioned because of the fact that he may have owned an interest in a business, or after the inauguration of corporations, stock in some corporations. I think it is very fortunate for the progressive advancement and development of the country that such a technical point has not been raised.

Perhaps, technically, the present Secretary of the Treasury is violating the act of 1789. I am sure I do not know. It is entirely a legal question, and when I asked the Senator during his remarks if it was not a legal question, as I recall his response, though he did not directly answer the question, he said that in no way made it impossible for the Senate to discuss the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 1860, when a Republican President and a Republican Secretary of the Treasury took an exactly opposite course under this very statute, corporations were in common use everywhere at the time, and Mr. Stewart was the president of corporations.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have already referred to the fact that the case of Secretary of the Treasury Stewart had been discussed on both sides of the Chamber.

The Senator from Tennessee observes that there is no reason why the Senate should not discuss the question even though it is an entirely legal question. That is probably true; the Senate of the United States does not hesitate to discuss any question, some of the discussions being enlightening, and in my judgment some of them not particularly constructive. But we can not get anywhere if we do discuss this question, so far as actual, practical results are concerned. Five lawyers, including an honorable member and former member of this body, have been referred to as having, in their wisdom, and judgment, and knowledge of the law, given the Secretary of the Treasury their opinion that after having sold, I presume, hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of securities, he had complied with the law, and was in every way qualified to accept and fill the office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 5. Senate Resolution 200 will now go to the calendar.

Mr. EDGE. Other lawyers have taken the position, or at least the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is a lawyer of note and ability, that it is a violation of the statute. I can not decide that question and I would not propose to do so, of course. Neither, in my judgment, would an investigating committee, even the Judiciary Committee, decide it to the satisfaction of the country. If the technical features or intent of the act of 1789, 140 years old, are to be decided satisfactorily to the country, there is only one tribunal that can do it, and that is the Supreme Court of the United States. Decisions of the Supreme Court have been referred to in the debate. I followed the reading of the opinions as carefully as I could, but we have no apparent final decision as to the intent of the act.

Let us look at the practical side of the question, because I have no intent to discuss the legal side.

The Secretary of the Treasury, by virtue of the responsibilities of the office, if he is going to serve the people of the United States in a way which will give the people the benefit of real business and financial ability and knowledge, must in the very order of things obviously be a business man, or at least a man who has been connected with business enterprises and with financial enterprises, one and the same thing. There has been much debate on the floor of the Senate asserting it as unfortunate for members of the Cabinet to be prominently identified with active political interests. Now we have reached a situation where it is apparently also the viewpoint of some Members of this body that it is unfortunate to have members of the Cabinet who have shown distinct business ability. As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rizo] observed, I wonder just what the formula of qualifications is going to be for future service to the country in the capacity of a Cabinet officer. The politician is disbarred and the successful business man is disbarred.

It does seem to me that in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, at least, the people of the country want an outstanding business man, a man who through his experience is acquainted with financial operations and financial matters and is able to handle the great financial responsibilities of the country. I greatly mistake their viewpoint if it would not correspond in a general way to that thought and conviction. Secretary Mellon, so far as I have been able to observe his work as Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding a possible technical violation of the law of which he may be guilty, has so conducted the office that he has met with the unqualified approval of the people of the country. Without going into detail, under his management, under his policy, we have reduced our war debt by figures running into the billions; we have prepared plans for proper sinking funds to meet every obligation; we have maintained a financial policy that has instilled throughout the country a confidence in the office. And now a law 140 years old is dug up, after perhaps 30 or 40 Secretaries of the Treasury have served, and I presume many of them owners of individual stock, as a reason for this investigation.

I have not discussed the matter at all with the Secretary of the Treasury, but I am quite certain, so far as the facts are concerned, and they have been splendidly outlined by the Senator from Pennsylvania this morning, that a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, a telephone call, or a personal call, would bring out any additional facts desired by any Member of the Senate, so far as Mr. Mellon's interest in this or that company may be concerned.

The resolution in one paragraph says "other settlements with other companies," without defining or mentioning the names of those companies, referring to the matter of rebates through the Internal Revenue Department.

I know nothing about that; but if it is true, I am quite sure the Secretary will be glad, as his letter to the Senator from Tennessee indicated, to give all that information.

Therefore, what necessity is there for an investigation? Any Senator could obtain in 30 minutes from the Secretary of the Treasury everything that an investigating committee could obtain through months of investigation, if we have not already received it through the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, composed undoubtedly of well-qualified lawyers, would have the duty and the final responsibility to decide whether legally the Secretary of the Treasury was violating an act 140 years old, and whatever their report was to the Senate, it would still be a legal question; and necessarily and properly, if it is to the best interests of the country to have it decided, and probably now that it has been raised it should be decided, as stated, it must go to the Supreme Court of the United States. So what possible advantage through another investigation?

At one time, and not long ago, success in business life was not looked upon as an absolute bar to the opportunity of serving one's country. Success in business or industrial life was presented in the textbooks of the public schools of the land as an inspiration to the young boy and the young girl to aspire to some similar possible results; it was looked upon, under the opportunities in this liberty-loving country, to give promise of equal opportunity to the young boys and the young girls to reach the pinnacle of success. But now, if a citizen has been fairly successful, if he has some interest in some company which interest, indirectly perhaps, could be analyzed as violating the statute of 1789, instead of holding him up as an example to the boys and girls of the country as showing the opportunity they have, he is brought before the country as having violated the law and an investigating committee is to be appointed, and he is to be ignominiously turned out of office if he does not resign.

It is time that we recognize that there is a distinction between construction and destruction. This is not a criminal matter. I am glad to have heard the Senator from Tennessee, without qualification, say that he made no charges against the Secretary of the Treasury. I have not heard any charges made against the Secretary of the Treasury, and yet at the same time we are asking him to come before a committee of the Senate to define his investments, when he has shown every willingness to do so, without fear and without qualification.

Mr. President, in my judgment there is a happy medium, a place where good common sense and decency would inspire the Senate to begin and to end. All our investigating committees can do is to get the facts and turn them over to Congress or to the courts, the recognized tribunal to which any criminal facts that are discovered before an investigating committee should go.

To ask the Secretary of the Treasury to come before a committee to be asked if he has any ownership in some corporation other than those recited in the resolution and defined by the Senator from Pennsylvania, based on a purely technical, legal argument, is, in my judgment, the straw that breaks the camel's back. I trust that for the good name of the Senate we will hesitate when it comes to a proposition like this.

I am not standing in the way of any legitimate investigation. I want it to be clearly understood that I have voted for every resolution which could possibly mean the actual unearthing or discovery of malfeasance in office or crime, and I shall continue to do so. Perhaps the Secretary of the Treasury will ask for an investigation, because if he does not it will be assumed in some quarters that he is trying to hide something; but, so far as I am concerned, I do not care whether he asks for it or not, as long as I am called upon under the conditions that have been disclosed, with the situation and evidence that have been presented to the Senate, I shall never vote to have any investigation of his past activities. If it is desired to have the act of 1789 finally interpreted, if there is any way to send it to the Supreme Court, I will gladly vote to send it there and for once and all get that old blue law disposed of, a law that is similar to other blue laws which provide we can not deliver a package on Sunday or smoke on Sunday, and like many other blue laws no one pays any attention to and yet which many States have unrepealed to-day. I classify the act of 1789 in exactly the same category with those blue laws which are never used as a sane argument in a deliberative body.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I would like to make some comment upon the resolution which we have been discussing before we take up the unfinished business.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to get some information from the Chair. Is it not a fact that to-morrow, at the close of the morning business, the resolution which has been under discussion will be laid before the Senate and open to debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the resolution will take its place on the calendar and come up in its proper order whenever that number is reached on a call of the calendar, or by unanimous consent it may be called up out of order.

Mr. FESS. There was a very well-defined reason for the statute that forbade the Secretary of the Treasury in 1789 being possessed of certain relationships to business. When the Government was inaugurated our chief source of revenue, outside of the sale of public lands, was the customs duties upon which the tax or tariff situation was based. To-day the customs duties would not accrue more than about $540,000,000, while we have to raise something like $3,500,000,000 to run the Government. So that the duties would not make up more than one-sixth of the sum total needed for running the Government. It is perfectly apparent, when all the revenue that was collected by the Government, or the major portion of it, came from this one source, that the Government would forbid the Secretary of the Treasury from being identified as an importer. That situation has changed. It had been changed in a degree in 1869, it is true, because Mr. Stewart at that time was the greatest importer in America, and upon the goods that he imported much of the revenue to run the Government was collected.

I am very much gratified to find that the present Secretary of the Treasury had made a complete investigation, through legal talent, to ascertain whether he was eligible to accept the position offered him by the President of the United States. I am sure every Senator will recognize that, while there might be some point of doubt, there was nothing left undone to ascertain all the facts, and so far as I can see there is no incapacity legally for the Secretary to hold the position.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to speak upon that particular phase. I should like to direct the attention of the Senate to the remarkable achievements of the Secretary of the Treasury in the three years during which he has now held the position. Measured by results, I regard what he has accomplished as the most brilliant achievement in the history of finance in America unless it might be the achievement which is credited to Alexander Hamilton. Probably in the history of the science of finance the present Secretary of the Treasury would not rank with the most constructive genius which North America has yet produced in Mr. Hamilton, but when we measure him in contrast with Albert Gallatin, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury under Jefferson, with Alexander J. Dallas, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury under Madison and during the War of 1812, and with men like McCulloch, Chase, John Sherman, and others who have risen to very high rank in the science of finance, I doubt whether the present Secretary of the Treasury would suffer in comparison with the best America has yet produced. That is not sentiment; that is not party faith; but it is based upon facts, and I should like to have the attention of the Senate briefly while I recount them.

When the present Secretary of the Treasury took over the portfolio he found a public debt that had at the high point reached twenty-six and one-half billion dollars. That amount had been reduced slightly, but the Nation was still burdened with an annual interest charge of over $1,000,000,000. The public debt has been reduced by two and a quarter billion dollars since the present Secretary of the Treasury took charge. I have before me the official figures, according to which that part of the public debt which is known as the interest-bearing debt was on June 30, 1921, three months after Mr. Mellon took charge, $23,737,352,000. The public debt on June 30, 1923, at the end of the last fiscal year was $22,097,590,754. There has therefore been a reduction in those two years of $1,730,000,000.

That is a reduction of $865,000,000 a year, which represents an actual reduction of $2,400,000 a day in the public debt of this Nation. The enormous reduction of $2,400,000 a day during the time the present Secretary of the Treasury has had charge of the finances of the Government is equal to the daily outlay in the Civil War during the height of that greatest of conflicts up to the World War.

That is not all. Under the present Secretary of the Treasury we have not only lived within the Budget and have been able to balance our income and expenditures, but we have also lifted the credit of the Nation from the low point of 84.6, which was the low point to which our Liberty bonds had descended, to beyond par value. That is not a matter of sentiment, nor is it a matter of legislation, but it is a matter of sound finance under the leadership of a great financial director.

When Secretary Mellon took charge of the Treasury we had a public debt in the form of both Liberty bonds and a floating indebtedness, the floating debt amounting to between $2,700,000,000 and $3,000,000,000. That debt had never been funded. The reason why it had not been put into long-term bonds was because it was thought by the then administration that, through the sale of war equipment and other material that might be turned into money, we might possibly pay off that large overhang of nearly $3,000,000,000 which had not been funded by the Treasury; but, unfortunately, that could not be done. So the present Secretary of the Treasury found an unfunded debt, a floating debt due to the banks, of nearly $3,000,000,000.

The necessity on the part of the banks to carry those $3,000,000,000 of Government obligations tied up almost all of the liquid assets of the banks, which otherwise would have furnished credit to the commercial world and to the industries of the country. The outcome of the policy of living from hand to mouth was inevitably the starving of industry for the want of capital. The result of it was that interest rates in the banks were high; the conduct of banking business was rendered difficult; money would not flow to industry; the credits of the country were frozen; industry was paralyzed; and labor so suffered for want of employment that we saw 5,000,000 idle people walking the streets looking for work. While it has been said that following the greatest convulsion the world ever saw the inevitable result was the starving of industry for a want of capital, yet that condition was vastly accentuated by the Government requiring the banks to absorb their liquid assets in caring for its obligations.

The very first object which the present Secretary of the Treasury sought to accomplish was to relieve the liquid assets of the banks and enable them to flow into industry, so that industry might be revived and employment given to idle labor. He conceived the plan of asking the public to absorb the Government obligations.

In order to do so he had to issue short-term certificates for periods of something like three years. The first offering of $300,000,000, at a rate of interest of 5½ per cent and due in three years, was in the nature of an experiment; but, to the surprise of everyone, that offering was oversubscribed and the $500,000,000 immediately cared for. In a very short time thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury made a second offering, to take care of another large portion of the $3,000,000,000 floating indebtedness, and the second offering was taken as rapidly as the first. Within nine months, Mr. President, the rate of interest on the short-time certificates had been reduced from 5½ per cent to 4½ per cent, representing a saving of 1½ per cent interest upon those offerings.

Mr. President, it ought not to be overlooked that whenever the Government saves a rate of interest it saves that rate upon the entire amount of a given obligation bearing that rate. The reduction of the rate from 5½ per cent to 4½ per cent involved a saving of 1½ per cent, and a saving of even 1 per cent on the public debt of $20,000,000,000 is equal to a saving of $1,000,000,000 a year forever until the debt is paid.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there has not been in my memory, as a student of the history of finance, such an achievement as has been worked in the financing of the floating debt. Within one year and six months' time $3,000,000,000 of unfunded indebtedness that had tied up the commercial credits of the country and put labor out of employment was all funded by obligations running from one year to three years and having convenient periods of payment, so that when they came due they could be paid or at least refunded. By this act within less than three years' time the capital of the banks was released; interest rates came down; capital flowed into the channels of industry; industry revived; labor was employed; and our Liberty bonds ascended from 84.6, the low point, to par.

I state again that this is not a question of sentiment, but it is an example of the soundest finance that America has yet witnessed, and it has received such universally favorable comment that Senators ought not to overlook it. The statement I have just made relates to the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the floating debt, aside from operations affecting the Victory bonds.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask the Senator if he is aware of the fact that the Federal revenue law of 1921 exempts all Federal securities from taxation when they are owned by corporations, and if, in the opinion of the Senator, that did not have something to do with increasing the price of the Liberty bonds.

Mr. FESS. I think it had something to do with the increase in price. Anything that would make a Liberty bond more valuable in the hands of the owner would, of course, show itself in the current price of the bond.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like also to ask the Senator another question. When I came in the Senator made a statement about a reduction of the interest rates on the floating indebtedness last year.

Mr. FESS. Yes; I referred to the reduction in the rate on the floating indebtedness.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In the opinion of the Senator, how much was that interest rate reduced?

Mr. FESS. It was reduced from 5½ per cent to 4½ per cent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Some of it was retired, though not all of it, was it not?

Mr. FESS. Only a portion of it was retired; most of it was refunded. Most of it was put into the form of short-term securities.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe there was $668,000,000 of certificates issued bearing 4½ per cent.

Mr. FESS. Probably; and that rate represented 1 per cent less than the first issue, which was 5½ per cent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask the Senator if he is aware that the British Government sold its short-term securities last summer to yield about 3 per cent?

Mr. FESS. Very probably that is true; but there is a vast difference between the British Government and ours, in that the British Government's surtax is only one-half of ours, and its normal tax is considerably more than double ours; so that bonds in the form of Government indebtedness in Great Britain would be very much more valuable in contrast with industrials than they would be in this country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the Senator from New York after the Senator from Minnesota has finished asking his question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should also like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the British Government makes short-term treasury bills taxable.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. I inquire what the conversation is about on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I asked the Senator the question whether, in view of the fact that short-term bills of the British treasury are subject to taxation and the securities of the Federal Government of the United States are tax exempt in any amount when held by corporations, the bonds and securities of the Federal Government of the United States should not really sell to yield a lower rate of interest, because they are tax exempt when held by corporations of any kind, while the treasury bills of the British Government are not tax exempt, and still they are sold to yield a much lower rate of interest?

Mr. FESS. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that you can not make a comparison between the tax on industrials in Great Britain and in our country and the tax on British Government bonds and ours, for the reason that there is such a vastly greater field for industry here than there, and the tax here is much less on industrials than over there. In addition to that, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I hope he sees the problem as I do, and will join in preventing any further issuance of tax-exempt securities. I do not think that ought to be permitted if we can avoid it, but under the present situation we can not avoid it. We can not pass a law here to forbid it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I want to say to the Senator that I did not interrupt in a controversial spirit. I just wanted to bring out the fact.

Mr. FESS. Not at all. I appreciate the spirit in which the Senator asked the question.

Mr. President, I have dealt with the problem of financing the floating debt, which in my judgment was the most serious financial problem that the country had to face. In addition to that, in May, 1923, the country faced obligations in the Victory loan due to the amount of $4,050,000,000. What was to be done with it? That was the problem of the Treasury. Everyone will recognize that those notes could not be paid by current taxation, because current taxation had already reached the exorbitant plane of more than $4,000,000,000. We might be left to the issuance of long-time bonds, and thus refund the Victory notes by other bonds, like the Liberties. The other alternative would be to replace the Victory notes by short-term certificates, and there had been such remarkable success in the financing of the floating debt that the Secretary of the Treasury undertook that plan.

I took the time to look over the Secretary's report of this year, and I find these facts:

The investment public was again appealed to by the offering of small blocks of short-dated Treasury notes at reasonable rates of interest and due at quarterly periods, instead of six months, when income taxes are paid. I read this because I want to be accurate. In 1921 the Secretary of the Treasury offered two blocks, one dated June 15 and the other September 15, due in three years, the first at 5½ and the second at 5½ per cent. In 1922 he offered five blocks, ranging from 4½ to 4½ per cent. In 1923 he offered two more blocks. These offerings summed up to the total of $4,050,000,000. That comprehends all of the Victory notes due May 1, 1923. These were made payable semiannually—in 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927—which affords the best possible plan to meet them when due, either by retiring them or by refunding them. The obligations of the Government due last year until financed by the Treasury were nearly $3,000,000,000 of floating debt, $4,050,000,000 of Victory notes, and nearly $700,000,000 of war-savings stamps. Fellow Senators, there is a sum of money that reaches beyond seven and a half billions, all due in 1923, and the Treasury was limited to the alternative of either offering long-time bonds to refund these obligations or else financing them by short-term certificates.

The Secretary chose the latter alternative wisely, for the offering of any large amount of long-term bonds would have glutted the market and would have depressed greatly the Liberties and again depress industry. That is precisely what was to be avoided. The outcome of this effort was that we have the floating debt of $3,000,000,000 funded at convenient periods when the Government can meet it; we have the $4,050,000,000 of Victory notes funded in a similar way; and we are caring for the war-savings stamps as rapidly as they are presented. Instead of $7,500,000,000 of unfunded obligations due now, they are all refunded at convenient periods, in small amounts, in such a way that the Treasury can either meet them by paying them or can easily retire them by refunding them.

I say that accomplishment challenges the record of finance in the history of any country in the world; and I can not understand this hue and cry against the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, with such a remarkable achievement as the product of his brain.

Furthermore, Senators, all of the work was done so easily that none except those who had been following the course of the matter knew that it was being done. Even business circles were not disturbed; and to-day what a picture we have in contrast with what we had when the present Secretary of the Treasury took his post! No longer have we the $3,000,000,000 hand-to-mouth policy, drying up the capital of the country and starving the industries. No longer have we labor out on the streets without employment. On the other hand, these obligations have been transferred from the banks, which thus far had tied up seven billions of commercial credit, to the investing public at good rates, so that it is profitable even to the public; capital is again free; industry is thriving; unemployment has fully disappeared; and labor is better employed, more permanently employed, and more advantageously employed than at any other period that I know anything about.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator recognize that in the agricultural States of the West there is great depression; that banks are failing every day; that two or three hundred banks failed this winter, and that hardly a day passes without a failure? Is the Senator aware that the cotton mills of Lowell are running half time?

Mr. FESS. The Senator is aware that the agricultural industry liquidated quicker than anything else coming out of the war, and that without any basis of organization it was left almost wholly helpless. The Senator is aware that the Congress in the last session passed 14 separate, independent acts in relief of agriculture, all of which were strongly recommended by the agricultural interests of the country. The Senator is also aware that under the present organization, with the foreign market glutted as it is, wheat, for example, has been overproduced by more than 300,000,000 bushels. The Senator is aware that an economic evil can not be cured by legislative enactment, notwithstanding a great many people think that can be done. Yes; the Senator is aware that there are some industries that still suffer from the cataclysm of war, but it is difficult for anyone to cure an evil coming out of such a disaster by passing any legislation at this time.

Mr. President, I rose merely to say that in the short period of three years, under the present management of the Treasury as headed by Secretary Mellon, we have reduced the public debt over $2,000,000 a day every day he has been in office; we have funded all the obligations and released capital; we have employed labor and started the country on a prosperous era which will make Mr. Mellon rank with the best officials that America has yet produced.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question in reference to this liquidation of the farmer that he speaks of.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Was not the deflation policy of the Federal reserve system the principal cause of that liquidation, as the Senators call it?

Mr. FESS. There is a dispute in the minds of a great many persons about the effect of the policy of deflation. The Federal Reserve Board, members of which individually I know, and with some of whom I have served in the House of Representatives, recognized that Federal reserve notes were very largely overissued in contrast with the increase of the business of the country, and they set out upon a fairly well-defined policy of partial deflation. Whether or not it was wise, I can not say. If I should say it was unwise, immediately some one would say, "That is because it was a Democratic measure and a Democratic board. You are saying that it is unwise because it was headed by a Democrat." I do not know that it was an unwise policy.

Mr. BROOKHART. I will say to the Senator that on the day the meeting was held, on the 18th day of May, 1920, every member of the board was a Democrat; but, while that is true, the majority of the branch-bank members attending were Republicans, and since the present administration has gone in exactly the same policy has been pursued that the Democratic administration pursued.

Mr. FESS. I am not ready to say that the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board was the basis of any harm to agriculture. A great many persons think so.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Manufacturers' Record has said that it has deflated the farmer in the total sum of $32,000,000,000.

Mr. FESS. The Manufacturers' Record is the most radical in its utterances against the Federal Reserve Board of any publication I ever saw. I read it regularly, but I do not allow it to influence my judgment.

Mr. BROOKHART. As far as my knowledge goes, I can fully corroborate the Record in the amount of the deflation that hit the farmer. I think there is no doubt of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator from Ohio. He stated that the overproduction of wheat for 1923 was 300,000,000 bushels.

Mr. FESS. That is the world overproduction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I do not think it is more than about 100,000,000 bushels in the United States.

Mr. FESS. Yes; I mean the overproduction all over the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The Senator did not say so.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, and to have it read, and lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 201) was read, as follows:

Whereas Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was a director of the Sinclair Oil Co. previous to his entrance into the Government service; and

Whereas as Assistant Secretary of the Navy he personally carried the Executive order to the White House for the President to sign, which order transferred the control of the naval oil reserves from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior; and

Whereas on July 29, 1922, Mr. Roosevelt, then the Acting Secretary of the Navy in the absence of Secretary Denby, ordered the United States marines to remove all oil claimants from the naval reserve No. 3, and thereby made an outrageous use of the armed forces of the United States Government to perform acts which should have been performed only by civil officers on the order of a court after due hearing of all the facts in the case: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should be, and he is hereby, requested to ask for the resignation of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has requested that the resolution may lie on the table. That order will be made.

PRICE OF GASOLINE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, last October the attorney generals from a number of States met in Chicago to discuss the advanced prices of gasoline. The attorney generals appointed an executive committee composed of able attorney generals from different sections of the country, and they made certain recommendations to Congress. I ask that these be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL ON GASOLINE PRICES.

Appointment of the committee: The conference of attorneys general in session at Chicago, Ill., on October 17, 1923, appointed this executive committee for the purpose of carrying on the work of the conference.

Scope of this statement: This statement is not intended to cover the entire work of the executive committee and its session held in Chicago March 14-15, 1924. It is designed to cover only such matters as it is felt will be of interest and value to the several attorneys general and to the public.

Statement: Following the conference held in October, 1923, reductions were made in the prices of gasoline and other petroleum products throughout the United States, and such reduced prices continued for some time. Later, however, the price of gasoline was raised, and is now from 6 to 7 cents higher than the low point. Whether continued increases in the price of gasoline and other petroleum products are in prospect is unknown. Deeming the matter of sufficient importance, the chairman called this meeting. After giving the most careful consideration to the question we submit the following observations:

(1) The National Petroleum News states that the indicated domestic consumption of gasoline for 1923 was 6,605,035,200 gallons. It is conservatively estimated that the domestic consumption of gasoline in 1924 will exceed 7,500,000,000 gallons. This 6-cent addition to the price would for 1924 increase the gasoline cost to the American public by more than $450,000,000. This is $4 per capita for every man, woman, and child in the United States, and does not take into account the prices of other petroleum products.

(2) The resolutions adopted in October at the conference are in our judgment worthy of the most careful consideration by each of the several States and the Federal Government, and we at this time renew such resolutions in detail and instruct the secretary to forward a copy thereof and of this statement to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officer of both Houses of the Congress of the United States, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

(3) We suggest that all in authority, either in the States or in the Federal Government, give consideration to this question of prices of gasoline and other petroleum products. Petroleum and its products have become necessities of life. They are essential to the welfare of our people. Nature has supplied an abundant store of petroleum which geologists inform us will provide for a long period of time. It is a natural resource. The people are entitled to its use at a reasonable price. Exorbitant and extortionate prices should not be tolerated.

(4) The industry seems to be under such control that the price may be raised overnight at every gasoline station in the Nation, whether in the cities or on the crossroads. The Federal Government has established the Federal Trade Commission and has vested this commission with certain powers and duties. We believe that this matter of prices of gasoline and other petroleum products merits immediate consideration by the commission, to the end that the following result may be accomplished:

(a) That the dissolution decree in the so-called Standard Oil case of 1911 be carried out immediately according to the true spirit thereof.

(b) That all unfair trade practices in the production, manufacture, and distribution of gasoline and other petroleum products be abolished without delay.

(c) That no agreement between distribution companies, refining companies, or producing companies, whether subsidiary one to the other or not, whereby the production, manufacture, and distribution of petroleum products is curtailed and the price thereof fixed, be permitted.

(d) That such other orders be made as will conserve to the people these basic products and will enable the people to secure the use thereof at reasonable prices.

(e) That the powers of the Federal Trade Commission be enlarged to the end that there may be no doubt as to its power to accomplish the results sought. In this connection we believe that certain rules of evidence should be established whereby the burden of proof may shift upon the establishment by the Government of certain well-defined facts, such as uniformity of price charged by all companies over large territories.

(f) That the governors and attorneys general of the several States be urged to ask their Senators and Representatives in Congress to provide a special and sufficient appropriation, in addition to other appropriations, to the Federal Trade Commission for the conduct and prosecution of this work.

(5) The attorneys general of several States have conducted investigations and proceedings relative to the present problems under various statutes relating to monopolies, pools, trusts, combinations, discriminations, and unfair trade practices. Other inquiries have been prosecuted and are being made by commissions or boards exercising within some States powers somewhat similar to those granted to the Federal Trade Commission. Only last week the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts defined petroleum and its products as necessities of life, for the purpose of having this subject investigated by the "commission on the necessities of life." These inquiries and prosecutions are greatly hampered by technical statutory requirements relating to evidence often imposing impossible burdens on the State in the proof of facts which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants. We recommend that such statutes be promptly amended as heretofore suggested with regard to the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, and that these State laws be revised generally to provide adequate and prompt remedies for any attempted imposition or extortion upon the public. We also suggest that in States which do not so provide some administrative authority be vested with powers similar to those of the Federal Trade Commission.

(6) For all these purposes we pledge full cooperation by this conference of attorneys general with the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice of the United States.

GEO. M. NAPIER, Secretary, Georgia.

CLIFFORD L. HILTON, Minnesota.

SECRET DIPLOMACY OF EUROPE.

Mr. OWEN. I submit for the RECORD certain letters and comments relative to remarks I made in the Senate on the subject of European diplomacy.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

5745 BLACKSTONE AVENUE,

Chicago, January 9, 1924.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: A friend who has just sent me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing your speech of December 18th, has put me under heavy obligations to himself and ultimately to you. From the skimpy, and, in effect, misleading account given by the Chicago Tribune, I had no idea of the tremendous documentary artillery which you assembled to shatter the walls of ignorance and ill-will. I am fairly amazed at your command of the historical evidence, and at your skill in marshaling it in such a way as to enable the reader to draw his own conclusions without prejudice.

The note of presumption in this compliment will lose its edge when I explain that I am by profession a historian, and that during the last four years I have made it my business to examine the evidence bearing on the origin of the war. I am, therefore, in a position to appreciate the difficulties of such an enterprise as yours.

Besides representing a notable labor of scholarship your speech is an act of moral liberation. Too long have our people been led by the nose by an interested propaganda. The clearing of their minds of foolish prejudices is an essential step toward that pacification of the world which the treaties of 1919 woefully failed to achieve and which all men of good will must continue to recognize as the real goal of their efforts.

If we could only get a greater publicity for your revelations! However, every little helps, and when our people finally pass through the mists that envelop them into the sunshine of truth, your name as that of a leader out of mental bondage will shine with a particular radiance.

I am, with the greatest respect,

Yours sincerely,

FERDINAND SCHEVILL,

Professor of Modern European History, The University of Chicago.

AN ENGLISH IMPRESSION OF SENATOR OWEN.

(E. D. Morel in London Foreign Affairs.)

Wherein lies the secret of the lack of courage, and of vision, too; for Europe can not know peace while she is content to live under the shadow of a crime? Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma, has done a service to humanity by indicating in the course of a recent speech in the American Senate. The secret lies in the concealment from the peoples of Europe of the evidence which proves beyond contestation the falseness of the legend attributing the Great War solely to the acts and to policy of the men and the influences ruling the German people before the war. That concealment has been deliberate and protracted. The governments, the principal public men, and the newspapers of the European countries victorious in the war have participated equally in this conspiracy against truth and justice. And this suppression of facts relating to the most terrible tragedy in the history of the world it is which has paralyzed, and continues to paralyze, the efforts of all those, whether in the enjoyment of executive responsibility or merely in a position to influence public opinion, who realize that the world can not attain peace until the persecution of the German people ceases.

For the first time since the war ended a member of one of the world's legislatures has broken through this conspiracy of silence within the walls of the legislature itself, and from that forum has communicated to his fellow countrymen the salient portions of this evidence. He has dared to assail the legend and he has dared to say that:

"Of the present population of Germany charged with the payment of reparations, about 20 per cent in 1914 were unborn babies; about 80 per cent of the German people living in 1914 were women and children without knowledge and without political power and absolutely ignorant of any wrongful purpose. There is no adequate moral basis upon which they can be charged with responsibility for the war."

If these facts could be driven home into the moral conscience of the world, we have sufficient faith in mankind to believe that the response would be immediate and surprising. It has always been a mystery to us how enlightened men who support the League of Nations can fail to perceive that to share in this conspiracy of silence and to condone the crime which is the outcome of it is to kill the soul of the league. Men were fighting. America went to the support of the weaker, bound and disarmed the stronger, then turned her back and left the weaker to wreak his savage will upon the stronger, whom he never could have faced at all alone. Nothing can justify this. It is a thing completely abhorrent to every just and manful feeling.

One nation in its time plays many parts indeed. That America should ever have played this part is a most sad tragedy. Let us hope that she will yet recognize her declension, will yet perceive what a frightful blunders she made. If she was deceived, then the present proceedings of the French should be sufficient to undeceive her. If she can look upon these with pleasure, then she is sunk indeed, sunk beneath contempt. And there are many responsible men in her of whom that is the truth. But they are only a small part of the Nation, and we may look for the day when it will wipe out this stain of a great and cousin people shamefully beguiled and treacherously delivered to its most vindictive foe. A foe that throughout the centuries has never failed to scandalously abuse its hour of triumph. German militarism was a bogey of the heated fancy. French militarism is a reality and sets its iron heel on Europe at this hour.

MR. MACDONALD AND THE WAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES:

What MacDonald said August 7, 1914, on the origin of the war:

"When Sir Edward Grey failed to secure peace between Germany and Russia, he worked deliberately to involve us in the war, using Belgium as his chief excuse.

"The very worst form of alliance is the Entente.

"When reporting the negotiations to the House of Commons, he [Sir Edward Grey] found it impossible to tell the whole truth.

"Both, i. e., Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith, withheld the whole truth from us.

"It was a pretty little game in hypocrisy.

"Why has this evil happened? The only answer we can give is because Sir Edward Grey has guided our foreign policy during the past eight years. His shortsightedness and his blunders have brought all this on us.

"The only reason from beginning to end is that our foreign office is anti-German and that the British Admiralty was anxious to seize any opportunity for using the Navy in battle practice."—(Leicester Pioneer, August 7, 1914.)

[From the American Monthly.]

TWO DAYS (JULY 30 AND 31, 1914).

(By Prof. Alfred Fevet, the eminent French publicist.)

In this study of the two fatal days athwart which had been cast the shadow of Russian mobilization Professor Fevet, the most Gallican of Frenchmen, does not spare the reputation of such men as Poincaré and Viviani.

Called to the front by the war, Fevet left his pupils and his papers and in the trenches meditated the great work he has since given to the world. That work is massively monumental—"Les Responsables de la Guerre." Its nature may be inferred from the extracts here given with very little compression.

The story shows Russia in the act of precipitating the tragedy. It was a tragedy staged at Paris. Its plot is simple. It reveals a feud in the Balkans transformed into a world crisis by the plotters who used the Quai d'Orsay as a cave of banditry.

Fevet fastens responsibility for the war so firmly upon the plotters behind Poincaré that a suspicious Frenchman once said to him, "Professor Fevet, are you not in love with a German woman?" He burst out laughing.

No; as George Demartial, a patriotic Frenchman, has said, in order to realize that the governments of the Entente befuddled mankind it is not necessary to have been in love with a German girl. It is enough to loathe hypocrisy.

To a brave and brilliant Frenchman the world is indebted for this revelation of the methods employed by Poincaré, Viviani, and the Quai d'Orsay to egg Russia on to the fatal mobilization order.

CHARACTERS IN THE TRAGEDY.

Herbert Henry Asquith, a convivial and romantic orator, dominating the House of Commons in London, acting as Prime Minister of England, and acting the part stably. He ushered in the crisis with the complot about preferring one hour of crowded life to an age without a name.

Count Benckendorff, ambassador of Russia in London, a veteran of waltzing and diplomacy who knew more about pictures, vases, and antique statues than he did about life. Charming in manner, he was bewildering in negotiation and had a genius for confusion.

Sir Francis Bertie, ambassador of Great Britain in Paris, whose plasticity in the hands of Poincaré makes the Frenchman look like a thief in the act of stealing a stick of candy from a baby. Sir Francis was frigid to the outside world, but he unbent delightfully at dinner. His knowledge of the masses of mankind was like that of a man on Mars.

Buchanan, Sir George, ambassador from England to Russia, one of the few Englishmen to realize the gravity of the crisis from the start and to make efforts in season to prevent the issue of the fatal mobilization order by the Czar.

Cambon, Jules, one of the two famous brothers in the diplomatic service of France, who spent their time, the one at Berlin and the other at London, in melodramatic gestures for "Revenge, revenge, revenge!" They were of the Gambetta school that whispered darkly with reference to Alsace and Lorraine: "Think of them ever; speak of them never!"

Cambon, Paul, brother to the preceding, whose specialty was an expression of lamb-like innocence.

William II, German Emperor and King of Prussia, a ruler of whom we are told by one set of controversialists that he was a cipher and a nullity and by another set that he was to blame for all that happened. The world needed a "scapegoat," and it took him.

Grey, Sir Edward, an old-school English liberal at the head of the British Foreign Office, who suffered greatly from defective eyesight and who had even the most important papers read to him. He was the easiest man in the world to befool and mislead.

Prince Lichnowsky, an elderly diplomat whose long experience and family traditions did not equip him for the difficulties of the post of German ambassador in London, where the Cambon brothers held all the wires and pulled all the strings between them.

Sir Arthur Nicholson, permanent official at the British Foreign Office, who knew every secret and who kept it to himself.

Nicholas II, a mystic with only a casual and accidental relation to the affairs of this world, which he did not understand and in which he was not interested.

Sazonoff, a tool of the grand ducal war party in charge of the Russian Foreign Office.

Paleologue, Maurice, French ambassador in Russia brought up in the "revenge" school of Parisian political melodrama, wedded to the idea that the World War would prove, when it came, the golden hour. His aim was to see that the Russian mobilization was staged in just the right way to promote the schemes of Monsieur Paul Cambon in London. Paleologue has the literary temperament.

Count Pourtales, German ambassador in Russia, a nobleman of the great world with the grand manner but hopelessly unnerved every time he heard the word "Revenge!" in French accents. A polite person in a rude and rough scrimmage.

Baron von Schoen, German ambassador in Paris, who turned out the merest babe in the hands of Poincaré.

Count Szapary, Austro-Hungarian ambassador in Russia, whose eyes were so firmly fixed upon the sky that he did not see a pit at his feet, the pit dug for him by the crew of conspirators in the French embassy at Petrograd.

René Viviani, a brilliant French divorce lawyer and phrase-making politician, who worked with Poincaré and was his tool in the post of Prime Minister at Paris. Viviani dominated the Chamber of Deputies with his eloquence and his knowledge of the seamy side of human nature.

Raymond Poincaré, the man who turned the world upside down.

Time: Four days after the Czar has been tricked into giving his order for a "preparatory period of war" and one day after decreeing "a state of war."

Place: Palace of the Czar. Then the Quai d'Orsay. Next the London foreign office. Changes of scene at intervals to the Ballplatz and the Wilhelmstrasse.

I.—GERMANY HOLDS AUSTRIA BACK.

JULY 30, 1914.

The drama was begun in the course of the day preceding this. Russia placed herself in a state of war against Austria.

If we are to be guided by all normal foresight, Austria will pass from a peace footing to that of war against Russia. She has herself announced it, but she would prefer to do so jointly with Germany, who, according to the Vienna interpretation of the Austro-German treaty, must meet in arms either an attack or "threatening military measures" of Russia against one of her allies.

But Germany does not seem disposed to sanction that interpretation. Rather, while southern Russia mobilizes officially against Austria, Berlin summons Vienna to effect a reconciliation with St. Petersburg.

The Ballplatz (Vienna Foreign Office), perplexed, confused by the gestures of Berlin, hesitates, defers, confines itself to-day to a concentration of her available military forces on a peace footing along the Galician frontier.

II.—4 O'CLOCK.

Sergius Dmitrievitch Sazonoff, Foreign Minister at St. Petersburg, has obtained from Nicholas II, the Czar, leave and order to attack Germany by placing his Muscovite Majesty between the responsibility of aggression and the responsibility of disconcerting allied France, her Government, her general staff—between the necessity of braving the temper of Monsieur Poincaré or that of the furies.

It seemed to the Imperial Russian manikin that the distance was shorter between Peterhof (his court) and the Elysee (where the French President lives) than the interval between the crime and the remorse of having even thought of it, of having let himself be led into it, of having consummated it.

Sergius Dmitrievitch Sazonoff to-day at 4 o'clock—and a minute or two—formally and definitely issued in the name of the Czar the order for the mobilization of the forces of all the Russias.

The Russian minister will explain this by confusing dates and facts, by actually representing his initiative as a reply to an Austro-Hungarian order of general mobilization, issued later by just 20 hours. . . .

The Elysee and the Quai d'Orsay were last night informed by Monsieur Izvolski of the latest doing of Monsieur Sazonoff. He placed on record the official assurance of the entire support of France. He begged that same France to accelerate her own process of procedure from a peace footing to a war footing in tune with that of Russia, and to urge England to act in harmony with her own true friends.

III.—MEPHISTOPHELES GRINS.

Having become the host of the palace of the Elysee, President of the French Republic, Monsieur Poincaré continues to determine the foreign policy of France.

He prolongs himself at the Quai d'Orsay (Foreign Office at Paris) through the medium of persons of his own choice.

At the opening of the crisis of 1914 the two presidencies—that of the Republic and that of the cabinet—are as completely unified with Monsieur Poincaré as he was in 1913 with himself.

The hour has sounded to make good.

The method has not changed.

It is necessary to trick the Austrian game bird.

That implies, as a preliminary, single, tactical movement, an attack on Austria from Russia.

Now, this very gesture was executed yesterday officially.

Monsieur Viviani (dummy for Poincaré as Prime Minister in Paris) awaited the announcement of this and received it without a word of regret, without a glance backward.

He accepted all the consequences.

"France is determined to fulfill all the obligations of the alliance."

That was an alliance transformed in 1899 and adapted to European conditions growing out of the Balkan conflicts and enlarged by a recent clause registered at St. Petersburg.

The die is cast!

In reply to the Russian mobilization, Austria will mobilize the second half of her army; that is, she will carry her partial mobilization to a state of complete mobilization.

Russia will instantly make her own mobilization general, a fact which will provoke the simultaneous or successive entry of Germany and France into the arena.

IV.—TOO LATE!

All at once Monsieur Sazonoff threatens to break the logical series of events, to interfere with the happy combination of circumstances that are to have as their first developments a partial mobilization of Russia against Austria and an Austro-Hungarian reaction against Russia.

Monsieur Sazonoff permits it to be foreseen—he even announces, in fact—a collective mobilization against Vienna and Berlin, a general attack against Austria and Germany.

Ah! If Monsieur Viviani had but known the reasons that decided his colleagues in Russia to hasten events and overpower the intelligence of the Czar! (The reader is advised to consult on this point the record of the Sukhomlinoff trial.)

Not knowing these, the Sazonoff formula calling for "acceleration of armaments" makes him uneasy.

A mobilization of Russia against Germany would inflict a blow upon the moral strategical face of the alliance.

What would the neutrals say if Paris, exclaiming against an aggression, pointed out Berlin with an accusing forefinger?

And this mobilization would not render war more certain.

It would be a work of supererogation, even from the point of view of the ultimate result.

It would be likewise a blunder, the most inopportune of blunders, committed at the very moment when St. Petersburg is begging Paris for the moon—collaboration of England.

The recommendation of the Quai d'Orsay to Monsieur Sazonoff is therefore of an elementary wisdom and Monsieur Viviani is authorized to express it forcibly.

But when the telegram embodying it gets to St. Petersburg the order for the Russian mobilization will for two hours past have been blocking the wires of the Czar's dominions. . . .

Too late!

V.—DAYS OF DOOM.

The final dispositions of a military kind, before the stage of general mobilization became universal, were made in this order:

At St. Petersburg (preparatory period of war) July 20;

At Vienna (alarm) July 26 (applicable to six army corps dating from the 27th);

At Vienna (alarm) 31st (in force from August 2 as regards corps not yet on the alert);

At London (warning telegrams) July 29 (afternoon);

At Paris (departure sealed) July 29-30; and

At Berlin July 31 (1.30 p. m.).

VI.—NIGHT AND THE CZAR.

EVENING OF JULY 31, 1914.

No government not one of all the members of the diplomatic corps accredited to St. Petersburg is ignorant this evening of why, when, and against whom Russia has established a state of war.

The gesture of Monsieur Sazonoff (Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Czar Nicholas II) is a flash of light that streaks a stormy sky. The heavens will burst in torrents of blood. This gesture—the powerful minister of the Czar perpetrated it in certainty of the approval of military Paris and of that (tacit) of Sir Edward Grey.

The order to let loose the storm of war was given this very afternoon. "The clock indicated precisely 4 o'clock," affirms M. Maurice Paleologue, the shadow at Petrograd of Monsieur Poincaré.

The mobilization was directed solely, exclusively against Germany, who has no personal quarrel with Russia. It is upon the German frontier that are precipitated now the excess quotas of the 18 corps mobilized against Austria, an excess representing two-thirds of the forces of the Muscovite Empire.

This act of aggression aims ostensibly at binding all France with the force of an accomplished fact, and its aim is also to make sure through France of the association of England—briefly, to unchain that European war concerning which Monsieur Sazonoff held forth before the Russian imperial council last February.

Now, these bits of evidence Petrograd disputes, Paris denies, London holds back, each being thus true to its own method of carrying out the imposture.

It is Berlin which began it, Monsieur Sazonoff dares to say. Some Russian travelers, stutters the representative of the Bridge of Singers (Russian Foreign Office), some Russian travelers observed, through the doors of trains rushing ahead at full speed, military manifestations of an unusual sort on the Russo-German frontier.

While Sir George Buchanan (British minister at Petrograd) imputes to Austria—"who decided not to rely on the intervention of the powers"—responsibility for the Russian general mobilization, Monsieur Paleologue authenticates the Sazonoff plausibilities by reversing rôles and terms:

"Because of the general mobilization by Austria and because of mobilization measures secretly taken but continued uninterruptedly by Germany for the last six days! . . .

"For imperative strategical reasons the Russian Government could no longer—knowing that Germany was arming—delay the conversion of its partial mobilization into a general mobilization."

The words "knowing that" become, through the pen of the British ambassador, "has also reason to believe." Hence "Russia, having also reason to believe in the active military preparations of Germany, can not afford to let her get a start."

The simple testimony of a neutral diplomat, representing a country without immediate ambitions, gives the measure of the duplicity of the sycophants and accomplices at the instigation of their respective governments, as well as the measure of the duplicity of the government of the Czar. The witness in question is the Baron de l'Escaille, Belgian chargé d'affaires, to whom Monsieur Paleologue, in conversation with Monsieur Sazonoff, referred on July 28—three days before—in these terms: "Only yesterday Pourtales (German ambassador to Russia) assured the minister from Holland and the Belgian chargé d'affaires that Russia would yield and that it would mean a triumph for the Triple Alliance (combination of Germany, Austria, and Italy)." Nevertheless, the Belgian diplomat reported yesterday (30th) to his Government:

"Germany—this is incontestable—has striven as much here (St. Petersburg) as at Vienna to find some means of avoiding a general conflict."

He proceeded:

"This morning an official communication to the press announced a call to arms of the reservists of a certain number of governments. Knowing the discretion of official communications, one may boldly affirm that there is mobilization everywhere. . . .

"To-day they are firmly persuaded at St. Petersburg—they have even the assurance—that England will support France. This support is an enormous weight and has contributed not a little to give the upper hand to the war party. . . .

"The Russian Government has given during these last few days free rein to all pro-Serbian manifestations and displays of hostility to Austria."

VII.—AN ADDLED AMBASSADOR.

Nobility obliging him, His Imperial Majesty, Nicholas II, breaks all the records of Monsieur Sazonoff for impudence.

The Kaiser (William II) telegraphed yesterday to the Czar:

"If—as is now the case according to your communication and that of your government—Russia mobilizes against Austria, the part of mediator, with which you have amicably charged me and which I accepted at your entreaty, will be difficult, if not impossible. All the burden for making the decision rests now upon your shoulders, which will have to support the responsibility of either peace or war."

This telegram is now under the very eyes of the Czar, who has actually read it, when Monsieur Sazonoff makes his appearance and implores his master to recall the order suspending the general mobilization.

Now, to-day, at 55 minutes past 2 o'clock (eastern time) when hundreds of trains are vomiting warriors upon the German frontier, Nicky replies thus to Willy (Berlin, 2.52 p. m.):

"I thank you with all my heart for your mediation, which begins to inspire hope that all may yet end peaceably."

"Technically it is impossible for us to suspend our military preparations which have been imposed upon us by the mobilization of Austria. We are far from desiring war. As long as the negotiations of Austria with Serbia last, my troops will be guilty of no act of provocation. I give you my word of honor for that. I place all my hope in the help of God, and hope that your mediation at Vienna will be crowned with success for the good of our two countries and for the peace of Europe."

Nicholas II refers in the dispatch signed with his own hand to negotiations not yet broken off with Austria. In effect, Count Szapary (Austro-Hungarian ambassador in Russia) went to-day (in obedience to instructions received yesterday and although he deemed those instructions annulled by the last Russian mobilization decision) to see Monsieur Sazonoff.

The Austrian ambassador is much embarrassed.

He has instructions, he says, but they are prior to the general Russian mobilization, the effects of which upon the designs of the Ballplatz (Austrian foreign office) he can not tell.

"Vienna was disposed, more particularly, to submit the text of the note to discussion to the extent it may be necessary to interpret the text."

A last vestige of shame keeps Monsieur Sazonoff from saying roundly to Count Szapary, as he said yesterday to the Czar, that "the work of diplomacy is finished"; that he personally gave the corps of diplomats their dismissal.

"I take note," he merely remarked, "of this mark of good will."

But, "for reasons easy to surmise," negotiations with St. Petersburg would be inopportune. It will be necessary to "initiate them on a neutral ground, in London."

"I beg your pardon," replies the dazed ambassador, "my instructions simply direct personal contact."

VIII.—INCREDIBLE IMPUDENCE.

Thus Monsieur Sazonoff breaks off at present negotiations decided upon by Czar Nicholas for the future.

He refers Vienna to Grey the very day—piquant irony—that minister at the British Foreign Office writes to Sir George Buchanan:

"I learn with great satisfaction that discussions are renewed with Austria and Russia. Convey this sentiment of mine to the minister of foreign affairs and say to him that I ardently hope he will favor these negotiations."

When dismissing the members of the diplomatic corps, M. Sazonoff thought he would erase his somewhat capricious formulas from their minds. In that very same way he had hoped to neutralize—through the medium of the suggestion conveyed to Count Pourtales—Grey's suggestion of the 29th (July). But Grey was afraid of the sudden attack of Sazonoff. He suggests a preliminary procedure:

"The Russian ambassador informs me"—

He telegraphs to Sir George Buchanan—

"of the conditions set down by M. Sazonoff and fears that they can not be modified. But if Austria were to come to a halt after the occupation of Belgrade I think that the formula of the minister could be modified; it might mention that the powers would examine how Serbia might fully satisfy Austria without alienating her sovereign rights and independence."

"If Austria, having occupied Belgrade and the neighboring Serbian territory, declares herself ready, in the interest of European peace, to halt her advance and to discuss how a complete arrangement might be reached, I hope Russia would likewise consent to discuss and to suspend all exterior military preparation provided the other powers do the same."

IX.—"ON TO BERLIN!"

"I accept the English proposition"—

Replies M. Sazonoff, addressing Count Benckendorff (Russian ambassador in London)—

"I transmit you the formula modified in consequence."

"If Austria consents to halt the advance of her armies into Serbian territory, and if, recognizing that the Austro-Serbian conflict has assumed the nature of a question of general European concern, she consents to let the great powers examine the satisfaction Serbia might accord the Austro-Hungarian Government without letting her own sovereign rights and her independence be compromised, Russia pledges herself to maintain a waiting attitude."

The "modifications in consequence," radical as they were, of the text of Grey, permit M. Sazonoff to give a new aspect to his ultimatum of yesterday.

The minister sets his vote upon an eventual occupation by Vienna of Belgrade, grants the Triple Entente (England, France, Russia) the privilege of announcing or of passing judgment upon the satisfaction Serbia "might" accord.

Meanwhile Russia would maintain an expectant attitude but would not undo the freshly accomplished fact—still only a project when Grey addressed his revision to St. Petersburg—she would not attack, but she would not demobilize. She would still empty her immense reservoirs upon her western frontier and would be at last mistress of the occasion.

X.—THAT "MOMENT" COMES.

At sight of the monster foisted upon him by M. Sazonoff, Sir Edward Grey does not falter.

He will even go the length to-morrow of presenting to Europe the caricature of his own suggestion of the 29th under the title of "formula amended in conformity with the English proposition."

The temperature of the Foreign Office, low this morning and in the course of the day, rises suddenly this evening.

Grey subordinated every engagement to "a fresh development of the situation." He postponed to the moment "when the attitude of Germany would be known" the instant of the clash with Germany. The "new development" contemplated has occurred. St. Petersburg has created the irreparable. Russia and Germany are already virtually in a state of war.

Sir Edward Grey weaves the web with which he has been equipped by the astute Mr. Asquith, a web silken enough to capture and strong enough to imprison the Germanic eagles and eaglets.

"Are you ready," he asks both Berlin and Paris, "to respect Belgian neutrality if no other power violates it?"

"Will you remain neutral," inquired Prince Lichnowsky, German ambassador in London, "if we engage to respect the neutrality of Belgium?"

"I can't say that," Grey will reply.

Having put the double question to which it knows with certainty that a double reply will be made, the foreign office addresses to Brussels its imperative invitation to "maintain with a maximum of her power a neutrality which it wishes and considers that the powers will proclaim and observe."

In addition to his misleading appreciations of the course of the jingo press and of the embarrassment of Grey, Count Benckendorff, Russian ambassador in London, who several times a day consulted the thermometer of London feeling, addressed to St. Petersburg these lines, exalting his own velled uneasiness:

"It is confirmed to-day that Parliament would be unable to define its policy for the time being. The Serbian crisis does not interest the public and all financial, commercial, and industrial circles in the north of England are opposed to war."

M. Sazonoff alone would be able to say if—assuming that no later information came to counteract the pessimism of this dispatch—he might not have given to the German invitation to demobilize, in the interval allowed him by this eleventh-hour intimation, another response than that of the artillery.

Some hours later the Russian minister, resuming his good spirits, was confident.

London has just received notice of the proclamation in Berlin of "a state of peril threatening war."

The "moment" foreseen by Grey was on the dawn of the horizon.

The Russian ambassador rushed to the telegraph wire.

"I ask urgent instructions," he apprises M. Sazonoff. "Events may evolve so quickly that all immature judgment regarding the attitude of England at this moment might prove prejudicial and might paralyze in a very special manner Grey himself, whose influence may be restored in a few hours."

XI—BEFUDDLED BERLIN.

To flourish against Russia in a state of war the wooden sword labeled "state of threatened war" was a dilatory Berlin method devised by a doubtful tactical and strategical opportunism.

At any rate, by having recourse to this expedient Berlin behaved in a manner calculated to forestall irrefutably all malign confusion of causes with their effects. Berlin established fully its own position as the party attacked, able to prevent Paris, London, or Rome from equivocating about such things as clauses known or unknown in treaties considered as defensive instruments. Berlin comments in this wise:

Russia, who drew the sword, does not sheath it again, her culpability will be proved to the hilt.

Paris, edified, must show her colors plainly.

London must satisfy itself with the dissection of formulas calling for peace as if it were demonstrable like a laboratory product.

Rome must admit the force of conventions that bind her by treaty.

Every effusion written at the Wilhelmstrasse from this day forward tends to make this quadruple argument.

XII—TRAPPING RUSSIA INTO IT.

The official papers of the Quai d'Orsay inform us regarding the action of M. Poincaré and M. Viviani, the latter was Prime Minister at Paris when the war broke out) on this dire day—July 31—exactly as the thunder, the flashes of lightning, and the burning bush informed Moses regarding the aspect of Jehovah.

Upon the very threshold of these papers is a massive mendacity, a double-mouthed lie, the first of which maintains silence on the subject of the general Russian mobilization, while the second denies it.

Years must elapse before this lie, the heights of which obscure the vision—block the horizon, indeed—will be displaced, thrown out of the picture.

In it may be found, when it is examined closely, a war expedient of which the affinities and the direct relation with the advice given yesterday by M. Messimy, official lackey of France, to the military attaché at the Russian Embassy, are now evident.

Foreseeing in November of 1912 an Austrian-Serb conflict, M. Poincaré said to Izvolski:

"Upon Russia devolves the duty of assuming the initiative in a question which concerns her chiefly. The function of France is to afford her most effective aid."

The conflict then outlined did not arise really until 1914, because Russia consented then only "to take the initiative," which was to have for its effect, among "other international shocks," that of forcing Germany to defend her position in Europe.

This incidental reaction was the only thing that in 1912 or in 1913 interested M. Poincaré, head of his government.

It is the only one which to-day (July 31, 1914) interests the successor (Viviani) found by M. Poincaré for himself (as Prime Minister).

Hence, from the very opening of the crisis, that aspect, that purely strategical movement imparted by the French Government to its political and diplomatic action.

This action, anticipating events, going ahead of them even, is already impregnated with the spirit of war, so informed with that spirit that it does away with all delicacies, deceptions, and the conventional candor and honesty of language in peace time, freeing itself from all ordinary scruples.

M. Poincaré does not burden his toasts at St. Petersburg (he was visiting the Czar when the great crisis broke) with any allusion to the human reason or to the morality of history, and he did not hesitate, to subserve his warlike purpose, to transform the Baron von Schoen (German ambassador at Paris) into a rascal.

M. Viviani deceived France then by representing her as fixed by her acts in favor of the equilibrium of Europe ("notably in the East") and he piled Pelion upon Ossa to evade the evidence of his frenzy for perversions of the truth.

XIII—BACKING AWAY FROM THE FRONTIER.

The maneuvers of the French Government have a triple object in view.

Abroad it must second the Muscovite mechanism for the release of a general war in Europe, assure the Franco-Russian group of the positive support of England, besides insuring—no empty effort—the neutrality of Rome.

At home it was necessary to inflate France with a hypnotic moral courage, with which the fluency of M. Poincaré had already equipped Nicholas II, the Grand Duchesses, the diplomats, the general of Czarist Russia.

The results attained to-day in Russia by the general staffs of the Allies will not prove vain.

Thanks to that method of deception which consists in increasing armaments while pretending to decrease them, and so falsify military oaths, the gain in time for Russia is enormous. The Russian Army is ready to attack, in accordance with the spirit of the military accord of 1911, immediately.

By means of this maneuver of attack—this will yet be sworn to in 1920 before the high court by the French negotiator of this very accord, General Dubail—Russia "allowed France to gain the Battle of the Marne."

On the English side also the strategy of the Quai d'Orsay, seconded by Grey, is bearing fruit now almost ripe, but Paris must still ascend higher to reach and pluck it.

The hopes of the French Government here have as their basis the letters exchanged in 1912.

Now, the spirit of those documents enjoins that Government to do nothing—in case it cites them for its advantage—like a parade of an aggressive mood.

Elysée and Quai d'Orsay, understanding or feigning to understand the admonition in these documents, displayed for the benefit of the British people the farce of an aggression toward and the similar farce of a regression from their own frontier.

For this M. Viviani will yet take credit in the Chamber of Deputies after the armistice (January 31, 1919) without blinking its meaning at all. He will actually yet talk about it—giving evidence against M. Caillaux—to the high court and to the universe in these terms of a most disarming inebility:

"As for myself, I formed the resolution to retire 10 kilometers [from the frontier] to show the English Government the pacific spirit of France. It was essential to give that Government a feeling that we were not jingoes?"

XIV—FOOLING THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

It was essential, both to manage England and to play a trick upon her, so as not to disoblige St. Petersburg—"compromising France with Russia."

Hence the Government for the time being adheres noisily to the suggestions of Grey, but only when it is convinced of their emptiness and vanity from the very beginning and of their hostility to Austria.

So the titular government, set up again (after the political crisis at Paris) makes Grey acquainted with its urgent advice to Sazonoff not to afford Germany pretexts for mobilization, the advice being given to Sazonoff when he is fully aware of the unreality of this counsel, to which, moreover, M. Sazonoff will have good reason to give an esoteric interpretation.

Accordingly, M. Viviani gives his patronage to the final undertakings of London to-day (July 31, 1914) just as if they were in harmony with his own plans—which they interfere with and conflict with.

The head of the Government therefore engages St. Petersburg with a communication made to him in the form of a note by Sir Francis Bertie (British ambassador in Paris). It deals with (1) Grey's suggestion of the 29th, (2) the formula of M. Sazonoff of the 30th, (3) the same formula revised by Grey.

M. Viviani recommends the latter to the consideration of M. Sazonoff, deeming it of a nature "to give satisfaction equally to Russia and to Austria and to contrive for Serbia an acceptable way out of the present difficulty."

XV.—WHAT!

But what now! It was on the 31st day of July that M. Viviani addressed to M. Sazonoff this new language, making mention of a passage in the English note revealing the intervention of Berlin at Vienna!

He did not then know of the first formula of Grey—that of the 29th. Grey, who has no secret from M. Paul Cambon (French ambassador) or from Sir Arthur Nicholson (undersecretary at the Foreign Office), in whose confidence the ambassador is—could Grey actually not have informed the French representative of his initiative, or, rather, of his qualified approbation of the initiative of Berlin? Not merely, then, did Grey not do this, but even the French representative, assuming that he had been so informed by Grey, did not transmit the communication to his Government.

What!

M. Viviani knew nothing before this day of the procedure undertaken by the Wilhelmstrasse at the Ballplatz, of which, none the less, the ambassador of France at Vienna talked with his English colleague, and to which M. Jules Cambon (French ambassador at Berlin) made certain allusions, though in disabliging terms.

What!

M. Viviani received yesterday the English note from the hands of Sir Francis Bertie, and he put off until to-day, "pledging instantly M. Sazonoff to give at once his adhesion to the proposition of Sir Edward Grey, of which on his side he had been fully informed.

What!

Again, has not M. Viviani "on his side" been informed of the last formula of M. Sazonoff intended to make weight yesterday at Paris against the effect of the first formula of Grey of the day before yesterday?

The Russian minister telegraphed its text to Izvolski (Russian ambassador at Paris).

And is M. Viviani unaware at the moment he addresses himself to-day to M. Sazonoff of the miserable caricature his colleague has already drawn of the text "of which he must have been informed on his side"?

XVI.—WAR HYSTERIA.

The dispatch of the Quai d'Orsay reveals, in the choice of the hour for sending it, a profound diplomatic duplicity and is in itself, for another reason conspicuously, an insulting comedy.

M. Viviani knows, when he decides to do it, that M. Sazonoff has driven the diplomats from the scene of the intrigue. All the "recommendations" possible are hypocritical or belated superfluities. The period of diplomacy is at an end.

Russia has established a state of war with Germany.

The measure of the duplicity of the French Government affirms itself moreover and gives itself away the moment M. Viviani—having taken the step advised by the Foreign Office and of which he apprises it—turns again to France and explains himself to her.

These explanations have military objects in view like those of the department of war. They tend, with other expedients of a psychological nature, to convert—thanks to that state of hallucination, collective and complacent, foreseen by Bismarck, Ribot, and Poincaré—every Balkan-Russian conflict, every Austro-Russian conflict, every Turco-Russian conflict into a quarrel of Germany with France.

Monsieur Viviani, who wishes, as he will say at the end of the war, that France refrain from "fighting for something in doubt," who wishes his "soldier citizens" to know why they are fighting, recites to-day a page of that eternal catechism with which the state, at the dawn of every war, assumes that it is exclusively in the right and places all the blame on the other side and proves to a people which has no reason to make war that it has every reason to slaughter and be slaughtered.

Luckier than the Russian mujiks of the Czar, the soldier citizens will know to-morrow why they go forth to die.

Hail, Viviani!—being about to die, they salute you!

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows and to certain Spanish War soldiers, and certain maimed soldiers, and for other purposes.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, when we adjourned on Friday I was discussing some amendments to this bill. In fact, I had offered several amendments which were voted down. I was attempting to hold down the amounts of pensions to be paid able-bodied soldiers of the Civil War and to increase pensions to be paid to disabled soldiers of the Spanish-American War. It seems that that proposition did not receive any favor at the hands of the Senate.

I can not understand why this Government should discriminate between the veterans of different wars. There is nothing too good for a Government to do for its wounded or disabled of any war and their dependents; but to my mind it is a wrong policy to increase pensions to be paid to the able-bodied soldiers of the Civil War. The peak of those payments should have been reached before this.

There are various other inequalities in this proposed act. I want to renew some of my efforts to see if the Senate now cares to equalize these payments on a more equitable basis, and whether or not Senators have any sympathy whatever for the taxpayers of this country.

I was asked on Friday, just before we adjourned, if I thought the President of the United States would veto this bill if it were passed, and I replied to that question at that time. I want to reply further to it now by saying that if Congress would do its duty there would be no necessity for the President of the United States to veto a bill. I am one legislator who believes that each branch of the Government, and every individual of the Government, ought to assume its and his own responsibility, and not pass it on to some one else. I detest the practice of avoiding responsibility, of shirking responsibility, and letting some one else assume a responsibility and perform a duty which the people elected us to perform. As I said the other day, it was thought a long time ago that there would be no more requests along this line. Now I want to appeal to the fairness of the Senate, and to urge the Senate not now to put an additional burden of $22 per month on the people in favor of able-bodied Union soldiers of the Civil War.

I desire to move to amend, on page 1, line 3, after the word "any," by inserting the words "indigent or incapacitated."

I hope the Senate will understand this amendment. At present these able-bodied soldiers of the Civil War are drawing pensions of $50 a month. In the name of common honesty and fairness and right, is not that enough of a pension? Senators seem to think there is something about a Yankee pension that is sacred, or something about it that can not be spoken of above a whisper. How much more is it desired that they be paid? It is not a question of whether they are wounded and not a question of whether they are in straitened circumstances. They may be rolling in wealth for all we know, and no doubt many of them are. It is not necessary that they should have been in a battle, but simply for the name it is asked that we go ahead and increase what they are already drawing by $22 a month. I trust Congress will not give that class of soldiers an increase. That has no reference to the injured or disabled. It applies merely to the able-bodied, sound soldiers.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, it is evident that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is introduced in a spirit of levity and ridicule. The granting of pensions to the dependents of the country, to my mind, is a serious matter. The Senator has referred to the veterans as being possessed of no sacred cause. I say that the obligation of a government to its defenders, and to take care of them, is a sacred obligation, and the government that fails to take care of its defenders is not worthy of being defended. I hope this amendment will be defeated.

The Senator from South Carolina a day or two ago characterized this bill as a robbery. On Friday he proposed amendments to the bill which would have increased its cost by $25,000,000.

Mr. DIAL. I did say, Mr. President, that this bill was legislative robbery so far as able-bodied Union soldiers are concerned, but the amendment I offered was not to pay the able-bodied soldiers but was to pay more to the Spanish-American War wounded and disabled soldiers who now draw much less than do the able-bodied soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. BURSUM. The amendments offered by the Senator were precisely the same as the provisions contained in the bill. The elements of disability as to the Spanish War are identically the same with those of the Civil War. There is no difference. The service pension does not commence until the pensioner reaches the age of 68 years. The Spanish-American War soldier will receive just as much as the Civil War veteran receives when he arrives at the age of 68. There is no difference.

Mr. DIAL. I was speaking about the amounts they draw now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. On page 2, line 6, I move to strike out "$72" and insert "$51." That applies to the able-bodied Civil War soldiers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. On page 2, line 16, before the word "years," I move to strike out the word "sixty" and to insert the word "sixty-six." The object of this amendment is to prevent an increase in the pensions of the widows of the Civil War veterans until they reach the age of 66 years. I have a schedule before me in the report on the bill, on page 14, of which is given some interesting information. It says:

Civil War widows now on the roll and the ages thereof.

There are 488 of the age of 42. It shows that those widows were not born until 17 years after the war.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, of course the Senator understands that those widows are not affected by this bill. They are given no raise in the bill.

Mr. DIAL. If they are dependents, they get a raise under the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. No; they get no raise whatever.

Mr. DIAL. What age do they have to attain before they become entitled to a raise?

Mr. BURSUM. Sixty years; then they will get a raise of $5.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do they get any pension under previous legislation?

Mr. BURSUM. This bill does not interfere with those who are on the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator means they do not get any increase?

Mr. BURSUM. They get no increase whatever.

Mr. DIAL. I thought there was an increase for that class of widows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. DIAL. I withdraw that amendment.

On page 6, section 5, line 10, after the word "marine," I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Carolina that section 5 was an amendment, which was agreed to, and the vote by which it was agreed to will have to be reconsidered before this amendment can be offered.

Mr. DIAL. I gave notice the other day that I would move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment inserting section 5 was agreed to, and I now so move.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. DIAL. I now offer the amendment, the object of which is to put the widows of veterans of the Spanish-American War on an equality with widows of veterans of other wars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 10, in the amendment, after the word "marine," the Senator from South Carolina moves to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provision in this section shall apply to widows and dependents of those who served during the war with Spain and the Philippine insurrection, between April 1, 1898, and July 4, 1902.

Mr. BURSUM. I will say to the Senator that the section does apply to those. It not only applies to widows of the Spanish-American veterans, but it applies to widows of Civil War veterans and those of veterans of the Regular Army. It makes uniform the allowance for children, allowing $8 for each child, while under the present law there is a gross discrimination. The child of the veteran of the Regular Establishment receives $2, the child of the Spanish War veteran receives $4, the child of the Civil War veteran $6, and the child of the World War veteran $10. This would give the child of the veteran of any war $8, so that the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina would not be necessary.

Mr. DIAL. I do not so read the language, and I insist on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURSUM. Before we leave section 5 there is one word in that section that I desire to have stricken out, the word "additional." Whether it might be construed as an additional allowance to the present allowance provided by law, I am not sure. I do not think that it would, but it might be better to cut out the word "additional." Therefore I move to strike out the word "additional" at the end of line 7 on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 7, before the word "allowance," strike out the word "additional," so as to read:

Shall be paid an allowance, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from New Mexico if he desires to strike out the word "additional" in line 11?

Mr. BURSUM. I think so.

Mr. FESS. I am of the opinion that the word "additional" ought to come out in line 11.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; to make it conform to line 7. I move that the word "additional" be stricken out in line 11.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I move to amend by striking out all of section 6 beginning in line 13, on page 6, down to line 12, on page 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from South Carolina proposes to strike out lines 13 to 25, inclusive, on page 6, and lines 1 to 12, inclusive, on page 7, being the whole section 6.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this section would bring in the militia of the different States. It occurs to me to be a very loose way to draw up a bill. There is nothing here to inform the Senate about how many people would be brought in under the provision of the bill. If we are to enact such legislation, we would have to go outside to find out how many would be covered, so far as the wording of the bill is concerned. It seems to me to be a very poor policy indeed to go back and bring in an entirely new class of pensioners. I do not see what possible claim a man has for a pension simply because he was on the list of a military company in his county or State, but rendered no service of consequence to the Government. We might just as well go out and pension everybody who was of military age and who lived in that zone. It seems to me that is the principle of pensions run mad, without any balance wheel at all, and without any view to the condition of the Treasury, and without any sympathy for the people who will have to pay the bill. It is entirely unnecessary, and unquestionably out of place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. On page 7, line 1, after the word "persons" I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 1, after the word "persons" insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of this act shall not apply to any officer or enlisted man who is an inmate of any national home for disabled volunteer soldiers.

Mr. DIAL. In all fairness I insist that the amendment ought to be agreed to. There is no ground of justice, no ground of humanity to justify coming here and claiming that soldiers who are confined in the homes supported by the Government, clothed, fed, and cared for in the most magnificent manner, soldiers who were not wounded at all, soldiers who are already drawing $50 a month, men who are hale, hearty, and strong, should receive an increased pension of $22 per month. If the amendment does not prevail I do not see that there is any use to raise one's voice against any amount that is proposed to be appropriated for this or similar purposes. It seems to me Congress would just as well give them $500 a month apiece or $5,000 a month or just as much as his gall would permit any Senator to get up on the floor and propose to ask for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. I move, on page 9, line 18, after the word "month," to strike out the balance of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 9 as an amendment, the present occupant of the chair is informed, has already been agreed to. It is necessary, therefore, to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I believe we voted on that Friday. I had overlooked that, and therefore withdraw my amendment. On page 10, section 10, line 9, after the word "roll," I move to strike out down to the word "who," on line 10, so as to read:

That from and after the passage of this act all persons now on the pension roll who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in line of duty, shall have lost, etc.

Under this special bill, where we are increasing the amount of pensions, it is proposed to pass general legislation affecting wars hereafter. It occurs to me that the proposition was not well digested and carefully considered. Perhaps the words "and all persons hereafter granted a pension" ought not to be in this special act, or what is in the nature of a special act. I therefore move to strike out those words.

Mr. BURSUM. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that no pension can be granted under section 10, to which the Senator has proposed an amendment, except on account of disability incurred in line of duty. It relates to maimed soldiers, those who have lost a foot or a leg or an arm.

Mr. DIAL. That is not the point I am making. I am making the point that this is legislating for future wars.

Mr. BURSUM. But suppose a veteran has made no application and is eligible and incurred the disability in line of duty, are we to debar him from making application at any time? That would be unjust.

Mr. DIAL. It would be anomalous if he had not already applied for a pension.

Mr. BURSUM. There may be many such cases.

Mr. DIAL. The war is over.

Mr. BURSUM. In no event can any pension be secured under section 7, except that the disability shall have been incurred in line of duty.

Mr. DIAL. It is legislation for future wars, and I do not think we ought to enact any such legislation.

Mr. BURSUM. It has nothing to do with future wars. It only applies to the wars of the past.

Mr. DIAL. I insist on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. On page 11, line 8, after the word "act," I move to strike out down to and including the semicolon, on line 15, on line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 8, after the word "act," strike out down to and including the semicolon, on line 15, in the following words:

and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions after the approval of this act in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, after the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has been in the Senate a few years longer he will discover that no matter what efforts he puts forth in the interest of economy or efficiency he will meet with defeat and his propositions will be treated apathetically if not derisively by many of his colleagues on both sides of the Chamber. He will meet with no encouragement in his patriotic efforts to reduce expenditure, diminish the number of bureaus and officeholders in the Federal Government. I can speak with some knowledge after my seven years' experience in this body. I confess that I have been disillusioned and do not look forward with any great confidence to the enactment of legislation that will effect these reforms in the public service or reduce the expenditures of the Federal Government. Candor compels me to state that my own party is not as loyal to the principles of Democracy as it should be, and too often lends its support to ill-conceived measures promoted by Republicans and by persons and organizations hostile to a proper interpretation of the Constitution of the United States. There seems to be no landmarks to guide our course and no fixed and fundamental principles to which we give loyal and unyielding support.

Mr. President, Senators and Representatives have won their seats in the National Legislature by their eloquent defense of honest government, of economy in the administration of public affairs, and in unswerving devotion to the principles of Jefferson and Jackson. They have pledged their efforts to a rectification of the evils existing in the Government, but they have discovered, when victory has come to them and they have sought to apply their prelection pledges to the legislation and measures brought to their attention, that they were hopeless against the forces behind the same.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I desire to say to the Senator that I was not at all disappointed, for I remember the Biblical maxim that "He who expecteth nothing shall not be deceived."

Mr. KING. I am glad that the Senator from South Carolina is a student of the Bible and that he seeks to interpret many of its passages in a literal way. I can not quite vouch for the accuracy of his quotation, but I am sure the Senator appreciates the thought which the passage to which he refers seeks to elucidate. I am also sanguine that the longer the Senator serves in this body the more certain will be that if he expects through his efforts to secure legislative reform and economy and a reduction in the number of Federal bureaus and the personnel thereof, insuperable obstacles will defeat his purpose if they do not conquer his militant spirit.

But, Mr. President, speaking most seriously, I take this occasion to express my profound regret that both political parties are too indifferent to the burdens of taxation which have been placed upon the people and treat with too little concern measures which call for enormous appropriations, and regard too often with a superciliousness that might properly be denominated contempt the efforts of earnest and sincere persons who are fighting against the wave of extravagance which sweeps through Congress and inundates the land.

It is a rare thing for an appropriation bill to be reduced and an almost unprecedented thing for one to be defeated. Federal appropriations have increased several hundred per cent over those of 1916 and 1917, and there is nothing in the present situation or in the attitude of the Senate which augurs relief for the future or any progress in the direction of national economy or governmental efficiency. Unfortunately, Senators and Representatives or public officials who are working for a reduction in expenses of the General Government not only find no encouragement from the people but, generally speaking, they are the objects of criticism and oftentimes of cruel misrepresentation. When an appropriation measure is challenged those who are beneficiaries under its provisions arouse a hundred agencies and soon forces are unloosed which overwhelm all opposition to the measure.

There must be a change in public opinion before there will be a change in Congress. So long as the public are clamoring for enormous appropriations, oftentimes regardless of constitutional limitations, and so long as the success of public officials is measured by their ability to obtain money from the Federal Treasury, the evil of which I am speaking will continue and the appropriations of Congress will be augmented and the burden of taxation, of necessity, will be increased. When the people will fully realize that there must be taxation when there is appropriation, and when they feel the whip of the tax gatherer, there may be an awakening and a demand, a sincere and honest one, for economy in public affairs.

Mr. President, with the taxes of the people increasing in the States and political subdivisions of the States as well as in the Federal Government, with the most serious depression carrying the farmers to disaster, it would be supposed that the public conscience would be aroused against the abuse of the taxing power and the extravagant and indefensible appropriations made by the Federal and State Governments.

Unfortunately, there are too many who seem to believe that the cure for the financial and industrial ills from which the country suffers is to multiply the appropriations, increase the number of offices, multiply the number of office holders, and expand the functions and powers of both the Federal and the State Governments. It may be that some clear-thinking people, who appreciate the unwisdom of the present course of both parties in the matter of taxation and appropriations and who comprehend the proper functions of government, will organize another party which will call the people back to safe and secure paths and to the adoption of policies which will protect individual rights, as well as the rights of the people to control their domestic affairs.

A government well conceived may become a Frankenstein and devour its supporters. Who shall say that it would not be of advantage to the people of the United States if a new party were organized, pledged to promote the interests of the people, to bring about economies and efficiency in the Federal and in the State Governments, and consecrated to the maintenance of the States and the protection of the people against the invasions of State and Federal Government—in other words, a constitutional party, a party that recognizes that the power is in the people, and that government may only exercise that authority which the people have conferred upon it?

I notice my good friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] and understand that he is connected with a political party which contends that both of the great political parties of the United States have failed in their mission. If he and others will organize a party based upon secure foundation, upon a recognition of the rights of individuals, and pledged to a preservation of the rights of the States and the maintenance of our Government as designed by the fathers, then there will be many to wish him and his associates God-speed and success. The advent of a party so organized and with such a purpose would be acclaimed by many patriotic citizens of this Republic.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the Senator from Utah join such a new party if we shall organize one? [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I must withhold any reply until I see a political party measuring up to the standards which I have indicated, but I can say with all frankness to the Senator that a political party organized upon rational and sane lines, devoted to the preservation of this Republic and to the preservation of the Constitution and to the maintenance of the States as indestructible sovereign entities and which recognizes the reserved rights of the people, and a party which demonstrates its competency to deal with the great political and economic problems of the hour, will, I am sure, receive accessions from both the Republican and Democratic Parties and will grow in power and influence. What its future might be no one can determine, but it is certain that many of the American people are dissatisfied with both political parties. There is a feeling in various parts of our country that existing political parties have deviated from the paths of safety and have failed to uphold the traditions and policies of the fathers of the Republic.

Mr. President, an examination of the appropriation bills, with their lavish expenditures, must produce a feeling of depression, a feeling that those charged with solemn responsibilities have not carefully guarded the interests of the people. It is but a few years ago that the expenses of the Federal Government were less than a billion dollars annually. For the next fiscal year they will, in my opinion, amount to between five and seven billions of dollars—that is to say, the direct appropriations—and the commitments which will be required to be met will approximate the figures I have stated. With the growing demands made upon the Federal Government, one is almost safe in predicting that we will never again see an annual Budget providing for less than $5,000,000,000; and the spirit of depression, to which I have referred, will be strengthened if one examines the budgets of our States and their various political subdivisions. During the past five years their appropriations have increased from 167 to 300 per cent. The aggregate appropriations of the Federal and State Governments, including the appropriations made by counties, cities, and school districts, for the fiscal year 1924 will exceed, as I now recall the figures, $10,000,000,000. This sum is so stupendous that the finite mind can scarcely grasp it. It would require the sale of all the property to be found within a number of States to discharge this huge tax burden, a burden which is imposed but for one year. And the spirit which now seems to animate legislative bodies as well as many of the people will compel an increase in these appropriations so that the burdens will annually become heavier upon the oppressed people of our country.

Senators have stated upon the floor of this body that agriculture is depressed, that farms are being sold for taxes, and that ruin and disaster threaten the greatest industry of our land. A few days ago, during the debate upon an agricultural bill, it was stated that in one section of our country 40 per cent of the farms had been sold for taxes during the past year. Notwithstanding the evidences of depression, and notwithstanding the low wages received by the farmers and many classes of people in private employment, Congress aggravates the situation by the enormous appropriations which it almost daily makes, and by increasing the bureaus and Federal agencies which call for an increase personnel and millions of dollars to meet the annual charge for their maintenance.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator does not mean to tell us that appropriations by Congress increase taxes on the people, does he?

Mr. KING. The philosophy of some able statesmen seems to be that the more we spend the less the taxes will be.

Mr. DIAL. I thought so.

Mr. KING. It is a beautiful faith to have, but unfortunately it runs counter to human experience and to the hard facts of life. Of course, we can appropriate as Russia and Germany did, and issue paper money until astronomical figures are reached. When in Moscow a few months ago I discovered that the ruble had so little value that it could be said that it was practically worthless. A pair of shoes, as I recall, cost several trillion rubles, and no one but a billionaire (measured by rubles) could afford to visit the barber. I recall that a distinguished Senator stated quite recently, when the inquiry was made "where was the money to come from to meet the colossal expenditures of the Government," that "we can set the printing presses to work." I suppose, Mr. President, we can be relieved of taxation by setting the printing presses to work. I commend this statement of the distinguished Senator to my Democratic brethren, as well as to my Republican friends, who give their support to what I believe to be unnecessary and extravagant appropriation bills that are brought before this body for consideration. Of course, such a policy would bring to our country the chaos and destruction that have overtaken the industrial and economic life of European nations who have refused to balance their budgets and have carried socialistic heresies and paternalistic policies into their legislative program.

Mr. President, we need to-day leaders who will compel the people to return to the ways of sanity and safety, who will expose the heresies and fantastic measures which receive so much support but which will eventuate, if continued, in national ruin. Mr. President, we have imported into our land and fastened upon the people a monarchical policy—that of bounties and pensions for an army constantly increasing, with appetites insatiable. In the kingly governments of the past the many toiled to furnish pensions and bounties and largesses for the great army of officeholders and courtiers that infested the land and devoured the substance of the people.

But it is not my intention, Mr. President, to pursue this subject further. I rose merely to present to the Senate a few figures which I hastily compiled this morning in view of the pension bill which is now before us.

Up to December 31 of last year we had disbursed in military pensions more than $6,606,000,000. More than $6,000,000,000 of this huge sum was disbursed to pensioners of the Civil War.

In 1866 the total appropriations for pensions were only $15,000,000, but in 1923 they were $265,000,000.

The maximum number of pensioners on the rolls was reached in 1902, when the number was 909,446—but 554 less than 1,000,000.

Senators will recall the words of Mr. Garfield when he stated that the aggregate amount called for by way of pensions for soldiers of the Civil War never would exceed $27,000,000 per annum, and that when that sum was reached the tide would speedily recede. In the 20 years since that time—that is, since 1902—the number of Civil War pensioners has decreased nearly one-half, but the appropriations have nearly doubled in amount, so that upon a per capita basis the average disbursement to each pensioner at the present time is four times as great as obtained 20 years ago. The pending bill, upon the estimates furnished by the Secretary of the Interior, will cause the additional expenditure for 1925 of at least $55,000,000. Mr. President, I insist that a careful analysis of the bill before us, and an accurate computation of the accretions to the pension appropriation as a result of it, will prove the total to be nearer $75,000,000 than $55,000,000. This amounts to more than $100 per capita for the 539,756 pensioners carried on the pension rolls at the close of the year 1923.

Of the persons carried on the pension rolls at this time, 257,000 are widows of Civil War veterans. It has been practically 60 years since the close of the Civil War. We are told that the average age of Civil War veterans carried on the pension rolls is 904 years. Of the 237,000 widows on the rolls, only 137,000 are over 75 years of age, which leaves 220,000 who are under 75 years of age; and 197,000 of these widows are 70 years of age and over, which leaves 60,000 of them who were not more than mere children at the close of the Civil War, and many thousands who were born since the Civil War.

The pension laws allow a pensionable status to a widow who married a soldier 50 years after the war, at a time when the soldier could not have been less than 70 years of age, and when, it is claimed by many who oppose pensions, the only purpose of marrying such a soldier on the part of the woman concerned would be to create for herself a pensionable status, and to fasten herself upon the pension rolls in order to receive a bounty from the Government.

In this connection I call attention to the veto of a bill passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress. Its provisions were, with one or two exceptions, substantially the bill now before us. The bill passed the House and Senate and was sent to President Harding, who returned it to the Senate. In his veto message he said:

I am returning herewith Senate 3275, an act granting pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, etc., without my approval.

If the act were limited to its provisions in behalf of the surviving participants in the Mexican and Civil Wars and widows of the War of 1812, it would still be without ample justification.

The Commissioner of Pensions estimates its additional cost to the Treasury to be about $108,000,000 annually, and I venture the prediction that with such a precedent established the ultimate pension outlay in the half century before us will exceed $50,000,000,000.

Mr. President, may I pause to call attention to a statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], at the last session of Congress, in discussing the question of the cost of the pension and bonus policy of the United States. As I recall his statement (and I am speaking only from memory), it was to this effect; that within the next 50 years we would be compelled to pay in pensions, bounties, and bonuses $75,000,000,000. I have had a number of persons make computations, and have done some little figuring myself.

I have no doubt that the statement made by President Harding that there would be a pension outlay of more than $50,000,000,000 during the next half century is within the limits of certainty. Indeed, I believe that if the Government pursues its present policy it will during the next 50 years appropriate $75,000,000,000 as military or naval pensions and bonuses.

We will pass within a few days a so-called bonus bill that will impose upon the country a charge of between four and five billions of dollars, or perhaps more. It is impossible to determine the amount accurately. That will be only the beginning of the pensions and charges upon the Government that will result and will be met during the next 50 to 75 years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I trust that the figures which the Senator is giving for the pensions are more accurate than those he has just suggested for the bonus.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will not go to the Senator from New York for accuracy in regard to figures upon the bonus. He has exhibited such an optimism in his position upon this question, and without reason, that I should distrust any figures which he submitted in regard to the bonus. It might be wise if the Senator would diagnose this matter as he would diagnose the ailments of his patients; then he would be a little more accurate. Perhaps, not knowing his patients, I may not be speaking correctly there.

Mr. President, various figures have been submitted in regard to the bonus. I shall not pause to discuss them now, because that matter is not before us; but I have no doubt that during the next half century there will be charges upon the Treasury of the United States of more than the $50,000,000,000, as indicated by President Harding. We talk about the expenses of the war being over. We have scarcely commenced to pay the burdens of the great World War.

I pause at this point to inquire how we can expect relief for the farmers and the American people if we persist in extravagant appropriations—five and six and seven billions of dollars a year for Federal expenditures and from five to ten billions of dollars a year to meet the expenditures of the States.

Mr. President, all of the savings of all of the people of the United States will scarcely meet the appropriations of the National and State Governments. If by taxation the savings of the people are consumed, there will be no capital for investment, and without capital for investment we will have no railroads, no factories, none of those enterprises which are essential to the material welfare and prosperity of the country. How can the farmers of the United States, with their limited earnings—most of them earning less than $800 per annum—expect any relief if we persist in these enormous appropriations which press as heavy burdens upon them and upon the country?

But I shall return to the figures which I was submitting.

There are Civil War widows on the rolls to-day who are only 42 years of age. Many have said there is no moral reason why the Government should keep or maintain or contribute to the maintenance of those who marry a soldier after he is 60 years of age. I make no comment upon that matter. Such widows, it has been said by many, have no claim on the Government—at least no more than the hundreds of thousands of widows in the civil population of the country. Thousands of special bills are introduced at every session of Congress to pension widows who are the relicts of men who were not soldiers, but who in their widowhood have married old soldiers upward of 70 years of age. Such individuals, some may think, have no valid claim upon the Government; but the burden of military pensions, great as it has been and increasing as it will, is only the beginning of the burdens which are being projected upon the Government for the maintenance of persons who render the Government no military service.

We have passed a civil-service retirement law, and within the three years the law has been in operation nearly 10,000 persons have been retired upon annuities. On December 31, 1923, there were 544,671 persons in the classified civil service, all of whom are potentially eligible for retirement on annuities. That is, if they continue in the service until 55 years of age they will be eligible for retirement. The propaganda for retirement of civil servants is increasing, and the ambitious plans of these propagandists comprehend the retirement of all civil employees, both of the State and the Federal Governments. The census of 1920 reported 770,460 persons in public service under the classifications of firemen, guards, watchmen, doorkeepers, garbage men, scavengers, laborers, marshals, sheriffs, constables, detectives, probationary officers, truant officers, inspectors, postmasters, policemen, soldiers, sailors, marines, life-savers, lighthouse keepers, and other public officials. This total only includes the number of persons coming within the aforesaid classifications. It does not include the vast number of clerical and professional employees in the public service. The number of teachers in the schools was reported by the census of 1920 as numbering 761,793. These are not included in the census figures for the public service given as 770,460. The sum of these two items is 1,532,223. These specifications are not all inclusive. The National Industrial Conference Board of New York in its research report No. 61, published in October, 1923, estimated that there was a grand total of approximately 2,700,000 public servants for the entire country, and that the combined pay roll of salaries for the employees of Federal, State, and local governments approximates $3,500,000,000 annually.

In the same report it is estimated that the number of persons on public pension rolls and retirement rolls amounts to 670,600 and are the beneficiaries of an annual public outlay of $323,000,000. On this basis it is estimated that the aggregate number of active and inactive persons on Government pay, pension, and retirement rolls numbers close to 3,400,000 carried at an annual cost to the Government of $3,800,000,000. The potential pensions in this situation are so great as to be beyond ready comprehension. It is claimed that now 1 person in every 12, 16 years of age or over, is on some public pay, pension, or retirement roll. The number of persons who filed income-tax returns in 1921 was 6,662,170, but of these there were only 3,589,985 who reported net or taxable income and who were income taxpayers in the proper sense. The meaning of all this is that for every person who pays an income tax there is another person who is on some public pay, pension, or retirement roll. It may be said, therefore, Mr. President, that there is a tax eater for every taxpayer to the Federal Government.

An unparalleled example of Government waste and extravagance has been disclosed in the investigations which have been made of the Veterans' Bureau and its predecessor, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The lack of effectiveness in the relief measures which have been voted by Congress has been appalling. For every dollar the Government spends but relatively few cents reach the object for which the moneys are voted. Appropriations for the relief of the veterans of the late war, voted and supplied by Congress up to the end of the fiscal year 1923, amounted to the aggregate of $2,294,531,900.55. Claims for compensation in the total number of 980,286 at the end of the fiscal year had been filed. The appropriations amount to $2,400 for every claim that has been filed. The number of claims that have been allowed is 446,115. The appropriations made by Congress amount to $5,000 for each claim that has been allowed. The veterans who have received compensation and other benefits may know, each for himself, as to what part of the $5,000 expended out of public funds for his benefit has been of real benefit to him.

How much was lost through the inefficiency and the waste and extravagance of the bureaus and departments of the Government charged with this important responsibility?

The expenditures of the Veterans' Bureau for the fiscal year 1923 were $447,648,639. The active disability and death awards on June 30, 1923, were 238,424, and the expenditures for the fiscal year amount to $1,900 per capita when referred to the active disability and death claims. The average disability payments per month are $37.15 per capita; the average death payments per month are $25.65 per capita; the average payment per month is $31.40, and the average per year $376.80. The disabled veterans and the dependents of those who are dead accordingly receive an average of $376.80 per annum of money out of the $1,900 per capita which is expended by the bureau. The employees of the Veterans' Bureau at the end of the last fiscal year numbered 27,690, which means that there is one employee of one description or another for every eight men who are drawing compensation or whose dependents are receiving relief from the Government.

The average payment for each beneficiary is $376.80 per year. The average salary to employees is five times this sum. The picture is not overdrawn in this statement, and I have merely brought out the salient points which must be considered if we are to have a true visualization of the situation.

The appropriations made by Congress for the fiscal year 1923 were allocated as follows:

Insurance	$13,235,000.00
Compensation	160,000,000.00
Rehabilitation	140,409,188.80
Soldiers and sailors' civil relief	25,000.00
	<hr/> 319,669,188.80
Salaries	88,984,454.65
Expenses	4,013,480.00
Medical services	66,331,680.00
Hospital construction	350,000.00
	<hr/> 105,680,134.65

I have already observed that the average award for disability being paid veterans of the World War is $37.15 per month. Veterans of the Civil War are now the beneficiaries of the service pension law which grants $50 per month, and every veteran of the Civil War who has any service claim upon the Government is on the pension rolls at $50 per month. The promise was made when the service pension law was enacted that no further demands for pension legislation on behalf of the veterans of the Civil War would be made; but demands are being made. The pending bill proposes to raise the service pensions to $72 per month.

There are many men on the farms of this country whose cash income does not come to $600 per year, but who toil in the summer sun for a mere existence and do not turn to the Government to piece out or replenish their meager means of life and shelter. It is one of the vices of American life that too many of the people have come to look upon the Government as a bountiful guardian, rich beyond the possibility of exhaustion, to whom they may turn for advancements and bounties and support.

I have no doubt, if we are to pursue the policies which seem now to be guiding legislation and determining the conduct of public officials, the public conscience will be so vitiated in a few years that Congress will be importuned to pass pension bills reaching every individual in every part of the United States. They will say, "If the Nation is to be taxed to pay four or five million civil service and military pensioners and those who have been connected with the Government in various ways, why should not the Government pension the aged and the infirm, who have given the best of their lives in the development of their country?"

Mr. President, it is a manifestation of this spirit that perhaps 80 per cent of the bills introduced in Congress are designed to obtain money out of the Treasury for private individuals or for private purposes. Private pension bills by the thousand, private relief bills by the thousand, local bills, and other private measures crowd the calendars of the various committees of both Houses of Congress. It is difficult, in all this confusion, to find or consider the few measures which are conceived or proposed for the promotion of the public welfare.

We are so lost in the conflicting maze of private measures that the interests of the public are too often obscured and too often forgotten by the people.

A few moments ago I was calling attention to the veto message of President Harding. Let me say that the substantial provisions of the bill which is now before us were embodied in Senate bill 3275, which was passed at the last session of Congress and which was vetoed by Mr. Harding. I continue reading from the message which he sent to the Senate:

The act makes no pretense of new consideration for the needy or dependent, no new generosity for the veteran wards of the Nation; it is an outright bestowal upon the Government's pension roll, with a heedlessness for the Government's financial problems which is a discouragement to every effort to reduce expenditure and thereby relieve the Federal burdens of taxation.

I wonder what the views of men who thought as President Harding did with respect to this measure must be when they contemplate the present calendar and the legislation which is now projected, which would impose burdens upon the Government so much greater than those that were in contemplation when President Harding sent to the Senate the message from which I have just read.

Of course the bill will pass, as all pension and appropriation measures do. It is unwise to intrude one's self in opposition to pension bills or to appropriation bills. One thing is certain, that with public sentiment to-day, with the attitude of public officials, we are to increase taxes and we are going to increase expenditures. In my judgment the number of new bureaus that will be created during this session of Congress will be great, and the number of officials and employees of the Federal Government added to the pay roll of the Government will number thousands.

Mr. President, opposition to this bill will be futile. I feel sure that many Senators are not satisfied with it and deplore the policy which we are pursuing. The opponents of appropriation bills do not add to their popularity in the Senate and their motives are misunderstood by the people. It were well if the interests of all the people were the object of deep concern by legislators, not the interests of classes or sections. This session of Congress should be devoted to the passage of measures to reduce taxes, not to increase them, but the tide sweeping through Congress is freighted with demands for larger appropriations and we are caught within its all-embracing arms, apparently powerless to resist. Learned men, historians, and publicists of the highest repute see in nations only the seeds of dissolution. They are predicting that notwithstanding the discoveries of science and the advancement recorded in modern times the civilized nations of to-day have practically reached their zenith and will fade away as powerful nations of the past have perished. Certain it is that if this Nation is indifferent to the causes which have led to national decadence in the past, it can have no assurance of a different fate. I appeal to Senators to restrict the Federal Government to its proper functions, to effectuate reforms in all of its departments, to relieve the people of the burdens of taxation which promote industrial servitude, and to compel the utmost economy in every executive branch of the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, it would be interesting if time permitted and the occasion demanded to give some consideration to the rather lugubrious prophecies that have just been made by the able junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. However, I do not rise for that purpose, but merely to call attention particularly to some matters that are of immediate concern in the consideration of the bill which is before the Senate in so far as the veto message of the late President Harding relates to the bill.

The Senator from Utah read a portion of that message. I do not blame him for not reading the rest of it, because it certainly would not have borne out the contention which he was making to the Senate. So I propose to read the rest of the message, or that portion of it at any rate that appertains to the matter in hand. Beginning where the Senator from Utah left off in the reading of the veto message of the late President Harding, I read. This is a veto message that related to a bill which has been denominated several times as the same bill as the one now before the Senate. Beginning at the point where the Senator from Utah ceased reading, I read as follows from the veto message of the late President Harding:

The more particular objection to this act, however, lies in its loose provision for pensioning widows. The existing law makes the widow of a Civil War veteran eligible to a pension if she married him prior to June 27, 1905. In other words, marriage within 40 years of the end of the Civil War gives a veterans' widow a good title to a pension. The act returned herewith extends the marriage period specifically to June 7, 1915, and provides that after that date any marriage or cohabitation for two years prior to a veteran's death shall make the widow the beneficiary of a pension at $50 per month for the remainder of her life. In view of the fact that this same bill makes provision for pensions for widows of the veterans of the War of 1812, the possible burden of this sweeping provision seems worthy of serious consideration. Frankly, I do not recognize any public obligation to pension women who now, nearly 60 years after the Civil War, become the wives of that war.

The Government has so many defenders to whom generous treatment is due that Congress will find it necessary to consider all phases of our obligations when making provision for any one group.

The compensation paid to the widows of World War veterans, those who shared the shock and sorrows of the conflict, amounts to $24 per month. It would be indefensible to insist on that limitation upon actual war widows, if we are to pay $600 per year to widows who marry veterans 60 years after the Civil War.

Now, I have read that in the first place to keep the RECORD straight, and, in the second place, to point out the fact that the specific objections that were set forth by the late President Harding against the bill then before him for his signature do not at all apply to the pending bill. The first objection set forth was the one which was read by the Senator from Utah, where the President called attention to the fact that the bill then before him contemplated an additional expenditure of $108,000,000. The pending bill contemplates an expenditure of about one-half of that amount and therefore the specific objection there made does not lie.

The second objection, as is well known, was the important one, and the one which the then President stressed in his message, to wit, the fact that the bill that had passed the House and the Senate contained the very unusual and, I think, indefensible provision that is referred to by him in that portion of the language reading as follows:

The act returned herewith extends the marriage period specifically to June 7, 1915, and provides that after that date any marriage or cohabitation for two years prior to a veteran's death shall make the widow the beneficiary of a pension at $50 per month for the remainder of her life.

That was the thing the President stressed in his veto message, the fact that it was really against good morals and public policy to provide a pension for a woman who had been married to a soldier only two years prior to his death or who for two years prior to his death had cohabited with him; in other words, recognizing by granting pensionable status a mere common-law marriage. That was the thing the President said, and it is to be specifically noticed that that provision is not in the pending bill. So it will not do to urge the veto message of the late President Harding as against the bill, because the specific thing to which he most strongly objected is omitted from this measure.

He objected also to the fact that the former bill provided that the period of marriage should have been prior to June 7, 1915. The present bill does not so provide. It leaves that as it is in the pending law, June 27, 1905.

The third objection that he made was that the provision was unfair as between the widows of soldiers of the Civil War and the widows of Spanish War veterans. One specific purpose of the present bill is to eliminate that unfairness and to place those worthy veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, their widows and dependents, upon an equitable basis.

I thought we ought not to go to a vote upon the bill without having it pointed out definitely that the reasons that led President Harding to veto the bill before do not apply in this case, because the things to which objection was made by him have been omitted from the pending bill. I think it is a good measure and that it ought to be passed.

VALIDATION OF PAYMENT OF COMMUTATION OF QUARTERS, ETC.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we passed on Friday a bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the bill (S. 2299) to validate the payment of commutation of quarters, heat, and light under the act of April 16, 1918, and of rental and subsistence allowances under the act of June 10, 1922, and for other purposes. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed and at the same time move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate. I shall not take the time to explain the reasons. I have briefly spoken to the Senator from New York on the subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to the purpose which the Senator from Utah has in mind. I am wondering just what is the parliamentary situation, and may I ask the Chair to enlighten us. Has the bill been messaged to the House?

Mr. KING. I understand that it has been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is advised that the papers have been sent to the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then upon their return a motion to reconsider will be in order.

Mr. KING. Yes; but I must enter the motion at this time under the rule. Rule 13 requires that I shall enter the motion, which I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the House will be requested to return the bill to the Senate, and the motion to reconsider will be entered.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, defining the position of the federation on the provisions of the Volstead law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be received and printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Washington, D. C., March 27, 1924.

SIR: The American Federation of Labor contends that the Volstead Act should be modified for the reason that it does not carry out the intent of the eighteenth amendment, which prohibits the manufacture, transportation, and sale of intoxicating beverages.

The 1919 convention of the American Federation of Labor adopted the following resolution:

"The American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled in Atlantic City, expresses its disapproval of war-time prohibition, and directs that a strong protest from the delegates at this convention be forwarded to the Government at Washington, setting forth, in a most emphatic manner, the opinion of the delegates to this convention, that the present mild beers of 23 per cent alcohol, by weight, should be exempted from the provisions of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, and also from the provision of the war prohibition measure."

The president and executive council of the American Federation of Labor were directed to convey these expressions to the President of the United States and to the Congress. The convention ordered an adjournment for Saturday, June 14 (Flag Day), to permit the delegates to accompany the president of the American Federation of Labor and executive council to Washington to present the resolutions to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

In 1921 the convention of the American Federation of Labor declared:

"The American Federation of Labor is in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of a national beverage of wholesome beer."

Following this action the executive council on February 25, 1922, issued an address to the American people, after an exhaustive investigation of the effects of the Volstead Act. It was shown by this investigation that there had been:

A general disregard of the law among all classes of people, including those who made the law.

Creation of thousands of moonshiners among both country and city dwellers.

The creation of an army of bootleggers.

An amazing increase in the traffic in poisons and deadly concoctions and drugs.

An increased rate of insanity, blindness, and crime among the users of these concoctions and drugs.

Increase in taxes to city, State, and National Governments amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 per year.

The executive council also said:

"We seek no violation of the eighteenth amendment, but, on the contrary, we declare for a reasonable interpretation of that amendment in order that the law may be enforceable and enforced, and in order that the people of our country may not suffer from an unjust and fanatical interpretation of the Constitution."

The convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Portland, Oreg., October, 1923, approved the declarations of the executive council and also adopted the following:

"The American Federation of Labor has gone clearly on record as being in favor of such modification of the existing law as will permit the manufacture and vending of wholesome beer and light wines. That we may correct an impression which has sought to be created by the advocates of the Volstead Act, that the action of the American Federation of Labor was not a fair statement of the attitude of the organized labor bodies affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, this convention votes its reaffirmation of the action of former conventions dealing with this subject, giving approval at the same time to the statements made in the circular sent out by the executive committee of the nonpartisan political campaign committee, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the position of the American Federation of Labor on this important and vital question.

"It is our belief that the efforts at enforcement of the Volstead Act have produced results that in themselves are so far from being what was promised or reasonably expected might follow the adoption of the eighteenth amendment that we feel warranted in saying that the reasonable modification now asked for and a rational enforcement of the eighteenth amendment will bring relief greatly sought by the people. The fact is that the open saloon has been supplanted by the 'speak-easy,' and that instead of licensed vendors of liquor, who carried on their business under strict surveillance and regulation by law, we now have an unnumbered multitude of bootleggers, who dispense their vile and poisonous liquors in secrecy, to the great detriment of the health and morality of the people. The presence of this nefarious traffic has brought with it a great host of so-called law-enforcement officers, many of whom have not hesitated to set aside or ignore all other laws in their zeal to enforce the one law in which they have interest.

"Between the lawless vender of forbidden liquor on the one side, and the lawless enforcement officer on the other, the public has suffered irreparable damage because of the consequent and inestimable diminution of regard for any law. We believe that this condition may be remedied by giving a more reasonable interpretation of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States than is contained in the so-called Volstead Act, and the executive council through its legislative committee is directed to use all reasonable efforts to bring about such modification of this statute as will have the effect of giving to the people wholesome beverage in lieu of the flood of 'moonshine' that now poisons those who are foolish enough to consume it, and which encourages the illicit traffic and the irrational efforts to suppress that traffic, which has brought so much confusion into our national, political, and social life."

As there has been much misrepresentation of the attitude of the American Federation of Labor I hope you will be kind enough to place the above in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Very respectfully yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

HON. WALTER E. EDGE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I notice that another sniper has raised his rifle above the political trenches to take a shot at a member of the administration. I refer to a resolution introduced to-day reciting some preambles and ending up with the provision and to the effect that the President should "be, and he is hereby, requested to ask for the resignation of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt as Assistant Secretary of the Navy."

There are one or two matters referred to in the preamble of the resolution that I want to mention very briefly. The first paragraph reads:

Whereas Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was a director of the Sinclair Oil Co. previous to his entrance into the Government service.

The author of the resolution is exceedingly careful, apparently, to refrain from giving the details and the dates having to do with Mr. Roosevelt's former connection with the Sinclair Oil Co. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Roosevelt was one of a number of bankers or investment bankers who joined in the underwriting of the Sinclair Oil Co. some years before the World War, and when the company was formed he, along with others who had joined in the underwriting, accepted directorships in it. He resigned as a director of that company in 1917, before going into the service. The service he went into was the military service in the war against Germany, in which he took part in some of the most severe battles waged in France, was severely gassed and wounded, and made for himself a name, as I happen to know from conversations with officers in France immediately following the war, as one of the most distinguished combat battalion leaders in the entire American Expeditionary Force.

That is the nature of the service which he entered after separating himself from the Sinclair Oil Co. as a director.

The second paragraph of the preamble to the resolution relates that—

He personally carried the Executive order to the White House for the President to sign, which order transferred the control of the naval oil reserves from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. President, I think the facts should be laid before the Senate at the first possible moment, and I take this occasion to do so, because I understand perfectly the motive of the introducer of this resolution. I think I can best lay the facts before the Senate by asking the Secretary to read a letter addressed by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to a friend of his, the Hon. William W. Campbell, a member of the New York State Senate at Albany. The letter is dated February 15, 1924. It describes with great exactitude Mr. Roosevelt's connection with the order transferring the jurisdiction over the naval oil reserves from the Navy Department to the Interior Department.

I may also say that the letter states what I have already attempted to state, Mr. Roosevelt's former connection with the Sinclair Oil Co. I ask that the Secretary read the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1924.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just received your letter of February 11. Thank you so much for it.

My connection with the oil leases is, briefly, as follows: Shortly after President Harding's induction into office Secretary Denby sent me a copy of a proposed Executive order transferring the naval oil reserves to the Department of the Interior, without recourse. He sent at the same time a copy to the Bureau of Engineering. After getting my copy of the order I asked Admiral Griffin, who was then chief of that bureau and who had the oil under his particular care, to talk it over with me. I knew very little of the matter, but Griffin felt very strongly that this transfer would be a mistake. After thinking the matter over I decided he was probably right. My grounds for coming to this conclusion were that the Interior Department has as its general mission the development of the resources of the United States; whereas the oil lands belonging to the Navy should not be developed except in a case of real necessity, and that therefore there would be a conflict of ideas. I went to the Secretary and urged that the lands be not transferred to the Interior Department. He informed me that my protest in the matter was made too late, because the transfer had already been agreed to by the President, Fall, and himself. After this I went back and discussed the entire situation with Griffin and certain other officers. It occurred to me that if we could get an amendment to the original order for transfer, making it necessary for the Interior Department to gain the consent of the Navy Department before any leasing or drilling was undertaken, we could guard the lands against improper exploitation. A number of amendments with this end in view were submitted to me. I took them to the Secretary and discussed them with him. After considerable discussion he agreed to a modified form of one of them. He told me to take it to Secretary Fall, and that if I could get him to agree to this amendment it would be all right with him. I took the amendment to Secretary Fall, who agreed to it. I then took it to the White House for signature. This amendment reads as follows:

"But no general policy as to drilling or reserving lands located in a naval reserve shall be changed or adopted except upon consultation and in cooperation with the Secretary or Acting Secretary of the Navy."

You can see that this reserves to the Navy supervision over the oil reserves. It was on account of this amendment that all of the leases under discussion by the Senate committee at this time were countersigned by Secretary Denby. They could not have been accomplished without the O. K. of this department.

At this point my active participation in the entire matter ceased. It so happened that I was not consulted on any of the oil leases. I did not know they were under contemplation until after they were signed. With reference to the Teapot Dome lease in particular, I did not know there was a plan on foot to lease Teapot Dome. I did not know Sinclair was interested in any of the leases. I heard of them only after they had been made known to the general public.

In so far as my connection with the Sinclair company goes, it is as follows: I was among the group of bankers who were interested in its original formation. I was a director of the company until the outbreak of the war in 1917, when I resigned. My last stock in the company was sold during the war, not later than 1918—I am inclined to think in 1917. My wife bought 1,000 shares of Sinclair stock, however, in 1920, but sold them at a loss some short time before the lease with the Navy Department was signed.

Merely parenthetically, I have engaged in no business of any kind since the war and my entrance into politics and have therefore made no money of any kind in business.

All of the above is in the hearings—perhaps not quite in such ample form as I have given it to you—and fairly well scattered over a couple of days.

You may show this letter to anyone you wish to show it to, but do not let it get into the press, because I don't want at this time to look as if I were trying to "run out" on Secretary Denby in his time of trouble.

Believe me,

Yours very truly,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. WILLIAM W. CAMPBELL,
Senate Chambers, Albany, N. Y.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in order that there may be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable person as to the accuracy of Mr. Roosevelt's statement of his connection with the order making the transfer from the Navy Department to the Interior Department, I ask the Secretary to read a copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Roosevelt by Rear Admiral R. S. Griffin, retired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

2003 KALORAMA ROAD,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1924.

Hon. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Navy Department.

MY DEAR COLONEL ROOSEVELT: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant inclosing a copy of your letter of the 15th instant to Hon. William W. Campbell, Albany, N. Y., in reference to your connection with the oil leases now under investigation.

After carefully reading that portion of the letter which pertains to conferences that you and I held and to your views regarding retention of control of the oil lands in the Navy Department, I am pleased to say that your recollection of what transpired is in substantial agreement with mine.

With kind regards, I am,

Faithfully yours,

R. S. GRIFFIN,

Rear Admiral, United States Navy, Retired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in bringing this matter before the Senate I do so not merely as a supporter of this administration but as a friend and intimate acquaintance of Mr. Roosevelt of many years' standing. I know perfectly well what the object of the resolution is. It is to besmirch his character, if it is possible to do such a thing. Otherwise, the first preamble would not be contained in the resolution, the preamble which refers to Mr. Roosevelt having been at one time a director of the Sinclair Co. The object of that preamble, when taken in connection with the remainder of the text of the resolution, is to create in the public mind a well-defined impression that Mr. Roosevelt was actuated by improper and possibly corrupt motives in connection with the transfer of the jurisdiction from the Navy Department to the Interior Department. Such an inference is absolutely false; there is not one word of testimony anywhere to bear it out; and there is not one act of Colonel Roosevelt's life which would cause anyone on earth to believe that he would be guilty of any such motives.

We may not all agree politically, Mr. President, and certainly we disagree from time to time as to governmental policies, but I think all decent men will agree among themselves, regardless of their political affiliations, that it is unfair, and worse than unfair, to attempt by false innuendo to blacken a public officer's character.

Mr. Roosevelt is a public-spirited man, born and bred in an atmosphere demanding patriotism and devotion to country. He has his ideals, and they are high ones, with respect to public service. He has served his country to the best of his ability—as a soldier with great distinction, as a legislator in the legislature of his native State, and as Assistant Secretary of the Navy here at Washington for approximately three years. No one has ever questioned his honesty. Most men who have come in contact with him freely admit his ability as an administrator. It is in resentment of this innuendo, this attempt, as I view it, to blacken his character, that I rise at this time and put into the Record the documents which distinctly disprove the inference or anything approaching it.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows and to certain Spanish War soldiers, and certain malmed soldiers, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, resuming the discussion upon the bill under consideration, I wish to present to the Senate, in addition to my remarks of Wednesday, March 26, some information and statistics which I have prepared showing what changes are now proposed by the pending bill to the pension awards for soldiers, widows, and children of the various wars:

Pension awards for soldiers of the several wars.

	Under existing laws.	Under S. 5.
Soldiers of Civil War.....	$50	$72
Soldiers of Mexican War.....	50	72
Soldiers of Indian wars.....	20	30 to 60
Soldiers of Spanish War (if 62 years of age).....	12 to 30	20 to 30
Soldiers of World War.....	(¹)	(¹)

¹ Nothing for age and service alone. If disability is due to service, then at rates of compensation upon a percentage basis of disability causing reduction in earning capacity. Compensation varies from $10 to $100.

Pension awards for widows and children of the several wars

	Under existing laws.	Under S. 5.
Widows of Civil War veterans.....	$30	$30
Widows of Indian war veterans.....	12	20
Widows of veterans of War of 1812 and of Mexican War.....	30	60
(All the above are pensioned under age and service act, which means the pensions are not paid on the claim that death of soldier was attributable to service.)
Children of veterans of Regular Establishment.....	3	8
Children of veterans of Spanish War.....	4	8
Children of veterans of Civil War.....	6	8
(In the event of death of mother the widow's pension is paid to the children, in addition to their own pension.)

² Under 60 years of age.

³ Under 74 years of age.

⁴ Over 74 years of age.

Widows of World War veterans, war risk insurance acts, receive nothing on account of age and service of soldier alone. They only receive compensation, or pension, as it is called in other laws, upon proof of soldier's death attributable to injury or death traceable to service, and also proof of dependency in case of father and mother claiming compensation. The rates when this proof is established are:

Widows of World War (without child).....	$25
Widows of World War and one child ($5 each for next two children).....	35
[Note.—Slight changes in the rates for children are contemplated in S. 2257, pending.]
Children when there is no widow:
One child.....	$20
Two children.....	30
Three children.....	40
More than three children (for the three, and $5 for each additional child).....	40
Dependent mother or father.....	20
Dependent mother and father.....	30

INCREASED COST TO PUBLIC OF S. 5.

S. 5 will call for an increased expenditure by the Government of $55,000,000.

The additional cost of section 1 for the first year will be $17,700,000. This section provides for the increase from $50 to $72 for Civil War veterans.

The additional cost for increased pensions to widows of Civil War veterans will be about $31,000,000; for Mexican War widows and widows of War of 1812 will be $200,000.

For minor and helpless children of all wars the additional cost will be $450,000.

For militiamen, the bill provides for an expenditure of about $1,200,000.

For Army nurses, the additional expenditure will be $11,000.

For Indian war soldiers and widows, will be about $500,000. Approximately $8,000,000 will be the cost for Spanish War veterans.

For malmed soldiers the additional cost will be $265,000.

APPROPRIATIONS MADE.

The appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, was $253,000,000. For the year ending June 30, 1925, we have recently appropriated $230,000,000.

At the end of the present fiscal year there will be a surplus from the current appropriation of $23,000,000. This amount will be available to meet part of the $55,000,000 called for in S. 5.

NUMBER AFFECTED BY INCREASES.

It is interesting to note that 264,580 widows of Civil War veterans will be affected by the bill, and 130,000 out of a total number of 168,000 soldiers will be affected. By July 1, 1924, the total number of Civil War veterans affected by this bill, it is estimated, will be reduced to 110,000.

DECREASE IN THE NUMBER OF PENSIONERS.

The rapidity with which the pensioners of the Civil War are decreasing may be appreciated by the study of the following figures:

The number of Civil War soldiers and widows who died during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, was 49,426.

For the first six months of the current fiscal year ending December 31, 1923, 9,708 Civil War soldiers died. In January and February of this year, however, about 9,000 widows and soldiers died. At this rate the number of deaths for the calendar year may approximate 60,000.

The total number of Civil War soldiers on July 1, 1923, was 166,941. The total number of Civil War widows was 258,566.

In the last two years and a half 123,000 soldiers died, and 23,947 widows of soldiers of the Civil War died last year.

I ask that there may be annexed and printed as part of my remarks a further statement prepared by me in explanation of the pension laws affecting widows and children. I have attempted to trace the development of these laws, and to show what changes have been made from time to time. I think this information will be valuable, in the fact that it makes comparisons between the pensions paid to the widows of soldiers of the different wars. I doubt if there is in the Record any such information in this concise form. In fact, I have tried to present as concisely as possible all the salient features and differences in our various pension laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXPLANATION OF PENSION LAWS AFFECTING WIDOWS AND CHILDREN.

Under the general law (act of July 4, 1862, now known as Rev. Stats. 4702, 4703) if a deceased soldier died from a disability contracted by him while in the service, the pension of his widow or minor children begins from the day after his death. Under the amended general law the rate is $25 for widow and $6 for each child until the child attains the age of 16 years. In case there is no widow the minor children get the same pension as the mother.

Under the age and service acts, beginning June 27, 1890, the rate was $8 for widows and $2 additional for each child. Several amendments up to May 1, 1920, make the pension for widows $30 a month and an additional allowance of $6 for each child under 16 years of age. The pension is allowed from the date of filing application.

The striking difference between the general law and the age and service acts is that under the general law the pension commences the day after the soldier's death, and under the age and service acts the pension commences from the date of filing the application.

It will be observed that a higher pension is paid to widows under the age and service acts than under the general pension law. The result is that practically all widows draw their pension now under the age and service acts instead of general law.

Most of the applications coming into the Pension Bureau under the general law are by widows in cases where the soldiers rendered less than 90 days' service.

It is interesting to note why the rate was raised from $25 to $30. Congress in passing the World War act pensioning widows and minor children in the event of a soldier's death by disability fixed the rate for widows at $25 with an additional allowance of $10 for the first child, $7.50 for second child, and $5 for the third child. The widows of the Civil War and Spanish War veterans at that time were only getting $20, with an additional allowance of $6 on account of each minor child. To correct this Congress in passing the act of October 7, 1917, included in it a provision raising the pension of Civil War and Spanish War widows to $25 and kept the children the same, namely, $6 per month for children of Civil War veterans and $4 for Spanish War veterans in the event of death being traceable to service.

The next change for Civil War widows was in the act of May 1, 1920—age and service—which raised the rate to $30 and $6 for all minor children.

The next change in the rate for Spanish War widows was made in the act of September 1, 1922—age and service act—when the Spanish War widows were given the rate of $20 per month. The rate for Spanish War widows previously was $12 per month, and for each child it was $4 per month.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. DIAL. Notwithstanding the great decrease of pensioners, as a matter of fact last year, I believe, a larger amount was paid to pensioners than at any time since the Civil War. Is that true or not?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The peak of disbursements for pensions, as the Senator has stated, was the last fiscal year, 1923, when $263,000,000 was appropriated.

Mr. DIAL. That was my information. I am glad to have the Senator's figures put into the Record.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from South Carolina was interested the other day in inquiring whether there was a difference in the pensions paid to Indian War and Mexican War and Civil War veterans. The length of service required in order to obtain the status of a pensioner for age and service is different in each of the wars; that in the Civil War it is necessary to have had 90 days of service, in the Mexican War 60 days, and in the Indian wars 30 days; and that fact has been an element considered in determining the different amounts that should be paid as pensions to the veterans of these wars.

Mr. DIAL. No particular time is required for anyone who has been wounded, however, in any of the wars?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No. As the Senator knows, the general pension law providing for pensions in case of death resulting from injury, or injury that caused incapacitation, was passed July 4, 1862. From that time up to 1890 the requirements for obtaining a pension was proof of a disability incurred in service. In 1890 we made the departure of providing pensions for service of 90 days upon reaching a given age; and that precedent, established in 1890, has already been made applicable, as the Senator knows, to Spanish War veterans. Three years ago, in 1920, we passed the first law giving pensions to Spanish War veterans upon proof of reaching a certain age, to wit, 62, and of service of 90 days during the Spanish-American War. If these precedents are to hold in the future, we can look for an age and service pension for veterans of the World War about 20 years hence.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to add a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 15. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1923.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Dale	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Pa.
Ball	Dial	Kendrick	Robinson
Bayard	Edge	King	Sheppard
Brandegee	Forris	Ladd	Smith
Brookhart	Fess	Lodge	Smoot
Bronson	Fletcher	McKellar	Stanfield
Bruce	Frazier	McKinley	Stephens
Bursum	George	McNary	Sterling
Capper	Gerry	Moses	Swanson
Caraway	Gooding	Neeley	Trammell
Cole	Hale	Oddie	Wadsworth
Copeland	Harrell	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Harris	Owen	Warren
Cummins	Heflin	Pepper	Weller
Curtis	Howell	Pittman	Willis
	Johnson, Minn.	Ralston

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Secretary will again read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is now nearly 5 o'clock, and as the Finance Committee has to meet this evening, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 1, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 31, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, who hast the words of eternal life and the hope of the world, let us be reassured of Thy guidance that we may carry truth and right to their best results; so do Thou inspire us with faith and zeal. Let daily discipline develop in us splendid qualities of manly character. May we invite every prospect that makes life worth living. By the remedy of superior law, practical righteousness, noble philanthropy, intellectual and spiritual education may we help make it difficult for evil to survive. O Lord, help us to seek first and always the kingdom of righteousness. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF H. R. 7694.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 7694 be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. This is done with the consent of the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent that all ex-service Members of the House shall be permitted to have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the Record touching the adjusted compensation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that all ex-service Members have five legislative days to extend their remarks on the adjusted compensation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on account of the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Brea] I shall be obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. To-day is set apart for the consideration of business pertaining to the District of Columbia—

ELECTION CASE, ANSORGE V. WELLER.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from Committee on Elections No. 1.

The SPEAKER. For immediate consideration?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 242.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

March, 1924.

Mr. COLE of Ohio submitted the following report from Committee on Elections No. 1:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to which was referred the contested-election case of Martin C. Anson, contestant, v. Royal H. Weller, contestee, from the twenty-first district of the State of New York, respectfully reports to the House the following resolution, approved by said committee, for the approval and adoption by the House, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Resolved, That John Voorhis, Charles E. Heydt, James Kane, and Jacob Livingston, constituting the board of elections of the city of New York, State of New York, their deputies or representatives be, and they are hereby, ordered to appear by one of the members, the deputy or representative, before Elections Committee No. 1 of the House of Representatives forthwith, then and there to testify before said committee, or a subcommittee thereof, in the contested-election case of Martin C. Anson, contestant, v. Royal H. Weller, contestee, now pending before said committee for investigation and report; and that said board of elections bring with them all the disputed ballots, marked as exhibits, cast in every election district at the general election held in the twenty-first congressional district of the State of New York on November 7, 1922. That said ballots be brought to be examined and counted by and under the authority of said Committee on Elections in said case, and to that end that the proper subpoena be issued to the Sergeant at Arms of this House, commanding him to summon said board of elections, a member thereof, or its deputy or representative, to appear with such ballots as a witness in said case; and that the expense of said witness or witnesses, and all other expenses under this resolution, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and that said committee be, and hereby is, empowered to send for all other persons or papers as it may find necessary for the proper determination of said controversy; and also be, and it is, empowered to select a subcommittee to take the evidence and count said ballots or votes and report same to Committee on Elections No. 1, under such regulations as shall be prescribed for that purpose; and that the aforesaid expense be paid on the requisition of the chairman of said committee after the auditing and allowances thereof by said Committee on Elections No. 1.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question on this resolution?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand this resolution is reported from Committee on Elections No. 1, and it proposes to send for a certain number of ballots that the committee desires to examine in connection with the contest of Anson against Weller?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the resolution state the number of ballots?

Mr. DALLINGER. No; it says the disputed ballots, which are marked as exhibits in this case.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, it has come to me in some way there are substantially about 820 of these ballots?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes; 820. For the information of the gentleman from Tennessee I wish to call his attention to the contestee's brief, at the top of page 55, where the contestee makes this statement:

The contestant makes no attempt to discuss these exhibits of ballots, although it is apparent that in this closely contested election the true result is to be found there.

Now, each party contends that if the 820 disputed ballots are counted according to the statutes and decisions of the State of New York he will be found to be entitled to the seat. Now, the committee felt that the short cut in this case is to send for these disputed ballots, because an examination of them might decide the whole question; and it certainly would not be necessary to send for any other ballots if the committee should find that Mr. Weller, the contestee, was entitled to the seat.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman I am not familiar with what has developed before the committee, but it has been suggested to me that possibly after an examination of these ballots the situation might be developed that would render necessary the sending for additional ballots. Now, I do not know about that, but I assume that if such a situation should arise upon the demand of either party that the committee will be favorable to sending for the remainder of the ballots?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly, if it should be found necessary.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, one other thing, if I may ask the gentleman. I have a wire from one of the contestee's counsel who is very much interested in the time when this subpoena shall be returnable. Of course, that is not a matter for the House to determine, but is a matter to be determined by the Committee on Elections No. 1 when they come to the issuance of the subpoena, but I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, it will be agreeable for the return date to be fixed not earlier than April 15?

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that it is the hearing that they want not earlier than the 18th; I think the return date ought to be a little earlier than that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. The suggestion in this telegram is this—this is from Mr. Saxo, of counsel for the contestee:

No objection to Cole resolution as to form.

That is the resolution referred to. Then, further—

Subpoenas must bear some return date. If resolution should be amended to include a date—

Of course there is no necessity of trying to fix the date here, because the committee will fix it—

Please urge date not earlier than April 18. Board of elections will need that time to go with counsel to various police precincts and pick out over 800 ballots inclosed in 376 boxes and envelopes. Time also necessary for me to examine record and work sheets as to these exhibits.

Mr. DALLINGER. I agree to have the return date fixed as April 18 on the understanding that the hearings may be held on the same date.

I do not want to put off this case any longer than possible, because it may take a good deal of time yet.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know of no disposition to delay it beyond that time.

Mr. DALLINGER. I am perfectly willing to agree to have the return date not earlier than April 18.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Does this resolution provide for an unlimited expenditure from the contingent fund, or is it in the control of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. DALLINGER. This is in the same form as other resolutions of this kind.

Mr. MACGREGOR. What is the expenditure?

Mr. DALLINGER. I do not know. It will not be very large.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DAY.

The SPEAKER. This is District day.

PREVENTION OF VENEREAL DISEASES.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 491) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 491.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have been informed—I do not know how correctly—that there is very strong opposition to this bill, and that if it is brought up now for consideration the rest of the day may be consumed in its consideration, thereby side-tracking several bills which I understand are of very great importance to the District. Would the gentleman think that possibly under those circumstances it might be wise to consider some other bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that this bill is the unfinished business before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. We had this bill before the House at the last session, and we hoped to dispose of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. General debate has been completed on this bill, and the bill has been partially read under the five-minute rule, although most of the time expected to be consumed on it has been consumed already. I think this bill could be finished in 20 minutes. If the membership are not in favor of it, they will have a chance to kill it, or if they favor it they will have a chance to pass it. All the preliminaries are out of the way.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas seems to overlook the fact that there are 21 sections in the bill, covering 8 pages, and that the bill has not been carefully gone over by the committee, and that we have not a single committee amendment. The bill in its present form, although it purports to relate to the District of Columbia, in fact covers the whole United States, and if changed so as to apply only to the District of Columbia numerous amendments will have to be made. I assume that the gentleman from Texas, being engaged in other matters for the District, has not used his usual care in scrutinizing the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman that we have had this bill before us for three years, and it met with the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Did the gentleman intend that it should apply to the entire United States?

Mr. BLANTON. No.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, it does.

Mr. BLANTON. If it does, the gentleman from Indiana could straighten it out in about two minutes if he uses his usual agility in straightening it out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think if this bill is going to take a long time and be seriously opposed, it would be wise to consider some other bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This legislation has been considered carefully for three years. It has been threshed out in committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And it appears now without a single committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. It was the least drastic bill that has been pending before the committee on that subject.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The committee recommended the reporting of the bill and we reintroduced it. I have no objection, however, to its going back, but I would not suggest anything of that kind.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Ohio intimate to us when he will have another District day?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A good deal depends upon what happens to the bills brought in by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman from Ohio allow us to have a night session to-night on this Gilbert bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think we ought to have night sessions on bills of this kind. I am willing to have night sessions at any time the House desires it on private bills and bills of that nature, but it would be impossible to keep a quorum here at a night session to consider bills of this kind.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, is it possible to demand the regular order at this time?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am afraid that this will result in a waste of time.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 491. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 491) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. CHINDBLOM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 491, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 491) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, when the committee rose on the last District day we were engaged in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. A part of the bill before the House having been read is it not in order to continue the reading of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that at the time the committee rose we had just taken a vote to strike out the enacting clause and upon that vote a quorum did not vote and a quorum was not present. Therefore the immediate matter before the committee would be a vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I differ from the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman is wrong about that. We voted and there was no question as to a quorum being present then and we proceeded to do business after that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas is in error. I did not make the point of order, and I should not have made it. The motion was lost, and I was going to abide by it, but some gentleman on the other side made the point of no quorum.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. After the motion had been declared lost.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that the Chairman look at the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question was put on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] to strike out the enacting clause; upon a division there were—ayes 10, noes 15. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] thereupon made the point of order that there was no quorum present. While the Chair was counting the gentleman from Georgia withdrew his point of order that there was no quorum present and asked for tellers. Thereupon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] moved that the committee should rise, but the motion was rejected. Thereupon the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] renewed the point of order that there was no quorum present. The Chair counted and found there was no quorum present. Thereupon the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] moved that the committee should rise, and the committee thereupon rose. It would appear to the Chair, therefore, that the vote upon the question to strike out the enacting clause was not completed.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that there was an intervening motion.

Mr. BLANTON. For tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a demand for a vote by tellers had been made, and immediately the point of order of no quorum was made; that during the subsequent proceedings the committee rose, and no further action was taken upon the motion to strike out the enacting clause or to complete the vote upon that motion.

In the opinion of the Chair, the motion to strike out the enacting clause is now pending before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the membership present now is not the membership that was present at the time the motion was originally made, and that under the rules five minutes are allowed to a side on a motion to strike out the enacting clause, I ask unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes of debate, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] and 5 minutes to be controlled by myself.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the unanimous-consent request is quite proper, but I doubt the advisability of giving all the time to the other side. The motion was mine.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that five minutes be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] and five minutes be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe I am the man who made the point of order that there was no quorum present. Therefore, I think I am entitled to ask the gentleman from Texas how he feels about the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] is against it.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. How is the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. I am for the bill. It is a matter which the committee has considered for three years and there was not a vote in the committee offered against it. We have thrashed it out in the committee for three years.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Under the division of time, then, I assume you will have three speeches in favor of the bill and one against it—is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I have no objection to 10 minutes of debate, 5 minutes in favor of the bill and 5 minutes against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes' debate upon the question to strike out the enacting clause, 5 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] and 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I want to get some information. The debate on this proposition is now closed, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted.

Mr. WINGO. Well, frankly, I am interested in knowing whether or not you are going to get up the school-teachers' bill to-day or not, or are you going to piddle along on something else?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair can not advise the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I want to ask that of the gentlemen who are in charge and who are responsible. Are you going to keep this bill before the committee all day as a buffer, or are you going to really get up the teachers' bill? If you are not going to get up the school-teachers' bill to-day, why not say so?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the ranking members of the committee met with the majority leader and submitted the program for the day, and it is proposed to take up this bill which is before the committee.

Then a bill closing certain streets and alleys through the Walter Reed Hospital reservation, a bill relating to capital punishment in the District of Columbia, and then the school-teachers' salary bill. That is the program that was agreed upon by the majority and minority members of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Upon the basis of that statement, does not the gentleman feel like making the statement now to the House, based upon our experience for two years on this question of pay of school-teachers, that the gentleman does not expect the school-teachers' bill to come up to-day?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I could not answer that question.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; the gentleman can answer whether he expects it to come up.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I had hoped to get the school-teachers' bill before the House as the unfinished business and keep it before the House, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. This is the same situation we have had in reference to this bill for nearly two years.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas, as one member of the District Committee, I am in favor of getting up the teachers' bill now.

Mr. WINGO. Everybody seems to be in favor of getting it up, but I have not had a chance to vote on it for two years. I think this same explanation has been made to me four times in the last 12 months.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that my motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill is pending and I want to say to the other members of the committee that if that motion shall carry, when it is reported back to the House, I shall offer a preferential motion to recommit the bill to the committee, for the reason that I am not opposed to legislation upon this subject, but if the gentleman from Arkansas will study this bill the gentleman will understand that this bill can not be written on the floor in a way to cure all the defects in it.

Mr. WINGO. I have not even read the bill and I have no interest in it, either personal, political, or professional. I am thinking about the school teachers' bill and I am interested in what I fear is a continuation of what we have seen during the last Congress and that you are going to dilly-dally along and the school teachers' bill will be shunted off, with everybody for it, and never passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Texas that there be 10 minutes' further debate on the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky, a member of the committee, and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Being opposed to any further delay, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the enacting clause of the bill H. R. 491.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana) there were—ayes 40, noes 30.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. BLANTON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 70.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 491 and had come to no resolution thereon.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS AND SCHOOL OFFICERS.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6721, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes, and pending that motion I want to see if we can not reach an agreement as to time. I ask that general debate on this bill be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the other by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6721, with Mr. CHINBLOM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6721, to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have this opportunity of speaking in favor of the bill now before the House providing for an increase in the pay of school officials and teachers, and to provide for a reorganization of the school system for the District of Columbia.

Nothing we can do will more materially benefit the citizens of the District and their children than the passage of this legislation, which is a long-deserved recognition of the high profession of educators, and which will do much to elevate the standard and provide elementary education to the great mass of children of the District.

The development of the public-school system in this country is one of the most interesting phases of our national life. In the beginning we find there were three types of schools in America. First, what was known as the town teacher; and each municipality had its own instructor in the arts of reading and writing, for the first purpose of this law which was enacted in New England was to enable the people to learn to read the Scriptures. A teacher was appointed and the course of study directed by the Puritan Church. It was a form of town school, but under church direction.

The second type of school was the parochial school prevalent in Pennsylvania, Dutch New York and New Jersey, and Maryland. In each of these States each church established a school in each church parish. The teachers were usually the clergymen of the parish. In the larger towns private pay schools and what were known as "charity schools" were founded. The great State of Pennsylvania held to this form of education until 1834, and it was then only overcome after bitter opposition.

The third type of school was the so-called "pauper school" and the "non-State interfering school" of Virginia and the South. Out of these grew the pay schools and in the larger towns and cities in addition a more elaborate form of "charity school."

In 1801 in New York there was founded the first "free school for poor white children whose parents belong to no religious society, and who for some reason can not be admitted to other charity schools." Afterwards there was founded the famous Public School Society of New York, "for the children of poor parents and for orphans." In Baltimore there was founded in 1799, "The Benevolent Society of the City of Baltimore for the education of the female poor," and a year later the "Male Free Society of Baltimore."

The District of Columbia, too, had "public schools," which were schools "for the poor who must show that they can not pay for their learning." These schools were organized here in 1804 by gifts from public spirited citizens, including Thomas Jefferson, who gave $200 to the cause and was the president of the first governing board. These institutions remained "pauper schools" until 1844.

The need for more general dissemination of knowledge awoke public opinion to the necessity of real development of citizens; the necessity of training for citizenship; the urgent need of the removal of the forms of class distinction and caste formation as was produced by such a system of education.

The awakening and arousing of public sentiment was taken up by the labor organizations and institutions, and public schools became established throughout New England, yet there were in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Rhode Island, and Virginia, and the South the so-called "charity schools." In 1833 it was estimated that 1,000,000 children between the ages of 5 and 15 were not attending school.

Not only were the facilities for free education not provided but parents who were capable of giving their children elementary training of an educational character were deprived of that opportunity by employers—threats were made that if the children were taken from the workshop the parents must leave the employment, and these threats were often put into execution.

Early in 1832 there was formed the New England Association of Farmers and Mechanics, and at its convention held in this year they made the education of children in manufacturing districts the principal business of the gathering. From this beginning grew a mighty sentiment for "education of all people as prescribed by the convention of 1832."

During that early period every candidate of the workingmen's party was pledged to favor a general system of State education. The campaign for a public-school system was vigorously prosecuted and pulpit and press were urged to press the vital need of public education.

About this time there began the first agitation in America for a system of compulsory education, and it was urged at that time that an inheritance tax be levied along with a land tax in order to support a system of compulsory education. The workingmen of that day urged free education on the ground of equality, and many leaders of that day devoted themselves entirely to the adoption of a system of public education.

Next was taken up the campaign for free textbooks, now adopted as a part of the public-school system of most of the States of the Union. It has been shown that only one-third of the children in our public schools complete the grammar-school course and less than 10 per cent finish high school. In four large industrial towns, according to figures presented by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, more than 75 per cent of the children quit school before reaching the seventh grade.

It is therefore with pleasure that I present as acting chairman of the committee the present school teachers' salary bill. For two years I have worked with other members of the committee to secure the enactment of this legislation.

The bill as originally introduced was not satisfactory to the teachers, and feeling that a bill purporting to help the teachers should in reality do so, I framed some amendments to the bill last year and was successful in having them adopted by the entire District Committee.

These amendments, which give the teachers an increase in pay, an equitable place in the salary schedule, and just recognition for professional services already rendered, have been incorporated in this measure.

The bill as amended has met with the approval of the Board of Education, and is satisfactory to the school officials and school-teachers.

I have some pride in having helped to make this measure a general measure affecting and benefiting every grade and branch of the school system of the District of Columbia.

I am intensely interested in education, especially in the primary grades, for this is the only method by which we can hope to elevate the standards of citizenship in this country, and the most fundamental consideration in any democratic community is a well-organized and well-paid public school system.

I am a firm believer in "Education for democracy, democracy in education." It is for this reason that I have favored the various measures before us looking to the development of a constructive school system, and this bill is a vital part of such a program. It is universally admitted that the standard of a school system is determined by the quality of its teaching, and we can not expect to have highly trained men and women to be attracted to the work in which the entrance salary is too low. Nor can we expect them to remain—to decide to make this all-important profession a life's work if they are not after some years of successful teaching to receive a salary comparable with those paid in other lines of endeavor.

The men and women in this profession are rendering a service of the highest importance in this community, and they should receive a remuneration commensurate with their services.

The public is coming more and more to realize the need and the worth of paying them a decent wage.

This bill provides for the grade teacher, who before she receives her permanent appointment must have completed a four-year high-school course, a two-year normal-school course, and have taught one year on probation; it gives to her an entrance salary of $1,400, and permits her, after eight years of successful teaching, to receive a salary of $2,200.

To the high and normal school teacher, who before her permanent appointment must have completed a four-year high-school course, a four-year college course, and passed a difficult entrance examination, and have taught one year on probation—for them there is provided an entrance salary of $1,800, and enables her after 10 years of successful teaching to receive the maximum salary of $2,800.

This bill legalizes and establishes by permanent law certain features of the school system which at present are being conducted through authority of the annual appropriation as carried in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It legalizes and authorizes the Junior High School, which everyone recognizes as a great need for children between the lower grades and the high-school classes.

The school for teaching Americanization, which is doing such a splendid constructive work in Washington, is here given a real legal status.

In its entirety it is a constructive piece of legislation, designed to help the teacher and the entire community, and I strongly urge its adoption by the membership of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAMPERT].

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Chairman, the public schools of the District of Columbia are organized, controlled, and operated under the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 20, 1906. A few amendments carried in appropriations bills have been put into effect since 1906, but no comprehensive legislation affecting the salaries of teachers has been enacted since 1906. The increases in salaries that have been granted from time to time to the employees of the board of education by successive appropriation acts have been of a temporary and limited nature.

The Committee on the District of Columbia is convinced that there is urgent need that the salary schedule thus authorized in appropriations bills should be revised, extended, and made more permanent. This new legislation is needed not only to bring assurance to those teachers now in the service, but to attract teachers of high qualifications to the Capital City where there has been a shortage of teachers because of inadequate salaries.

There have been many developments and a considerable extension of activities in the school system since 1906 in so far as the limitations of the old law would permit such changes. In order to stabilize what has been accomplished, and in order to make possible additional improvements in the public schools, this bill carries legislative authorization as follows:

1. It legalizes and renders more permanent the salaries of employees.
2. It authorizes and provides salaries for activities and positions which have developed in the public schools since 1906, such as junior high schools, vacation schools, community centers, administrative principals and assistant principals in high schools.
3. It abolishes "session room pay" and provides a better method of paying principals of elementary schools.
4. It also abolishes the classification of the elementary teachers into five salary groups, and provides a uniform basic salary with annual $100 increments for a limited number of years.
5. It authorizes the employment of temporary teachers and the appointment of annual substitute teachers.

The report of the subcommittee on schools and playgrounds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, submitted to the Senate by Senator CAPPER, indorses and recommends the passage of a teachers' salary bill. This salary legislation undoubtedly represents one of the most urgent needs of the public-school system of the District of Columbia. This salary legislation will in no way interfere with the enactment of any other legislation suggested, supported, or recommended by committees of Congress in Senator CAPPER's report. On the contrary, this legislation should be viewed as the first legislation looking toward reorganization and rehabilitation of the school system of Washington. This salary bill has been prepared with the expectation that subsequent legislation affecting the general organization of the school system will follow.

NECESSITY FOR PASSING THIS BILL AT ONCE.

The public-school teachers of the District of Columbia are in a precarious position with regard to their salaries if this bill is not enacted into law before next July 1. These teachers employed as they are in the Federal District have received the annual bonus of $240 along with the Federal employees. The Federal employees have been provided for in the recent reclassification legislation, and there is not likely to be any legislation before Congress this session with respect to continuing the bonus. The teachers are facing an actual loss of salary if this bill does not pass at this session of Congress.

This bill provides for only the educational employees of the Board of Education. This act does not carry salary-adjustment provisions for the following groups of employees: Clerks and stenographers, medical inspectors, dental inspectors, school nurses, engineers, janitors and other custodial positions. All such employees have been provided for in the reclassification legislation. Teachers are correspondingly provided for in this salary bill.

The policemen and the firemen of the District of Columbia were confronted with the same situation that now confronts the teachers. They were threatened with an actual loss of salary through discontinuance of the bonus. The House has passed a salary bill which has covered in the bonus of $240 which the police and firemen enjoyed annually and has granted them an increase that is not incompatible with the provisions of the reclassification act granting increases to Federal employees.

This bill provides similarly for the teachers. In it they are safeguarded against the loss of the bonus, they are given the longevity increase in pay they have earned under the provisions of the present law, and they are given a reasonable increase in salary corresponding to the increase granted to Federal employees.

COST OF TEACHERS' SALARY LEGISLATION.

In this time of financial economy the cost of enacting this legislation is a major consideration for Congress. It may be presumed that the enactment of this legislation for the extension and improvement of the public-school service will increase expenditures for public education in Washington.

Before taking up the detailed cost of this proposed legislation it will be appropriate to consider the present cost of education in the District of Columbia as compared with the cost of public education in other cities.

PER CAPITA COSTS IN CITY SCHOOLS.

Statistical circular, No. 1, issued by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior, on January 1, 1923, contains an analysis of the current expenses per student in average daily attendance in 170 city school systems. This information is for the school year 1921-22, and cities are arranged in groups according to the population of the cities. While the statistics for Washington were not included in the original leaflet, they have been subsequently computed by the Bureau of Education.

CITIES WITH OVER 100,000 POPULATION.

These tables show that among the 31 cities with a population of 100,000 or over included in this tabulation, Washington stands twenty-second from the top in the amount of money expended per pupil in her public schools. There are 21 cities that expend more per pupil than Washington for public education and 9 cities only pay less. The per capita cost of current expenses in Washington is $77.69. At the head of the list of cities with 100,000 population or more stands Yonkers, N. Y., with an expenditure of $121.60 per pupil. Other of the larger cities are: Springfield, Mass., $118.90; Buffalo, $116.60; Newark, N. J., $110.89; Oakland, Calif., $104.15; Boston, $103.89; Detroit, $102.95; San Francisco, $94.59; Chicago, $89.40; St. Louis, $87.85; Minneapolis, $84.52.

The complete information for the 31 cities of 100,000 population or over is contained in the following table:

On the basis of the per capita cost of instruction in the cities comparable in size with Washington, it is apparent that not enough money is now being expended for public education in Washington if Congress expects the Nation's Capital to take her rightful place educationally among the cities of her population class.

CITIES OF 20,000 TO 100,000 POPULATION.

There are many cities in the country with a population of from 30,000 to 100,000 people that are paying more for public education than is paid in the Nation's Capital. If Washington be compared with the 40 cities reported in this document, issued by the United States Bureau of Education, that comparison will show that 26 of these cities are now paying more per pupil for public education than Washington is paying and 14 only are paying less. In this group of 40 cities, 9 cities are paying more than $100 per pupil for public education as compared with $77.69 expended in Washington. The following is a list of such cities with the per capita expended for current expenses in each city:

From the above facts it is clear that Congress is now appropriating comparatively less money for public education in Washington than most of the cities of corresponding size are providing, and that many of the smaller cities of the country are likewise paying more for public education than is being paid in Washington. On the basis of these facts, the reasonable increase in appropriations necessitated by this legislation is defensible.

PER CENT OF MUNICIPAL FUNDS DEVOTED TO SCHOOLS.

In addition to the per pupil cost of public education in Washington the question of increasing the appropriations for public education in the Nation's Capital may be answered by the consideration of another group of facts, namely, the proportion of municipal funds devoted to public education in the several cities.

According to City School Leaflet No. 4, published in December, 1922, by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior, Washington is spending a lesser proportion of her total expenditures for municipal functions than is expended for public education in many other cities. This leaflet shows the per cent of all expenditures for current expenses of all municipal departments in 174 cities in 1920 or in 1921 which was devoted to the current expenses of public education.

CITIES WITH OVER 100,000 POPULATION.

According to this report, in cities of 100,000 population or more the per cent of total expenditures devoted to the schools ranges from 53.9 in Kansas City, Kans., to 23.8 per cent in Philadelphia. Washington expended in 1920-21, 30.5 per cent of her total appropriations for public education. On the basis of these figures Washington stands thirty-ninth among 51 cities in the proportion of municipal funds devoted to public education. The information for the 51 cities is as follows:

CITIES OF FROM 50,000 TO 100,000 POPULATION (1920-21).

If Washington be compared with cities of from 50,000 to 100,000 population, that comparison will show that Washington stands fifty-third among 57 cities; that is, 52 of the 57 cities in this group are expending a larger proportion of public funds for their schools than is being expended in the Nation's Capital and only 4 cities are expending comparatively less than Washington:

CITIES OF 30,000 TO 50,000 POPULATION (1920-21).

If the percentage of municipal funds devoted to public education in Washington be compared with the proportion of municipal funds expended for public education in cities of from 30,000 to 50,000 population, that comparison will show that Washington stands fifty-ninth among 68 cities; that is, 9 cities are paying a smaller proportion of municipal funds for schools than does Washington and 59 cities are expending a larger proportion of municipal funds for public education.

From the above information it is clear that Washington is expending comparatively a smaller proportion of her municipal expenditures for public education than is being expended in a large proportion of the cities of the country.

The conclusion is inevitable, therefore, that both from the standpoint of per capita cost and from the standpoint of proportion of municipal funds expended for public education an increase in expenditure for public education in the Nation's Capital is warranted and indeed must be expected if Congress is to do justice by the schools of Washington.

IMMEDIATE COST OF THIS LEGISLATION.

This legislation affects 2,641 employees who were on probationary or permanent tenure on July 1, 1923. The computations of cost are based upon this number of employees and on the assumption that they continue in their present salary classes and advance regularly to the maximum salaries of those classes. These 2,641 employees are distributed as follows:

Title	Class	Number
Teachers of kindergartens and elementary schools.....	1	1,845
Teachers of junior high schools.....	2	62
Teachers in senior high and normal schools.....	3	531
School librarians.....	4	10
Teaching principals with from 4 to 7 rooms, elementary schools.....	5	18
Teaching principals with from 8 to 15 rooms.....	6	59
Administrative principals with 16 rooms or more.....	7	28
Principals of junior high schools.....	8	6
Principals of senior high and normal schools.....	9	9
Directors of special subjects and departments.....	10	17
Heads of departments and assistant principals.....	11	19
Supervising principals.....	12	14
Community center department:
Director.....	1	1
General secretaries.....	2	2
Community secretaries.....	3	6
Department of school attendance and work permits:
Director (new position).....	0	0
Chief attendance officers.....	2	2
Attendance officers.....	0	0
Census inspectors (new position).....	0	0
Board of examiners for white schools—chief examiner (new position).....	0	0
Assistant superintendents.....	2	2
First assistant superintendents (new position).....	0	0
Superintendent of schools.....	1	1
Total.....		2,641

The average increase in salary for the 2,641 employees affected by this bill for the first year of its operation is $153.75. The teaching group, which includes a great majority of the persons affected, will receive average increases in salary during the school year beginning July 1, 1924, over the amount which they will receive under the present schedule during the same year as follows:

Average increase in salary in Keller bill.

Position:
Teachers of kindergartens and elementary schools.....	$132.98
Teachers of junior high schools.....	153.83
Teachers in senior high and normal schools.....	114.28
School librarians.....	124.00
Teaching principals with from 4 to 7 rooms.....	388.36
Teaching principals with from 8 to 15 rooms.....	370.68

The total cost of putting this legislation into operation during the first year beginning July 1, 1924, is estimated to be $468,745. Under the present fiscal relations between the National Government and the District of Columbia 60 per cent of this cost will be met by taxation in the District, and 40 per cent will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The amount which the District of Columbia will pay from taxation is $281,247, and the amount which will be paid out of the United States Treasury is $187,498. In comparison with the cost to the Government of increasing the compensation of Federal employees, under the provisions of the reclassification legislation, this increased expenditure for teachers' salaries in the District of Columbia can not be considered exorbitant, but on the contrary must be viewed as moderate and reasonable.

ULTIMATE COST OF THIS LEGISLATION.

The difference between the minimum salary now paid some groups of teachers and the minimum salary proposed in the Keller bill is not great. This accounts, in part, for the comparatively low cost of putting this schedule into effect during the first year, because the placing of the teacher in the new schedule is based upon the present compensation of those same teachers.

The maximum salaries under the present salary schedule are exceedingly low. The Keller bill establishes maximum salaries considerably higher than the present maximum salaries. The maximum salaries proposed in the Keller bill establish rates of compensation for teachers and officials which are believed to be high enough to be sought by competently trained persons who want to come into the service, and also high enough to retain competent people in the service after appointment. It may be said that this is one of the strongest arguments in favor of the passage of the Keller bill. Naturally, it may be expected that the establishment of these higher rates of maximum compensation will, in the course of a number of years, considerably increase the amount of the appropriations necessary for teachers' salaries in the District of Columbia.

The average ultimate increase in compensation per person for the 2,641 employees is $830.73. Teachers will reach this maximum salary only gradually in steps of $100 per year for several years.

The average per capita increase for teachers in the Keller bill over the present schedule of July 1, 1924, is as follows:

Average increase in salary in Keller bill.

Position:
Teachers of kindergartens and elementary schools.....	$928.23
Teachers of junior high schools.....	924.19
Teachers of senior high and normal schools.....	469.94
School librarians.....	700.00
Teaching principals with from 4 to 7 rooms.....	681.67
Teaching principals with from 8 to 15 rooms.....	670.68

The total increase in appropriations necessitated by the enactment of this legislation was shown in the report of the committee recommending the passage of this bill as follows:

	Cost.	Increase over previous year.
1924.....	$4,712,053
1925.....	5,180,800	$468,745
1926.....	5,445,900	265,000
1927.....	5,710,800	265,000
1928.....	5,974,200	263,400
1929.....	6,218,700	244,500
1930.....	6,462,700	244,000
1931.....	6,710,800	248,100
1932.....	6,966,200	255,400
1933.....	7,075,300	109,100
1934.....	7,211,100	135,800
1935.....	7,260,900	69,800
1936.....	7,285,500	24,600
1937.....	7,304,500	19,000
1938.....	7,310,800	6,300
1939.....	7,317,000	6,200

It should be observed that the increase in cost is gradual and is distributed over a period of 12 or 15 years. This estimate is conservative and is not likely to be exceeded for these 2,641 employees, because the amount of money involved will be reduced whenever one of these persons retires from the school service and is succeeded by a person who is appointed to a salary at the beginning of the salary schedule or, as provided in the bill, to a place in the schedule not more than one-half of the distance up the schedule.

SUMMARY.

The American people believe in public education. As has been shown, cities of the country are expending from 30 per cent to over 50 per cent of their total revenues for public education. Justice to the school-teachers and officials of Washington requires that Congress increase the salaries for their services. Unless this legislation passes, the comparatively low compensation of teachers in Washington will be actually reduced through the loss of the bonus after June 3, 1924. Congress is not now appropriating as much money per pupil for public education in Washington as are many large and small cities of the country. Moreover, most of the cities of the country are expending a larger proportion of the revenues for municipal government for public education than is being expended for public education in Washington. The Keller bill, which is now before the House, was prepared by the Board of Education after most painstaking attention and extensive consideration. The testimony presented at the hearings on this bill before the Committee of the District of Columbia contains incontestable evidence in support of the salary schedule and legislation contained in the Keller bill. The increased expenditures for teachers' salaries in Washington necessitated by the enactment of this legislation will provide for a corresponding increase in the efficiency and service of the teachers and officials in the schools of the Nation's Capital.

I urge that this bill be passed without amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMPERT. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman said that Washington is spending less on its teachers than many cities in this country. What about the cost of living in Washington; is it not true that the cost of living is higher in Washington than most other cities?

Mr. LAMPERT. I find it higher than any place I ever lived in.

Mr. LAZARO. Then it follows that we ought to pay the teachers more.

Mr. LAMPERT. Unquestionably.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I regret exceedingly that I find myself in disagreement with my colleagues on the committee who favorably reported this Keller bill, H. R. 6721. I heartily agree with the raises it provides for the teachers, but I can not accept the enormous raises it gives to the executive officers. Let me give you the history of this proposed legislation.

Under the permission to extend, I insert the following:

On February 2, 1924, the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia sent their specially prepared teachers' salary bill, which they said met with the financial program of the President and had been approved by the Bureau of the Budget, to the chairman of our committee, requesting that such bill be introduced and passed, and I now quote their letter, as follows:

[Board of Commissioners: Cuno H. Rudolph, president; James F. Oyster; J. Franklin Bell, major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; Daniel E. Garges, secretary.]

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Washington, February 2, 1924.

Hon. STUART F. REED,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, and to request that the bill be introduced by you in the House of Representatives.

It is proposed by this measure to establish a new schedule of salaries for officers, teachers, and other employees of the Board of Education, to be effective on and after July 1, 1924. These several employees are expressly excluded by the terms of the classification act of March 4, 1923, from the benefits thereunder. At the present time teachers and other public-school employees receive the annual bonus of $240, and unless provision be made for an increase in present basic salaries all these employees would be paid less compensation in the fiscal year beginning July 1 than they now receive.

The commissioners are advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that the proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Very respectfully,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

CHAIRMAN REED PROMPTLY INTRODUCED COMMISSIONERS' BILL.

Promptly after its receipt Chairman Reed, on the 2d day of February, 1924, introduced the bill sent him by the commissioners, same being H. R. 6576. Just as soon as the subject was taken up for consideration by the committee it was ascertained that this Reed bill, H. R. 6576, which the commissioners said had been agreed upon by the Bureau of the Budget, did not meet with the approval of certain school officials, who had a special bill of their own. The gentleman from Minnesota said immediately that he would introduce the bill these officials wanted, and he did introduce same in the House on February 7, 1924, same being H. R. 6721.

Whereupon the chairman of the committee on February 16, 1924, submitted a copy of this new Keller bill (H. R. 6721) to said commissioners for action by the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16, 1924.

DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIRS: Inclosed is copy of H. R. 6721 for your consideration and report.

Very truly yours,

STUART F. REED,
Chairman of Committee.

KELLER BILL IN CONFLICT WITH FINANCIAL POLICY OF THE PRESIDENT.

On February 26, 1924, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia reported adversely on the Keller bill, stating that the Director of the Budget advised that it is in conflict with the financial policy of the President. I quote their letter, as follows:

FEBRUARY 26, 1924.

Hon. STUART F. REED,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: With further reference to your letter of February 16, 1924, transmitting therewith for consideration and report a copy of H. R. 6721, entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to inform you that this bill was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, and the commissioners are informed by the Director of the Budget, under date of February 28, 1924, that the bill is in conflict with the financial policy of the President.

There is pending before your committee H. R. 6576, of caption identical with that of H. R. 6721, under the provisions of which certain salaries are fixed for teachers, officers, and other employees of the Board of Education, effective on July 1, 1924. The provisions of this bill represented a joint agreement between the Bureau of the Budget, the Board of Education, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and was transmitted to you, and to the chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, with the statement that its provisions were not in conflict with the financial policy of the President.

Very respectfully,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

REED BILL, H. R. 6576, JOINT AGREEMENT BETWEEN BUDGET BUREAU, BOARD OF EDUCATION, AND DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

You will note that in the letter from the commissioners they state that they submitted the Keller bill, H. R. 6721, to the Bureau of the Budget, and that the Director of the Budget advised that the Keller bill is in conflict with the financial policy of the President. You will also note that they further stated that the Reed bill, H. R. 6576, was the joint agreement between the Bureau of the Budget, the Board of Education, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And on March 1, 1924, the chairman of the committee notified Mr. KELLER of such action, sending him a copy of said report from the commissioners, the following being a copy of such notice:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1, 1924.

Hon. OSCAR E. KELLER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: The District Commissioners have submitted a report on H. R. 6721, your bill to fix the salaries of teachers, etc., copy of which is inclosed.

Very truly yours,

STUART F. REED,
Chairman of the Committee.

REED BILL, H. R. 6576, COMPARED WITH KELLER BILL, H. R. 6721.

For the benefit of my colleagues I will now compare the salary raises in the Reed bill with the salary raises in the Keller bill:

Teachers in kindergartens and elementary schools.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Group A:
Reed bill.....	$1,400	$100 for 6 years.	$2,000
Keller bill.....	1,400	100 for 8 years.	2,200
Group B:
Reed bill.....	2,100	100 for 3 years.	2,400
Keller bill.....	2,300	100 for 3 years.	2,600

UNDER PRESENT LAW.

Under the present law kindergarten teachers are in class 1, and get a basic salary of $1,200, with an additional $25 for four years, making the maximum $1,300, plus the $240 bonus that is now paid all teachers up to July 1. Elementary school-teachers are in classes 2, 3, 4, and 5. Class 2 receive the same as kindergarten teachers. Class 3 receive a minimum of $1,200, with a raise each year of $25 for 10 years, making the maximum $1,450, with, of course, the $240 bonus added to all. Class 4 receive a minimum of $1,200, with a raise each year of $30 for 10 years, making the maximum $1,500, with, of course, the $240 bonus added to all. Class 5 receive a minimum of $1,200, with a raise each year of $40 for 10 years, making the maximum $1,600, with, of course, the $240 bonus added to all.

Teachers in junior high schools.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Group A:
Reed bill.....	$1,600	$100 for 5 years.	$2,100
Keller bill.....	1,600	100 for 8 years.	2,400
Group B:
Reed bill.....	2,200	$100 for 3 years.	2,500
Keller bill.....	2,300	100 for 3 years.	2,600

Both the Reed bill and the Keller bill provide that these junior high school-teachers are to be selected from the elementary teachers having proper qualifications.

Both bills provide that teachers in the junior high school who possess the eligibility requirements of teachers in the senior high school and the normal schools shall be placed in Group C and in Group D, and that Group C shall receive the same salaries as teachers in Group A of the senior high and normal schools, and that Group D shall receive the same salaries as teachers in Group B of the senior high and normal schools.

Teachers in senior high schools and normal schools.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Group A:
Reed bill.....	$1,800	$100 for 8 years.	$2,600
Keller bill.....	1,800	$100 for 10 years.	2,800
Group B:
Reed bill.....	2,700	$100 for 3 years.	3,000
Keller bill.....	2,900	$100 for 3 years.	3,200

PRESENT LAW.

Under the present law these teachers in Group A receive a minimum of $1,440 with an increase of $100 per year for 8 years, making a maximum of $2,240, all of them, however, now receiving the $240 bonus extra until July 1, 1924. Teachers in Group B receive a minimum of $2,200 with an annual increase of $100 for 3 years, making a maximum of $2,500, all of them, of course, receiving the extra bonus of $240 to July 1.

School librarians.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Group A:
Reed bill.....	$1,400	$100 for 6 years.	$2,000
Keller bill.....	1,400	$100 for 8 years.	2,200
Group B:
Reed bill.....	2,100	$100 for 2 years.	2,300
Keller bill.....	2,300	$100 for 3 years.	2,600

Salaries now being paid to higher school officials.

Superintendent.....	6,000			6,000

While the substantive law permits a salary of only $5,000 per year to be paid to the superintendent of schools, an extra $1,000 per year has been paid him through a provision placed in the appropriation bill each year for several years past. So that while under the law he has been authorized to receive only $5,000, the Congress has nevertheless paid him $6,000 per year for two or three years past.

BILL PROPOSES TO PAY SUPERINTENDENT $10,000.

The bill proposes to pay Superintendent Ballou $10,000, which is $2,500 more than a Congressman receives, and $2,500 more than a Senator of the United States receives. This should not be allowed. Each year for several years it has been threatened by those who insisted on paying the extra $1,000 to Mr. Ballou that if we didn't raise his salary we would lose him, but he has continued on for several years, and we haven't lost him yet. Under no circumstances should this salary be fixed at a sum greater than $7,500. If we should be so unfortunate as to lose Mr. Ballou, there will be plenty of excellent talent and material to select another superintendent within the salary limit. As my colleagues have fixed the salaries of all the administrative officers at much higher figures than they should be, I want to call attention to what our constituents at home think about this question of raising salaries. The people in the States fix the salary of their governor. Let me call your attention to 28 States whose 28 governors do not get more than $5,000 per year:

North Dakota.....	5,000	R. A. Nestos.....	Republican.....	Do.
Oregon.....	5,000	W. M. Pierce.....	Democrat.....	January, 1927.
South Carolina.....	5,000	T. G. McLeod.....	do.....	January, 1925.
Virginia.....	5,000	E. L. Triplett.....	do.....	February, 1926.
Wisconsin.....	5,000	J. J. Blaine.....	Republican.....	January, 1925.

Now, of the remaining 20 States, let me show you the number of governors who do not receive over 7,200 per year:

State.	Salary of governor.	Name of governor.	Politics.	Expiration of term of office.
Florida.....	$6,000	C. A. Hardee.....	Democrat.....	January, 1925.
Utah.....	6,000	C. A. Mabey.....	Republican.....	Do.
Washington.....	6,000	L. F. Hart.....	do.....	Do.
Arizona.....	6,500	G. W. P. Hunt.....	Democrat.....	Do.
Kentucky.....	6,500	W. J. Fields.....	do.....	December, 1927.
Minnesota.....	7,000	J. A. O. Preus.....	Republican.....	January, 1925.
Nevada.....	7,200	J. J. Scruggam.....	Democrat.....	January, 1927.

Hence you will see that the governors of 35 States of this Union now receive salaries ranging between $3,000 and $7,200, and yet my colleagues in this bill are proposing to raise the salary of this school superintendent from $6,000 to $10,000. I am against it, because I know that the people back home are against it in at least 35 out of the 48 States.

First assistant superintendents.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Reed bill.....	$5,000	$200 for 5 years.	$6,000
Keller bill.....	5,000	do.....	6,000
Amount that should be allowed.....	3,500	$100 for 10 years.	4,000

Under no circumstances should the salary provided for in the committee bill be granted to assistant superintendents. It is out of all proportion to salaries paid to other important public officials. Circuit trial judges in most of the States do not receive over $4,000, and they try men for their lives, and try civil cases involving millions of dollars in property rights.

Assistant superintendents.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Reed bill.....	$4,300	$100 for 4 years.	$4,700
Keller bill.....	4,200	$100 for 5 years.	4,700
Amount that should be allowed.....	3,200	$100 for 8 years.	4,000

Chief, board of examiners.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Reed and Keller bills.....	$4,000	$100 for 5 years.	$4,500

Thus under the Keller bill there will be paid to colored examiners $4,500 per year, or $500 per year more than the governors of seven States receive, and that much more than the circuit trial judges of most of the States now receive.

SUPERVISING PRINCIPALS.

Both the Reed and Keller bills pay the supervising principals a minimum basic salary of $4,000 with an annual raise of $100 for five years, or a maximum salary of $4,500.

They now receive $2,400 with an annual increase of $100 for five years, or a maximum of $2,900. Their salary should be fixed at not more than $2,700, with an annual raise of $100 for eight years, which gives them a maximum of $3,500.

It will be remembered that most of these officers have already served the required number of years to start them in with the maximum at once, immediately following the passage of this law, to take effect July 1, 1924.

Heads of departments and assistant principals.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Reed bill.....	$3,200	$100 for 3 years.	$3,500
Keller bill.....	3,200	$100 for 5 years.	3,700
Amount that should be allowed.....	2,700	$100 for 5 years.	3,200

Under the present law they now receive $2,400 with an annual increase of $100 for five years, or a maximum of $2,900. And those receiving less than $2,500 also receive the bonus of $240.

DIRECTORS OF SPECIAL SUBJECTS AND DEPARTMENTS.

Under both the Reed bill and the Keller bill it is proposed to pay the above a minimum of $3,200 with an annual increase of $100 for three years, making a maximum of $3,500. This is entirely too much and should be cut down considerably.

PRINCIPALS OF SENIOR HIGH SCHOOLS AND NORMAL SCHOOLS.

Under both the Reed bill and the Keller bill it is proposed to pay the above $4,000 basic salary, with an annual increase of $100 per year for five years, making a maximum of $4,500. They now receive a minimum of $2,700, with increase of $100 for five years, making a maximum of $3,200, and it is proposed to give them a $1,300 raise. It is entirely too much by at least $500 to $750, and should be cut down.

PRINCIPALS OF JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS.

Both the Reed bill and the Keller bill propose to pay the above a minimum basic salary of $3,500, with an annual increase of $100 for five years, making a maximum of $4,000. It is entirely too much, and should be cut down.

Administrative principals with 16 rooms or more and principals of vocational and Americanization schools.

	Basic salary per year.	Annual increase.	Maximum salary.
Reed bill.....	$2,700	$100 for 3 years.	$3,000
Keller bill.....	2,900	do.....	3,200

The above is entirely too much and should be cut down. And I shall offer amendments from the floor to reduce these unwarranted raises, and hope that my colleagues in the House will support same, and thus uphold the Bureau of the Budget.

FAVOR THE RAISES TO THE ACTUAL TEACHERS.

I am in favor of granting the raises to all the actual teachers who really perform the hard work in the schoolrooms, and the never-ending home work that all good teachers must do, if they are conscientious in performing their duties.

THE OLD 60-40 BASIS OF FISCAL RELATION.

Let me again ask why is it that the Government of the United States should be called upon to build and maintain the Washington schools? There are 70,000 school children in attendance. Many of them belong to families who have no connection whatever with the business affairs of this Government. There are about 2,500 children living in Virginia and Maryland who attend the Washington schools. Why should the Government be called upon to build the buildings, buy the playgrounds, furnish the free schoolbooks, and pay the salaries of the twenty-five hundred and odd teachers to teach them? Until 1921 the whole people of the United States paid 60 per cent of all this expense. And since 1921 the whole people of the United States have paid 40 per cent of such expense. Why should they pay any part of it? Why shouldn't Washington people pay the expense of sending Washington children to Washington schools?

PRESENT 60-40 FISCAL RELATION.

Under the present system now in force the people of Washington pay a total tax of only $1.20 on the $100, on both real and personal property, with a personal property exemption of $1,000 free of all taxation, and with their property assessed at about half valuation, and the whole people of the United States then pay all the balance of their expenses under this ridiculous 60-40 fiscal system, under which the Government makes numerous appropriations for the District of Columbia local civic matters, in numerous supply bills, where the appropriation is taken out of the United States Treasury 100 per cent.

AFFECTS ENTIRE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

This is not a bill that affects merely the people living in the District of Columbia. It affects all of the people in the whole United States, for the whole people of the Nation pay 40 per cent of all the salaries of the officers and employees of this school department and of all of the other expenses of the District of Columbia. And the people of Washington pay a total tax rate of only $1.20 on the $100, assessed at about half valuation, while, counting the State, county, school, and other civic taxes, all of the other cities of the United States, both small and large, pay taxes running from $2.75 to $6 and $7 per $100.

THE OLD SLOGAN HAS WORN THREADBARE.

Whenever a Member of Congress seeks to change the unjust system of allowing the people of Washington to pay the ridiculous tax rate of only $1.20 on the $100, the newspapers and citizens' associations immediately resort to their old battle cry—

"That Washington is the Nation's Capital and must be made the most beautiful city in the world; that the Government should pay a big part of the local city expenses because it owns so much property here."

Washington is the Nation's Capital and should be made the most beautiful city in the world, and I will go just as far as any other man through all legitimate and proper means to make it the most beautiful city in the world. Before the Government built all of its fine institutions here Washington was a mere village. Property here was of little value. It is because of the fact that the United States has spent its millions here that has caused some lots to jump in value from $100 to $100,000. Every piece of property owned by the Government in Washington is daily enjoyed by the people of Washington.

The local pay roll of the Government is a bonanza to the merchants and business enterprises of Washington. The Government pays its nearly 100,000 employees in Washington their wages promptly every two weeks in new money that has never been spent before. Chicago, or any other big city in the United States, would gladly exempt the Government from paying all taxes on its property to get it to move its capital to such city.

Because we want to make it the most beautiful city in the world is no reason why the Government should pay for building million-dollar school buildings and employing 2,500 teachers and buying the schoolbooks for the 70,000 school children of the thousands of families living in Washington who have no connection whatever with the Government except to bleed it on all occasions and to grow rich on the Government pay rolls expended here.

Because we want to make Washington the most beautiful city in the world is no reason why the Government should pay for the army of garbage gatherers, the army of ash gatherers, the army of trash gatherers, the army of street cleaners and sprinklers, the army of tree pruners and sprayers, and the street-lighting system for the several hundred miles of private residences owned by rich tax dodgers who have no connection whatever with the Government; nor is it any reason why the Government should pay for their water system, their sewer system, their police protection, their fire protection, for playgrounds for their children, for parks for their enjoyment, for their municipal golf grounds, for their numerous public tennis courts, for their bathing beaches, for their skating ponds, for their cricket grounds, for their baseball and football grounds, for their horseback riding paths, for paving the streets in front of their residences and maintaining and keeping them in repair, for building their million-dollar bridges, furnishing million-and-a-half-dollar market houses, their municipal trial and appellate courts, their jails and houses of correction, their municipal hospitals, asylums for their insane, special asylum schools for their deaf and dumb, asylums for their orphans, a university for their 110,000 colored people, their municipal libraries, their municipal community-center facilities, salaries of all their municipal officers, employees, buildings, furnishings, equipments, sanitary and health departments, and the hundreds of other things that all other cities of the United States must furnish and pay for themselves, but a very substantial part of which the people of Washington have been getting out of the Federal Treasury for years.

The magnificent Capitol and its beautiful grounds are daily enjoyed by Washington people. The Congressional Library, which cost $6,032,124, in addition to the sum of $585,000 paid for its grounds, and for the upkeep of which Congress annually spends a large sum of money, is daily enjoyed by the people of Washington. The Government furnished and maintains the magnificent Botanic Garden here for the pleasure and enjoyment of Washington people. The Government furnished and maintains the wonderful Zoo Park, with all of its interesting animals, for the instruction and amusement of Washington children. The Government furnished and maintains the extensive and most beautiful Rock Creek Park, with its picturesque picnic grounds, its miles of wonderful boulevards, its incomparable scenery, all for the pleasure of Washington people. Congress has spent millions of dollars reclaiming and purchasing the lands now embraced in the Potomac Parks and Speedway, daily used and enjoyed by Washington people. The Government has spent several million dollars building the various bridges spanning the Potomac River, and huge sums for the bridge spanning the Anacostia River, and spent $1,000,000 building the beautiful "Million-Dollar Bridge" on Connecticut Avenue. The Government has spent millions of dollars on the Lincoln Memorial, grounds, and reflecting pools, the Washington Monument grounds, Lincoln Park, on East Capitol Street, and the numerous beautiful little parks scattered all over the city, all for the pleasure and benefit of Washington people.

During the recess of Congress I wrote to the mayor of every city of any size in the United States and asked them to advise us of their local tax rate, of the charges for water, sewer, paving, etc., and what rate, in their judgment, they thought Washington people should pay as a minimum. I want to insert just a few in this report. The consensus of opinion was that the rate here should be at least $2.50 per $100, and there was a large per cent who were in favor of it being much higher, and the rates for taxation ranged from $2.75 to over $6.50, and in all these cities the people were charged more for water, sewer, and paving.

Let me again quote a few excerpts from the letter sent me by the mayor of the city of Peoria, Ill.:

[City of Peoria, Ill. Mayor's office. Edward N. Woodruff, mayor.]

NOVEMBER 1, 1923.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Representative, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Answering your questionnaire of October 15, concerning relative tax rates of the cities of Washington and Peoria:

The tax rates on each $100 taxable valuation levied against the real and personal property of the citizens of Peoria for the year 1922 is itemized as follows:

City corporate tax, including library, tuberculosis, garbage, and police and fire pension fund.....	$1.94
Street and bridge.....	.24
School district.....	2.70
Park district.....	.41
	$5.29
State.....	0.45
County.....	.50
County highway.....	.26
	1.29
Total, all purposes.....	6.58

Unless there is a tremendous revenue derived from sources other than from taxes the rate of $1.20 for Washington is ridiculous. While I have never had my attention called to this disparity, I am amazed that the light has not been let into financial affairs of the Capital City long before this time.

You should be supported by every colleague in your effort to compel the citizens of Washington to do theirs, even as every citizen outside the District is doing his.

Wishing you success, I am,
Very truly yours,

E. N. WOODRUFF, Mayor.

The foregoing statement from the mayor of Peoria, Ill., fairly indicates the sentiment of the people over the United States. It might be enlightening to quote from a few of the letters received the tax rates of some of the cities over the United States as certified to me by the mayors of such cities.

When I speak of the tax rate of these cities I, of course, mean their total tax—State, county, school, and municipal—which is the total tax citizens of those respective cities have to pay on their property, as compared with the $1.20 on the $100 rate Washington people have to pay in the District of Columbia.

The Tax rate paid by the people in Baltimore, Md., $3.27 on the $100; in New Orleans, La., $3.16½ on the $100; in Portland, Oreg., $4.52 on the $100; in my birthplace, Houston, Tex., $4.29½ on the $100; in Ogden, Utah, $3.33 on the $100; in Cheyenne, Wyo., $3.75 on the $100; in Fort Smith, Ark., $3.32 on the $100; in New Bedford, Mass., $3.13; in Burlington, Vt., $3.10 on the $100; in Pittsburgh, Pa., $3.22 on the $100; in St. Louis, Mo., which is a distinct political subdivision of the State, the city tax is $2.43 on the $100; in Boston, Mass., $2.47 on the $100; in Rochester, N. Y., $3.36 on the $100; in Portland, Me., $3.40 on the $100; in Boise City, Idaho, $4.29 on the $100; in Mobile, Ala., $3.40 on the $100; in Detroit, Mich., $2.75 per $100; in Duluth, Minn., $5.79 on the $100; in Atlanta, Ga., $3.15 on the $100; in Kansas City, Mo., $2.93 on the $100; in Minneapolis, Minn., $6.52 on the $100; in Salt Lake City, Utah, $3.18 on the $100; in Oakland, Calif., $4.02 on the $100; in Austin, the capital of Texas, $3.54 on the $100; in Denver, Colo., $2.76 on the $100; in Trenton, N. J., $3.22 on the $100; in Racine, Wis., $2.87 on the $100; in Nashville, Tenn., $2.80 on the $100; in Charlottesville, Va., $2.85. And let me illustrate as the tax rate runs generally over Texas: in Paris, Tex., $4.10 on the $100; in Port Arthur, Tex., $3.54 on the $100; in Tyler, Tex., $4.61 on the $100; in Denison, Tex., $3.32 on the $100; in Waco, Tex., $3.63 on the $100; in Amarillo, Tex., $3.55 on the $100; in Temple, Tex., $3.15; in Wichita Falls, Tex., $5.05 on the $100; in Beaumont, Tex., $4.04.

Mr. Edward F. Bryant, tax collector for San Francisco, Calif., has sent me a statement certifying that the following is the tax rate paid by the citizens in the following cities: In Seattle, Wash., $8.80 on the $100; Chicago, Ill., $8 on the $100; in Reno, Nev., $7.38 on the $100; in New York, N. Y., $5.48 on the $100; in Philadelphia, Pa., $6 on the $100; in Detroit, Mich., $4.48 on the $100; in San Francisco, Calif., $3.47 on the $100; in Los Angeles, Calif., $3.89 on the $100.

What excuse have we to offer to our constituents back at home who are paying the above tax rates for permitting by our votes here the 437,000 people in Washington, D. C., to continue paying the measly little pittance of only $1.20 on the $100, based on a half to two-thirds valuation, when our constituents have to pay all the balance of the expenses of this great city?

THIS VERY UNFAIR, RIDICULOUS FISCAL SYSTEM MUST CEASE.

No Congressman or Senator here can give any good reason why our people at home should continue to pay 40 per cent of all the expenses of running the schools of Washington; of paying the salaries of 2,500 teachers; of furnishing free schoolbooks to 70,000 Washington children; of building million dollar school buildings; of buying numerous playgrounds. If our people at home all knew about it, and knew that they were paying 40 per cent of all of the other expenses of this great city, they would not keep any of us here much longer, if we voted to continue it.

I gave notice some time ago that I have drawn my sword against this pernicious system, and shall keep it unsheathed, and continue this fight until it is changed and until the people of Washington pay a fair rate of taxation, just the same as the people of every other city, large and small, in the United States have to pay; and I am going to raise this question in every bill that comes up which seeks to make the whole people pay the civic expenses of Washington people.

I realize that in this bill it will be impossible to change this pernicious tax system, as any amendment that I might offer for such purpose, would be out of order under the rules of the House, and the chairman in charge of the bill would make a point of order against such amendments, were I to offer them. Such a change will have to come in a separate measure, and I shall not rest until I get such a bill favorably reported to the House for passage.

But let me get back to a discussion of some of the high salaries of executive officers in this bill, which should be reduced. When the initial measure was first prepared for submission to the Board of Education, commissioners, and the Budget Bureau, the high executive officers from the superintendent of schools down, saw to it that their salaries were taken care of and raised to the highest notch possible. Hence these high raises were in the bill the commissioners sent to Chairman REED, which he introduced, and which is known as the Reed bill (H. R. 6576).

When our friend from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] introduced his bill in lieu of the Reed bill and sought to raise the salaries of the teachers over and above those which had been granted by the commissioners bill, Mr. KELLER's bill was submitted to the Budget Bureau for consideration, and I have called your attention to the fact that the Budget Bureau has disapproved of the Keller bill. It says that it is not in accord with the financial policy of the President of the United States, and they disapprove of it. But I am going to show you how you can bring the Keller bill within the limit of the Budget Bureau and not hurt a single teaching teacher. I propose to leave the teachers' salaries just as Mr. KELLER has fixed them in his bill and chop off at the top enough of the big raises allowed executive officers to bring that bill within the Budget estimate.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. The Reed bill, preferred by the Bureau of the Budget, fixes the salary of the superintendent at $8,000.

Mr. BLANTON. No; at $10,000.

Mr. KELLER. No, sir; $8,000.

Mr. BLANTON. That is quibbling between tweedledum and tweedledee. I will show that it is $10,000, and the gentleman should be fair with our colleagues. Whenever you fix a basic salary of the superintendent at $8,000 and then grant him $1,000 a year for two years' services, when he has already served the two years, you make it a $10,000 salary, and my friend knows it as well as I do. That is what was done. The superintendent has already served the two years, and the very minute you pass this bill, instead of it being a basic salary of $8,000, it becomes a salary of $10,000, for he will draw $10,000.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that he started in at $8,000?

Mr. BLANTON. No. The bill does specify that the basic salary shall be $8,000, with an annual increase of $1,000 for each year for two years' service; but as he has already served his two years he will get the maximum of $10,000 to start with.

Mr. SNELL. I am told that the previous service does not apply to the superintendent.

Mr. BLANTON. Practically all of the salaries will start in not at the basic salary on July 1 but at the maximum salary, because most of these officers and teachers already have served the number of years provided for in the bill.

Mr. KELLER. That is not the fact.

Mr. BLANTON. I will show that that is the fact.

Mr. SNELL. I am definitely told that the superintendent does not start in at $10,000; that his previous service does not apply in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Show me the provision in the bill where it specifies that it does not apply. I have studied the bill as carefully as any man on the committee.

Mr. SNELL. I am told that it does not apply to the present director.

Mr. BLANTON. It does apply, and the gentleman from New York will find it out.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the gentleman's interpretation of the bill is correct, it can easily be changed by an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNELL. I am willing to have an amendment adopted to that effect.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not in favor of paying him $10,000.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman may make that statement, but he should not put it on something else.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the bill as it is now written. If the gentleman can find a provision in it that shows that the years already served, constituting longevity allowance does not apply to the superintendent, let him show it to me. There are provisions in the bill which specifically provide that the years already served either in the Washington schools or in any other accredited schools shall be allowed to the teachers in computing their longevity placement. And there is not one word in the bill that prevents the executive officers and superintendent from enjoying the same privileges.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman is referring to the superintendent?

Mr. BLANTON. I am referring to the teachers, officers, and the superintendent.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think that $8,000 is a pretty fair salary, counting capacity and experience of the present superintendent, without any provision for an additional salary? That is $500 more than the average Congressman is receiving. Is not that a sufficient salary?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; more than sufficient. Seven thousand five hundred dollars is enough. I am willing to admit that the present superintendent is just as efficient as any other we could probably find. I have no attack whatever to make on him as an individual or as a superintendent. I think he is probably as good as we can get. I am willing to accept that assumption anyway. I have no fight to make against him. I am fighting the $10,000 salary that he has arranged for himself to draw.

Mr. SHERWOOD. But I asked the gentleman a question. Does he not think that $8,000 a year is sufficient salary?

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is more than sufficient. Seven thousand five hundred dollars is as large as we should make it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A sharp controversy has arisen between the gentleman who is now speaking and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] as to the proper interpretation of this matter of the basic salary. Was that question discussed in the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, it has been so well understood all of the time that there was no room for discussion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I presume, then, that the gentleman will have no objection if there is a question about it incorporating an amendment making it absolutely clear that the law shall not have retroactive effect.

Mr. BLANTON. If you even start to put such an amendment into this bill that prior service shall not count you will have all the teachers and officers in the gallery turning somersaults. Leave it to the occupants of the gallery, and they will tell you that it is their prior service that they want to count.

And they understand that it does count in this bill. And, as a matter of fact, it does count.

If we are going to hire a superintendent at $10,000 a year, I am as willing to hire Mr. Ballou as anybody else, and if anybody is going to lobby, I am willing to have him lobby. He has lobbied as little as any man I ever saw connected with the schools. I have seen lobbyists who would not let you walk down the corridor without meeting them in the House Office Building, and he has not done that. I do not think I ever saw him more than three or four times in the House Office Building since I have been on the committee, but he has no business drawing this big salary out of the Treasury, and I will tell you why.

Let me again remind you of what your constituents think about big salaries. What do your constituents at home think about your governor's salary? They fix the governor's salary. Remember that down in Georgia, where the genial gentleman, Mr. UPSHAW, lives—and he now wants to raise the salary as high as the top-notchers—the people there fix the governor's salary at $5,000 per year in Georgia, as shown by this latest Congressional Directory. The people of the States have had the question submitted to them time and time again to raise the salaries of the governors, but they refuse to do it. Let me show you what the people say about it. In New Hampshire they pay Gov. Fred. H. Brown a salary of $3,000 a year.

Mr. UPSHAW. That is not enough.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes it is, in New Hampshire. At least, the good people of New Hampshire say it is.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I do not think Mr. Ballou is worth $7,000 a year more than the Governor of New Hampshire. In South Dakota those good Republicans out there pay Gov. W. H. McMaster $3,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am going to get to New Jersey in a minute. In Vermont, up in the good old maple-sugar section, the Republicans there pay Gov. Redfield Proctor a salary of $3,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. I must remind my colleagues of what the people at home think about salary raising.

Mr. SNELL. Why not talk about school-teachers instead of governors?

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about salaries and salary raising. The people fix the salaries drawn by our governors.

Mr. SNELL. Why not talk about the salaries of superintendents of schools?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to show the difference between what you pay a governor at home and what you expect to pay a superintendent of schools in Washington.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. And is it not a fact that the State superintendents of schools in these various States receive less money than the governors?

Mr. BLANTON. There is no doubt about that. Up in Delaware the good people pay Gov. William D. Denney a salary of $4,000 a year. In Tennessee the people pay Gov. Austin Peay a salary of $4,000 a year as governor. Down in my own State, we Texas people pay our governor, Hon. Pat M. Neff, a salary of $4,000 a year. Out in Wyoming the people pay their governor, William B. Ross, the salary of $4,000 a year.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am now coming over into Maryland, the home of our friend Mr. ZIEGLER, and I want to show what his constituents and those of our distinguished rider of the great white charger from Baltimore pay their governor. In the State of Maryland they pay Gov. A. C. Ritchie a salary of $4,500 a year, and do you know what you are undertaking to do in this Keller bill? You are undertaking to pay the members of the board of examiners here in the District of Columbia $4,500 a year—as much as the Governor of Maryland receives.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield to me now for some information?

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. Down in Oklahoma the good people of that State pay Gov. M. E. Trapp a salary of $4,500 a year and in Alabama the people pay Gov. W. W. Brandon a salary of $5,000 a year.

In Arkansas they pay their governor, Hon. T. C. McRae, $5,000 a year. In Colorado they pay their governor, Hon. William E. Sweet, $5,000 a year.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In Connecticut they pay their governor, Hon. C. A. Templeton, $5,000 a year. In Georgia they pay $5,000 a year to Governor Walker, and I will say to my friend, who says it is not enough, that he ought to go home and convert his constituents first, and he ought to convert those good people of Atlanta first and get them to pay their governor more money before he comes here and wants to pay the superintendent of schools $10,000 a year, doubling what many governors get.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I prefer the gentleman use the time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIEHLER].

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman know how much they spend maintaining those governors?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. For the present I refuse to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. This message on salary raising comes from the people at home. It will bear repeating. In Idaho they pay Governor Moore $5,000 a year. In Iowa, in that old rock-ribbed Republican State where the tall corn grows, they pay Governor Kendall $5,000 a year.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. And in Kansas they pay Gov. J. M. Davis, $5,000 a year. Up in the rock-ribbed Republican State of Maine they pay Governor Baxter $5,000 a year. In Michigan they pay Governor Groesbeck $5,000 a year. In Mississippi they pay Governor Whitfield $5,000 a year—

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In Missouri they pay Governor Hyde, $5,000 a year. In New Mexico they pay Governor Hinkle $5,000 a year. In North Carolina they pay Governor Morrison $5,000 a year, and in North Dakota they pay Governor Nestos, $5,000. In Oregon they pay Governor Pierce $5,000 a year. In South Carolina they pay Governor McLeod $5,000 a year—

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They pay him $7,500 now.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a late raise, for I am reading from the latest Congressional Directory. And over in the big State of Virginia, just across the Potomac River, they are paying Governor Trinkle $5,000 a year at this time. And you are seeking on this side of the river to raise the salary for the school superintendent up to $10,000 a year.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. CONNERY. As the gentleman has been speaking about the governors of the various States, I will say for the information of the gentleman from Texas that in my home city of Lynn, Mass., with a population of 100,000, we pay the superintendent of schools $9,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not surprised a bit.

Mr. WOLFF. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LAMPERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLFF. I simply was going to ask the gentleman if he was not aware there is some difference between the governorship and the position of superintendent of schools, and if the gentleman does not take into consideration the trimmings which sometimes go with the governor's job?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman referring to the State of Indiana—

Mr. WOLFF. I am referring to Indiana, Missouri, and various States.

Mr. BLANTON. Trimmings! I never did like that word at all; it got the Governor of Indiana into trouble.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does not section 4 of the act provide:

That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, they shall receive the salary provided in the foregoing schedule—

And so forth. And does not section D, which includes the superintendent's salary, provide that they shall receive the salaries provided in the foregoing schedule for their respective salary classes or positions, which are next above their present compensation, and manifestly the superintendent will start in at $8,000 by the language of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not the understanding of the school board.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is the language of this.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not the understanding of the committee, that is not the understanding of the commissioners, for the later provisions in the bill provide otherwise.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. JONES. I would like to suggest in that connection there is a proviso about the middle of page 10, which is—

Provided, That under the provisions of this section the present compensation of any teacher, school officer, or other employee shall be construed to include basic salaries, longevity allowance—

And so forth.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But he does not draw any longevity allowance at the present time. It says the present salary and then goes to the salary next above that.

Mr. JONES. And the next proviso says that teachers and other employees shall be entitled to longevity placement. What does that mean?

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I have been contending all the time.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman sure about this beginning at $8,000—

Mr. BLANTON. We will fix that—

Mr. SNELL. Then what is the use of talking about that?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this to you: The present salary is $6,000 a year through the favor of our Committee on Appropriations, but the law grants only $5,000 a year at present to the superintendent of schools. We are now paying him $6,000, which is $1,000 more than the law allows. This bill giving him $10,000 will double his present legal salary.

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman if he denies that.

Mr. LAMPERT. I just want to call the gentleman's attention to the salary paid in the city of Dallas, Tex., for the superintendent of schools. It is $7,200.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am asking that the salary to be paid the superintendent here be cut down to $7,500, which is $300 more than they pay at Dallas.

Mr. LAMPERT. And the salary of the superintendent in Houston is $6,000, and in San Antonio it is $6,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wisconsin can use those figures in his own time.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

The law at present grants to Mr. Ballou $5,000 a year. Under the law he is allowed only $5,000 a year now; that is all the substantive law allows him. But there has been a provision put in the appropriation bill for the last few years granting him an extra gratuity of $1,000. That makes it $6,000. But if my proposition is correct as to this bill relative to the basic salary operating on past service, he would start in immediately on July 1 on a $10,000 salary. That would be $5,000 more than the present law authorizes and $4,000 more than he is receiving now, even under the gratuity given by the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, if it were a matter that concerned the District of Columbia alone, I would not have a word to say; not a word. But it does not concern only the District of Columbia. It concerns also every taxpayer under the United States Government, as I have already pointed out, because they are paying 40 per cent of all the expenses of the schools in the District of Columbia.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I want to know what the duties of the chief examiner and the other examiners are, and what the duties of the attendants are. That is very important, because we fix the salaries here.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows what a school examiner is without my taking the time to explain to him. This fiscal relation is something that you and I permit by our votes to exist here year after year, and I want to bring it to your attention and to the attention of the people of the country. Every school building in Washington, except the last two and one-half million dollar Eastern High School, was built on the plan of 50-50, which means that the Government paid half.

Fifty per cent of it was money that came out of the pockets of the whole people of the United States, and the whole people of the country are now paying 40 per cent of all new buildings and playgrounds, and schoolbooks for 70,000 children, and all the salaries of these 2,500 teachers and employees of the Washington schools, and of the entire expenses of the city.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I can understand why the Federal Government ought to pay a certain per cent on the dollar for the maintenance of this city, but is there any reason in the world why our taxpayers and yours should pay 40 per cent on the education of the children here?

Mr. BLANTON. Not any reason whatever. I will get down to that in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. The people in Washington here pay a $1.20 tax rate on $100 with the assessment at from one-half to two-thirds of the valuation, while in your homes and mine we pay all the way from $2.75 up to about $6 or $7 or $8 on the hundred. Until the people of Washington pay a fair rate of taxation this Government ought not to pay a cent. It has expended millions of dollars in this city and has made little $100 lots go up in value until they are now worth $100,000. I am in favor of making this city the finest city in the world, but that is no reason why we should vote to allow these millionaire tax dodgers to pay only $1.20 on the hundred, based on an assessment of from one-half to two-thirds of the valuation, while you and I in our homes pay $3, $6, or $7, or $8 on the hundred.

Why, a prominent Senator told me not long ago that at home, where he has a residence that he has been trying to sell for $7,000, on that residence he pays more taxes in his home State than he pays here for his $25,000 residence in Washington. Suppose you own a 20-foot front that you want to build a residence on—and this will illustrate how the millionaire contractors in Washington are able to dodge their fair share of the taxes. Suppose you have a 20-foot front, the average front, and you propose to put in a sewer connection. They have to dig out as far, sometimes, as from here to that door. You pay $1.50 a front foot, which is only $30. The property owner pays that, and the city and Government pay the balance of all that excavating, and the people of the United States pay 40 per cent of that. The owner pays only $30, and he gets his sewer connection, thereafter paying a dollar. If you want water you pay $2 a foot for the excavation, while all the rest of that excavation is paid for by the Government and the people of the District at the rate of 60-40, and then the owner gets his water from that time on at about one-fourth of what your people down home pay, because the Government owns the main water conduit.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. When a sewer is put down across a piece of vacant property, the property owner does not pay anything if it runs over 10 or 15 years before that open plat is finally utilized?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I understand that is true.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLeod].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. McLeod was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, one of the most distinguished privileges which Providence has conferred upon mankind is learning. Upon the education of a nation rests the hope of all classes. Accordingly, the kind attention bestowed upon the education of the young determines chiefly the kind of nation that is to be perpetuated. In fact, the whole worth of a nation lies in its schools. Remove the schools and there will follow as a natural consequence a rough, rude, ignorant, and anarchical populace. Education, however manifold in its relations, takes account of all forms of progress and produces a sturdy, cultured, peace-abiding, and patriotic citizenry. The primary importance, then, of education lies in its ability to cultivate the faculties of impressionable youth, thus rescuing such powers from possible blight or decay.

In the body politic of a nation there are three indispensable classes: The laborers, who minister to the wants and comforts of all the citizens; the guardians of the peace, who protect with zealous devotion the honor of their flag; and the philosophers, who enunciate the principles and disperse the thoughts of the nation. Only when these three classes work in harmony can there be perfect concord. The unifying agency to bring them into a common relation with one another is education, maintained under the best influences. Thus the importance of education is revealed in its power to inspire all classes of a nation to expend every particle of strength in doing the work for which they are best fitted, to stand right up to their tasks, and to do their best.

Undoubtedly the supreme importance of education lies in its recognition of the fact that the soul, as well as the mind, is endowed with faculties susceptible of cultivation and growth. Thus heart culture is one of the modern aims of education. There is widespread recognition of the aphorism that a man is what his heart is. Education, therefore, seeks to cultivate the heart. It realizes that in every man there is a native spiritual power which is subject to the general law of human development. By proper stimulation and exercise such power lives and grows strong. By neglect and disuse it becomes dwarfed and enfeebled until there is no consciousness of the possession of such power. Education, then, stimulates this spiritual power, thus making possible the highest culture, which embraces both the intellectual and the spiritual power.

Such is the importance of education. Happily, in this country, the true idea of education, of its real nature, and of its unquestionable importance is silently working and gaining ground. Overcrowded schoolhouses throughout the land are the unmistakable indications of a sagacious and industrious nation. There can be no retracing of steps. The command is, "Forward march!"

THE TEACHER AS A PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEE.

The chief factor in education is the teacher. As the old adage goes, "Like teacher, like school." Under almost any circumstances good teachers make good schools and poor teachers make poor schools. Education, consequently, becomes a sham unless carried on by able and accomplished teachers. Expensive apparatus without an intellectual, gifted teacher becomes a questionable expenditure of funds, whereas such a teacher, without apparatus, may accomplish the happiest results. The greatness of any school lies not in its buildings, furnishings, or apparatus, but primarily in its faculty. It follows, then, that the most direct and effective way to improve public education is to secure the highest order of teaching talent.

Unfortunately, teaching has been regarded too long as merely a stepping-stone to some remunerative profession like law or medicine. The careers of some of the most serviceable men of the Nation date their beginning from the teacher's desk. The classroom has been losing steadily its grip upon the best talent of the Nation. At last, however, the dignity of the teaching profession is beginning to be understood. The idea is dawning that few callings are comparable in solemnity and importance to the training of the child—that skill in guiding the young into energy, truth, and virtue. The Nation is beginning to require the instructors of youth to take their place among other professional employees and receive a compensation commensurate with their talent. Pecuniary compensation, of course, does not necessarily create good teachers. These must be formed by individual impulse and a genuine interest in their calling, but good impulse must be accompanied by outward circumstances. The respect in which the profession of teaching is held in any community is reflected partly in the pecuniary rewards of the profession.

Like the lawyer and the doctor, the teacher is a professional employee. He must, therefore, have an extensive training in the arts and sciences of a liberal education and an intensive training in his profession. Such a training is continuous and expensive. No teacher, regardless of his enthusiasm, can long maintain the standards of his profession if he has to give much of his time to the thought of economic pressure. As a professional employee, a teacher must be sufficiently free of economic worries to give attention to his own professional growth. Moreover, he must be able to maintain a standard of living that will be inspiring to the young.

The one outstanding need, therefore, in the system of public education is that of better-paid teachers in order that they may become in reality professional employees rather than veritable mendicants begging for bread and receiving a stone. Only when the teacher is appreciated and rewarded as a professional employee will teaching take its place alongside of the other professions and compete with them for the most talented products of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. McLEOD. I rise in support of this bill for the reason that I consider education the basis of good citizenship, and, while many of us consider that education comes as a matter of course, yet we must see to it that no serious trouble arises for lack of the proper facilities.

To-day the schools have taken over the burden of the training of the child. In this time, when both parents very often go out to work, not only the formal education of the child—reading, writing, and arithmetic—is turned over to the school but the modeling of his manners and morals and the care of his physical being.

Deplorable as it may seem the burden of the home and home training of children is to-day in the hands of the school and the school-teacher. If we are to intrust the real modeling of the character of our children, the future citizens of this Republic, to the schools we certainly must be willing to provide for adequate facilities, including a just and equitable scale of salaries to be paid these teachers, and salaries that will attract men and women fit to carry on these tremendous tasks.

Washington has been rather slow in providing the proper facilities, both as to teachers' salaries and material equipment. Since no legislation has been passed since 1906, except in the yearly—temporary—legislation carried in the District appropriation bill, it is quite necessary that some remedial measures be taken to conform with the changing conditions and to stabilize a permanent wage scale. I venture to say that there is not one of the membership of this Congress who would knowingly retard education in the District of Columbia or any other place in the United States. As a member of the subcommittee considering this bill, I feel justified in saying that every perceivable angle has been thoroughly gone into, and if you will examine the hearings I believe you will agree that this is sound legislation.

The requirements for entrance and promotion in the teaching profession are as high in the District of Columbia as elsewhere, yet there is a lack of applicants because the salaries are not commensurate with duties and qualifications required. The salary increase for the teachers of the District which is provided for by the bill now before the House is not a large increase; it merely places them more nearly on a par with other cities of its size. The present salary given to a grade teacher is $1,440—$1,200 basic salary and $240 bonus. The bill asks that they be given an entrance salary of $1,400 and progress through eight years of service to $2,200. The present salary given to a high-school teacher is $1,680—$1,440 basic salary and $240 bonus. The bill asks for high-school teachers that they be given an entrance salary of $1,800 and progress through 10 years of service to $2,800. This you will note is not an exorbitant increase.

If we are attempting to make Washington—our Capitol City—a model, why then should not education be promoted to its fullest degree in order that it may rank among the first as an educational center.

Therefore, the passage of this bill is the first step toward bringing this about. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CHINDELOM). The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LEHLBACH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Welch, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 and 44 to the bill H. R. 6349, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 624. An act to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and for other purposes.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS, SCHOOL OFFICERS, AND OTHER EMPLOYEES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened with a great deal of interest to my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], comparing the work of the teacher or school superintendent and other men and women connected with the schools to the work of politicians, men who run for public office and who serve their people in a different capacity. I have a great deal of respect for Mr. BLANTON and I have learned to love him to a great extent, but I have to differ with him sometimes when I see he is wrong.

It seems to me that the people throughout these United States, not only in the District of Columbia but in this body which we compose, have always overlooked the importance of the profession of teaching. The greatest asset of any nation is its children. The wealth and prosperity of this Nation are dependent upon the way its children are trained and are taught to live in the future. We are dependent upon citizenship—the right kind of citizenship—on what is done in the schoolhouses of this Nation.

Our people have never until recently commenced to realize that this was an important profession, but I am glad to say that from one end of the Nation to the other the people are now beginning to realize that we need in the schoolroom the very best men and the very best women we have in this country.

It takes more than an ordinary man and an ordinary woman to teach school. Almost anybody who can go out and make a good speech, shake hands, and get into the good graces of the people can be elected to a political office, but in order to be a successful school man or school woman it takes different characteristics. We first, must have a man who is a moral man; we must have a man who is tactful; we must have one who is educated, and we must have, furthermore, a man who is more interested in the welfare of his country, its people, and its future, than he is in anything else. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Does the gentleman feel that a man can not be a politician and at the same time be a moral and honest man?

Mr. GASQUE. He can be, but he is not always that, or, at least, some politicians are not always that.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GASQUE. I will, sir; but I can not yield very much, because I have not much time.

Mr. AYRES. Does the gentleman understand that the gentleman from Texas is in favor of a reduction in the teachers' salaries?

Mr. GASQUE. No; only in the superintendent's salary, but he is not in favor of a reduction in the teachers' salaries, and I commend him for that.

I want to come now to the point regarding the superintendent's salary and I just want to make a few general remarks as to the laxity of thoughtfulness on the part of our people regarding this work. My friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and others would probably not say anything if they were voting for the salary of a member of the Shipping Board. The gentleman from Texas speaks about a Congressman's salary being $7,500. Well, I want to say about the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], as I have been in pretty close touch with him and observed him pretty closely, that he ought to get $100,000 a year for the work he does, because I believe he is one of the hardest-working men I know of. But it is not a question of what these men get, it is a question as to whether you and I are going to let the conditions continue which now exist as to the salaries of teachers.

We must all realize that we have men and women in this country who are teaching school because they love the work, and that they are not in that work because of the salaries they get. That being so, should we sit down and see these men and women give the best part of their lives to this work and say that just because they are school-teachers they are not worth more money? I do not believe any of us is willing to take that position.

Now, I want to call your attention to the salaries of public officials, to which Mr. BLANTON referred a while ago. I want to say that we have five Members of the Federal Trade Commission, for whom I presume the gentleman from Texas voted. They get $10,000.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I voted against that.

Mr. GASQUE. Well, this House did it anyway, if my friend from Texas did not. The Comptroller of the General Accounting Office is paid a salary of $10,000 a year, and that being so why should we pay them any more than Congressmen? Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, 11 of them, get $12,000 a year, voted by this House. The nine members who compose the Railroad Labor Board get a salary of $10,000 each, and seven members of the Shipping Board get a salary of $12,000 each. Now, those are the salaries of some of the Government officials, and I do not think they are worth any more than some Members of this body, as far as that is concerned, if we are going to use that as an argument. Furthermore, if we go into private business we find men drawing salaries of from $25,000 to $150,000 a year. And I want to say right here that the biggest business in this Nation is the training of the youth of this land. [Applause.] If our people would realize that fact there would be no objection to voting increased salaries for those engaged in training our youth.

We come to Congress and ask for appropriations which are intended to increase the wealth of the country and to develop certain sections through irrigation, through agriculture, through banking, and through many other means, and we do not hesitate to vote millions of dollars for such purposes. And when we stop to think that the greatest wealth-producing factor or agency we have in this country are the children of this country we should not hesitate to pay proper salaries to those who are training the future citizens of the country, and we must realize that it is necessary to offer proper salaries to the men who have charge of our schools and the women and men who are doing the work in those schools and who are giving our children that proper training.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman and I agree very fully on this question of salaries for teachers, but would the gentleman be interested in comparisons between what Congressmen receive and what other officials receive?

Mr. GASQUE. I do not think that has anything to do with this question.

Mr. SNYDER. I wanted to see if the gentleman was willing to say he was not satisfied with the congressional salary and would like to see it raised.

Mr. GASQUE. I did not run for this office for the salary paid. If I had had that in mind, I would not have run for it.

Mr. SNYDER. And would the gentleman want these salaries fixed on the same basis?

Mr. GASQUE. I came here for a different purpose. In answer to your question about salaries, if you want to decide what the salary of a superintendent of schools in a city of this size should be, let us see what the other cities of the United States are doing, and I want to call your attention to this fact before I forget it. If you will go through all the statistics you want to wade through and study them until you are an old man, you will find this fact, which can not be contradicted.

The per capita wealth of the States of this Union is in direct proportion to the amount of money the State expends for schools and for the education of its children. We have in the United States 38 cities of 100,000 or more, as has already been called to your attention, that pay more salary to their superintendents than the city of Washington pays, 9 cities that pay the same, and 10 cities only that pay less. I just want to call your attention to a few of them, because I have not time to mention them all. Of course, New York and Chicago are much larger cities, but then we come to Cleveland, Ohio, which pays $12,000; Detroit, Mich., $12,000; Oakland, Calif., $11,000; Jersey City, $10,500; Boston, Mass., $10,000; Buffalo, N. Y., $10,000; Newark, N. J., $10,000; Cincinnati, $10,000; Youngstown, Ohio, $10,000; St. Louis, Mo., $10,000; Denver, Colo., $10,000; Toledo, Ohio, $9,750.

Gentlemen, I feel that the school system of the city of Washington should be the very best in the United States, and we should offer salaries here, both for a superintendent and for teachers, that will attract the very best men and women available in the profession, because here everybody comes. This is your city and my city. I agreed with my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], very largely in the latter part of his speech as to the pro rata portion that the Nation pays to the support of this city, but I am surprised that he should stand up here and say that if the District of Columbia paid it all he would have no objection. Gentlemen, that is not the question before you and me. We are here, and under the Constitution this matter of legislation is left in our hands, and the citizens of this city can not get anything you and I do not give them. If that arrangement is wrong, then it is up to this Congress to change it and make the appropriations like they should be [applause], and if we do not want to pay any of it do not pay it, but do not let us use that as an argument against a teachers' pay bill. [Applause.]

But let us realize that these men and women who are engaged in the work of making citizens, making men and women of the youth of our country, are paid a fair salary, at least a salary partially commensurate with that paid men and women in other professions. Also, let us do our duty by this city and District, the Capital of the Nation, the Capital of the greatest Nation in the whole world. The people of this city are dependent on this body for its progress along all lines, educational as well as along all other lines, and the argument that the rest of the Nation pays too much toward the support of the District should not be taken into consideration in this matter. This body fixed that ratio and is the only agency that has the authority to change it if it feels that it is paying too much.

In my opinion the chiefest duty we of this generation, or any other generation, has to perform is to see that our children, the future citizens of this great country, are properly trained, morally, physically, intellectually, and in the principles our forefathers had in mind when they wrote the Constitution of this great Republic. In so far as we as a people succeed in this, either as individuals or as a Nation, our lives have been a success, and in so far as we have failed in this our lives have been a failure. The citizens to whom you and I must turn over in a short while the management of this great country are dependent on you and me. This body of men, Congress, should show to the rest of the country the importance of this great work. We can not do it by paying niggardly salaries to the men and women engaged in this great work. This is our opportunity; let us not lose it.

[Mr. GASQUE was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some question about the position taken by the gentleman from Texas in regard to the basic salary at which the superintendent would start. On the first page of the bill the language is, "that on and after July 1, 1924, the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, shall be as follows." Now if you will turn to page 7 of the bill you will find the definite application to the superintendent of schools, with a basic salary of $8,000 per year and an annual increase of $1,000 for two years or until a maximum of $10,000 per year is reached. To me this is definite, plain, absolute language and there can be no misunderstanding whatever, and he will start at $8,000 per year.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] consumed most of his time in talking about something else besides the superintendent of schools. We are not electing a governor or hiring one. I am working here for $7,500 a year too, and I do not know whether I earn it or not, but I am paying men twice that salary to work for me at home, and there are a lot of other people doing exactly the same thing. The only question before us here is whether we are paying or proposing to pay the superintendent of schools too much or whether we are paying more than the average city of this size and character is paying. It seems to me that is the only question before us.

We want the best schools in Washington—better than they have in any city in the country—and the only way you can decide this question of salary is by comparing the price paid here in Washington with other cities of similar character and size. In the list of similar cities Washington is the thirtieth city on the list. There are 38 cities that pay more than Washington, 9 that pay the same, and only 10 cities that pay less.

The gentleman from Texas said we must consult the taxpayers. I suppose the taxpayers in the State of Texas elect their superintendents and decide the salary to be paid. San Antonio, Tex., with 161,000 inhabitants, about one-third that of the city of Washington, pays the same for a superintendent of schools that the city of Washington pays. Houston, Tex., with 138,000, or less than one-third, pays the same as the city of Washington, and Dallas, Tex., with 158,000, about one-third, pays $1,200 more than the city of Washington, and there the taxpayers pay it all and fix the salaries themselves. So the taxpayers of your own cities are not averse to paying a reasonable salary to superintendents of schools.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman said there were only nine or ten cities that paid less than Washington—

Mr. SNELL. I meant cities of similar size and character.

The only question before us is whether we are paying a reasonable salary and the salary that could be expected for the services performed. I know and the people here know and the gentleman from Texas knows that we have a good man—a man who is capable of filling the position. If he is, let us pay him a reasonable wage and a proper wage in comparison with other men who are doing the same work in every part of the country.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. I will yield; gladly.

Mr. RAKER. It is not a question of the special individual who occupies the position now.

Mr. SNELL. That has nothing whatever to do with it, really.

Mr. RAKER. It is a question whether the position justifies the amount of salary proposed.

Mr. SNELL. That is the real, basic question before us—whether the position, in comparison with similar positions in other cities of the same size throughout the country, should carry the same amount of salary.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman tell us what is the largest salary paid a superintendent of schools?

Mr. SNELL. At the present time, according to this list, $12,000 a year. I understand, however, they are going to pay in New York City $20,000 after this year.

Mr. RAKER. And the gentleman is thoroughly convinced that with this amount of work and responsibility any superintendent who is capable and competent to handle the work would earn, and justly earn, this amount of salary?

Mr. SNELL. I honestly think so, because I think it is one of the hardest school systems to handle in the country, and such a man has more to contend with here than in any other city of its size in the country, and any man who can do it successfully is entitled to this amount of salary, and no one should oppose giving it to him.

Mr. RAKER. Is not there a further condition involved that this city ought to be a model of schools in Washington, and we ought to stand No. 1 in the United States?

Mr. SNELL. I have already made that statement. I feel that this should be an ideal system and that we should have the best teachers we can find to fill the positions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I will use all the 10 minutes which has been yielded me by my colleague [Mr. BLANTON] in the discussion of this bill, but I do want to make a few brief comments on the proposed legislation. Of course, we all know that legislation is so continually pressing upon the House for consideration that Members do not have an opportunity to study all the bills as much in detail as we would like, and it is that way with me on this particular bill. I have not had the opportunity to read and study the bill as I would like to have had, and I do not profess to be as well acquainted with its provisions as the members of the committee who reported it to the House. But I have studied it enough to convince me that it is my duty to vote against the bill unless it is amended in some substantial respects.

When I came back to attend this session of Congress I told the people of my district that I was going to stand for economy in public expenditure. I told those people whom I consider it an honor to represent that in my judgment the most important duty of this session of Congress did not lie in the realm of new legislation, but that the most important problem confronting the American Congress was to bring about a reduction in public expenditures so as to bring about a real, substantial reduction in taxation.

I have been trying to make that promise good on every bill that we have had before the House. Last Saturday I sought to recommit the Army bill with an amendment to reduce the standing Army from 125,000 men to 100,000 men. If that amendment had been adopted, it would have saved this Government during the next fiscal year $25,000,000. And yet it was defeated by gentlemen who will go back to their districts and say that they are earnestly and sincerely in favor of Government economy. It is very clear to me that this Government has no need for a standing Army of more than 100,000 men.

This number of men, together with a well-maintained National Guard and a proper reserve force, will make ample provisions for the national security and defense.

On this pending bill I entertain no delusion as to what is going to be done. I never do entertain any delusions as to what is going to be done when a salary increase bill is before the House of Representatives. It is going to be passed by gentlemen who will go back home and say to their people, "I am earnestly and sincerely in favor of Government economy." My experience since I have been a Member of the House has been that our old acquaintance "economy" has more friends in general debate and less on roll call than any gentleman whose acquaintance I ever made.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. Does not the gentleman think that paying the teachers an adequate salary and thus getting good teachers is bringing about economy?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is no dispute between the gentleman and myself on that proposition. Some of the salaries for the lower-paid teachers provided for in this bill are all right, but others are entirely too high. Also there is no justification for the proposal to increase the salary of the superintendent of schools in the city of Washington from $8,000, as under present law, to $10,000, as would be the case if this bill passes. I clipped, to-day, from the Dallas Morning News, that has just come to the reading room, an article giving some information about salaries of our teachers in Texas. I will ask the indulgence of the House while I read this clipping:

TEACHERS' PAY REPORTED HIGHEST IN THE STATE.

Dallas high-school teachers receive from $1,400 to $2,400 a year, with an automatic increase of $75 a year until the maximum is reached, which is the highest rate of pay paid by any city in Texas, according to the publicity committee of the Dallas Council of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, which is supporting the present board of education for reelection April 1.

Now, what does that say—best-paid teachers in Texas in the city of Dallas. High-school teachers receive from $1,800 to $2,400 a year.

Let us compare this Dallas schedule of salaries with those provided in the bill now before us. We have in this bill pay of teachers of the junior high school as follows:

Group A, a basic salary of $1,600 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,400 per year is reached.

Group B, a basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group C, a basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group D, a basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

Those are for the junior high school. Now, let us see about the teachers in the senior high school and normal school. They get—

Group A, a basic salary of $1,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,500 per year is reached.

Group B, a basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want to finish the reading of this clipping which I took from the Dallas News with reference to Texas teachers' salaries:

The scale of pay in Fort Worth ranges from $1,100 to $1,800, and in San Antonio from $1,300 to $1,900.

The faith of the Dallas teachers in the present board of education, the committee pointed out, was shown the first part of the school year when they accepted the condition of possible salary reductions of 5 per cent for the current year in their contracts. The board has decided that through the practice of careful economy school funds will be adequate and no reduction of salary for the year will be necessary.

The present salary rate for teachers was adopted by the board of education four years ago and is being maintained for the avowed purpose of enabling Dallas schools to have the pick of teachers from the entire State.

Principals' salaries range from $2,000 to $3,000 a year. Grade teachers receive from $1,200 to $1,700 a year, with an automatic increase of $70 a year until the maximum is reached.

The salary scales in Dallas are considerably lower than the salary scales provided in this bill. The difficulty that the city of Dallas is having, as evidenced by the clipping which I have just read, is to preserve the salary scale that it now has. The problem which the school board of that city has is to find out how it can maintain what they now have, which the article says is the best in the State of Texas. Why should I, as a representative in this body who professes to my people that I try to stand for reasonable economy in Government expenditures, vote for the teachers in the city of Washington a very much higher scale than prevails in the best-paid city in the State of Texas? I am perfectly willing that Washington teachers be well paid, but this bill goes too far in the matter of increasing salaries, especially those of supervisory officials.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman wants to be fair. What about the cost of living in Dallas and in the city of Washington?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The cost of living in the city of Dallas, I dare say, is about as much as it is in the city of Washington, and the gentleman will be convinced of that if he will examine the figures from the Bureau of Labor statistics. He will find that it costs just as much to live in the city of Dallas as in the city of Washington. Rents are of course higher here in Washington, but other items which enter into the budget which make up the cost of living are about the same.

Mr. LAZARO. I have looked up the statistics, and I say that the cost of living is higher in the city of Washington than in any other city of the country.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, the gentleman is entirely in error. There are other cities in the United States which have a higher cost of living than Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am not only in favor of economy but I try to practice it. A statement about economy is one thing and its application is another. It is a question of whether or not you are going to get service, whether or not a dollar expended gets a dollar of service in return. That is what is to be applied here. There is no occupation in which the people are more interested than they are in the occupation of those who instruct the youth of our land. They want to get those who are competent, those with knowledge and experience, and in order to do so you must pay a salary commensurate to the job. There is no doubt in the world that it costs more to live in the city of Washington by from 5 to 15 per cent than it does in any other city in the country.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield. There is no need of trying to deny that or of caviling about statistics. You are here and your money is taken from you, whether you want to have it taken from you or not. We ought to pay those who do the work fair salaries.

I have not had the opportunity to visit the schools here as I would like. While we are spending our money lavishly upon every other enterprise that brings in the dollar, we are too negligent and thoughtless in regard to spending our money to build up and make citizens, not only those in our own country but those who come here from other countries. I concede from what I have observed that a teacher in the District of Columbia has more difficulty in impressing the right ideas upon the American youth, boy and girl, than in practically any other city in the United States. What I say I do not mean as a censure to the teachers, but I am wondering whether or not these boys and girls who are leaving the high school do so with a sense of responsibility and are able to do anything to earn a living for themselves, or is the only thought in their minds to make a living by an easy method, without having to do any work or assuming any responsibility. Irrespective of the amount, if the teachers are really giving their time and attention to imparting not alone book learning but inculcating in these boys and girls the principle of Americanism, and are teaching them to earn their livings when they leave school, the salaries proposed are not too high. It is economy in the highest degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the pending bill reclassifying the salaries of the teachers in the city of Washington. To-day these teachers are receiving the bonus of $240, but this will not be paid after July 1, and unless Congress before that date provides for a reclassification of these salaries the compensation of the teachers will be greatly reduced.

Washington is the capital of the Nation. Its educational system should be a model for the municipalities of the Nation. It should set the standard in efficiency. It can not do this unless the teachers are paid salaries that will induce competent men and women to serve. The hearings disclose that the salaries now paid, including the bonus, are less than the salaries paid in other municipalities having a population of 100,000 or more. Washington's population is approximately 450,000. I shall vote to make the salary of the superintendent of schools $7,500, with the increase provided in the bill for service, and I shall vote for the salaries of teachers as provided in the bill. In order to secure an appointment as teacher in the high schools of Washington it is necessary that a teacher shall be a college graduate. Under this bill the teacher in the elementary grades now receiving a basic salary of $1,440 would receive $1,000. Of course the salary of the high-school teacher is greater. Of the 2,640 employees of the educational department of the District, the average salary at present is $1,804, and under this bill the average salary will be $1,957, an increase of $153.

A few years ago the salaries of teachers were so absurdly inadequate that competent men and women deserted the profession and entered other fields of endeavor. They could not be blamed for their desertion. The missionary spirit is apt to desert one under such circumstances. The plasterer in the city of Washington was and is now being paid $12 a day. Only a short time ago I was told by a contractor in this city that he had to pay good carpenters $1 per hour and time and a half for overtime. Compare this compensation with the salary of the teacher who, in order to secure a position as teacher in a high school, must produce evidence of a college education.

And compare the work in which they are engaged. Into the hands of the teachers the people commit the dearest that they possess, and as they make them, so shall future years see them. Some persons complain of the growing cost of education. The National Educational Association is responsible for the statement that last year the total cost in the country was approximately $1,000,000,000. A great sum of money, but small when compared with the amount spent last year for tobacco, which was slightly over $2,000,000,000.

With the increasing number of women in industry the responsibility of training children devolves to a greater extent upon the teachers. We used to say, "Poor pay, poor preacher." It is equally true, "Poor pay, poor teacher." If men and women engaged in teaching are to regard it as their life's work instead of a mere stepping stone to some other work in life they must be paid such salaries as will cause them to put their hearts in their work. The teachers must work not only during the school sessions but during the vacation period; must travel and study in order to equip themselves to render efficient service. This costs money.

In the State of South Carolina great progress has been made in our educational system. But I know of young women, graduates of a splendid college, who desired to teach and preferred to remain in South Carolina, but have gone into other States because of the increased compensation to be secured. They can not be criticized for seeking the field of endeavor offering the greatest reward. And that is true of Washington. The hearings show the difficulty now experienced in securing competent teachers. This bill offers an opportunity to remedy conditions. We have had much eloquence as to the nobility of the profession of the teacher. Let us now give them a little less eloquence and a little more compensation.

Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA].

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the figures in this bill do not frighten me at all because I have lived through a teachers' salary increase. While a member of the city government of the city of New York, as president of the board of aldermen, we increased the teachers' salaries. The increase that we put through in 1920, which took effect in 1921, added over $20,000,000 to the city budget. Personally, I believe that under our form of government a public-school teacher is worth more to the community than three generals or two preachers. The least we can do is to pay them accordingly. I want to give you some figures in respect to the city from which I come, where we have a real department of education, the greatest in the world. Our budget for the year 1924 for that purpose was $75,805,000, and that does not include $15,000,000 which is spent for new buildings. In addition to that we have a retirement system which costs $3,500,000 a year, and then we have for the College of the City of New York a budget item of $1,190,000, and for Hunter College, our normal school and college for girls, a budget item of $856,391. None of the city's money is better spent.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the tax rate there?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. About 3 per cent; that I would say is about the average for the five boroughs.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exclusive of the State tax?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes; that is the city tax on real property. In addition to this I would say that about $10,000,000 comes back to us, which is our share of the State school fund. Our tax average is about 8 per cent on real estate in the five counties. We pay our superintendent in New York City $12,000 a year, and it is a $20,000 a year job. A comparison was made here between the salaries of governors and the salary proposed to be paid to the superintendent of schools. The case of a governor is not analogous. It is not a fair comparison. If a man has been a good governor of his State and he has been honored by the people of his State in that way, there are all sorts of chances for him when he leaves the job. If he has performed a good job. A superintendent of schools gives his whole life to the work and there is not the music and the glamour and the glory about it that goes with the position of governor.

For instance we pay in New York City the superintendent of school supplies $9,000, our superintendent of school buildings, the architect, $25,000 a year, and his deputy $8,500 a year. We have clerks, chief clerks, at $6,500.

Why, gentlemen, the greatest American institution, the greatest monument to American progress, is our public school system, and the place to economize is not in the salary of the splendid teachers of the kindergarten, the grammar schools, or the high schools. [Applause.] I am proud of my city's schools and our department of education.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it not a fact that nearly 32 per cent of your total expenditures of New York go to educational purposes and that a less percentage is devoted to educational purposes in the District of Columbia—that it exceeds the percentage in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Our biggest item in the New York budget is the schools, then is followed by the police, fire, and health departments. We ought to have the model educational system of the whole world right here in the Nation's Capital. We ought to give adequate compensation to teachers—

Mr. HUDSPETH. Can the gentleman give the average pay for primary teachers—give us the average in New York?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not itemized by the budget which I have before me—I have it in the office—but it is about 15 or 20 per cent larger than we propose to give right here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I have the privilege of extending my remarks a little on this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks I insert the following:

To the Senators and Representatives in Congress:

The Anti-Saloon League broadcasts from coast to coast that it controls Congress and practically all State legislatures.

If that is true this important question arises:

Who controls the Anti-Saloon League, and why—and how?

If the Anti-Saloon League controls Congress and the State legislatures, as it asserts, then the power that controls the Anti-Saloon League is the power that controls the lawmaking bodies of the United States.

What is that power?

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League and chairman of its political campaign committee, tells the American people in public addresses that $35,000,000 was spent to put the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution.

The Christian Science Monitor, a champion of the Anti-Saloon League, asserts that the league is spending $2,500,000 a year. The New York and Illinois State branches of the Anti-Saloon League spend approximately $600,000 a year.

Where does the Anti-Saloon League get its money?

The power behind the Anti-Saloon League is money. The big contributors of the money constitute the real power behind the Anti-Saloon League.

SPENDS FOUR TIMES AS MUCH AS DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS.

Four years after prohibition the Anti-Saloon League is spending every year a sum equivalent to the combined sums spent in four years by the Democratic and Republican National Committees to maintain their organizations and conduct presidential campaigns.

To maintain an invisible government, which the Anti-Saloon League asserts controls the visible government chosen by the people, this league is spending four times as much money as the Democratic and Republican national organizations combined.

For what purpose or purposes are such vast sums of money contributed to an organization which renders no public financial accounting, and which has been able to defeat every legislative effort to investigate the source and disbursement of its revenues?

If representative government is to be maintained in the United States, these questions must be answered.

Congress can answer by investigating the Anti-Saloon League to determine the source and distribution of its revenues and its boasted control of the lawmaking branches of government. Reasons will appear herein why Congress especially should investigate the power exercised over the prohibition enforcement unit.

PROHIBITION AS A "GOOD BUSINESS INVESTMENT."

The purpose of this message is to give Congress a starting point for an investigation of the Anti-Saloon League revenues, and to show the necessity of a complete and thorough investigation of the prohibition enforcement department under Anti-Saloon League domination.

Read the facsimile letter from S. S. Kresge, chairman of the manufacture and business committee of the Anti-Saloon League.

Observe that he states that this committee is comprised of 55 persons whose identity is not disclosed.

Observe that Mr. Kresge, who, according to financial reports, has an annual income of approximately $10,000,000, solicits contributions to the Anti-Saloon League solely as a "good business investment."

He states that the 55 men on this committee are interested in prohibition as a "good business investment."

He has solicited money from manufacturers and business men all over the United States, to be used by the Anti-Saloon League, solely as a "good business investment."

MASQUERADING UNDER FALSE COLORS.

This letter reveals as clearly as language can reveal it that the Anti-Saloon League is masquerading before the country under false colors.

It pretends to be a political machine representing the Christian churches of America.

Kresge's letter shows it to be a political machine representing the big business interests in the United States.

It pretends to represent the churches to promote temperance and morality.

Kresge's letter reveals that it represents big business interests for selfish purposes only—to help them to make more money, as Kresge phrases it, "by keeping the liquor bloodsucker off decent trade."

It uses the church as a shield and the pulpit as the forum to promote the selfish interests of the men who are putting up the money to support it.

It boasts that it controls Congress and State legislatures, and whatever power of control it exercises is the power that it derives from the great sums of money contributed to it, primarily by selfish interests, as a "good business investment."

OIL LEASES "GOOD BUSINESS" UNTIL EXPOSED.

It was "good business" for oil corporations to stuff the pockets of a Cabinet official with money and walk away with leases of public domain—until the Senate investigated.

Then it was bad business. So bad the Nation was shocked. Official corruption, the purchase of official influence, and the silencing of newspapers that shared in the spoils, aroused country-wide indignation.

It may be "good business" for great interests to use the Anti-Saloon League to cloak their selfish schemes, but it will be bad business when the American people know all the facts—particularly those facts dealing with official corruption resulting from the adoption of a prohibition law to enrich the interests that financed it.

The amount of graft involved in the oil scandals is infinitesimal as compared with what would be exposed by a thorough investigation of prohibition enforcement. Where a few are involved in oil scandals, thousands would be involved in prohibition scandals.

CORRUPTION FUND OF $4,000,000 IN 60 DAYS.

Here is a statement, for example, appearing in the September issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, by Hon. T. Henry Walnut, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States at Philadelphia:

"... It is undoubted that enormous quantities of liquor were withdrawn from the distilleries upon fraudulent permits and that enormous sums of money were paid for them. The permits so issued by the Pennsylvania office (of the Federal prohibition commissioner) in a period of 60 days called for 700,000 gallons of whisky and alcohol. The corruption fund arising from these papers must have run close to $4,000,000."

When such things as this are going on—and this is but one of thousands of scandals in the history of prohibition—is it any wonder that Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, a sincere prohibitionist, in speaking before the Anti-Saloon League convention in Washington, said:

"Take it by and large, I know of no scandal in our national history to compare with it. A scandal of half the proportions in any other branch of the Government's work would lead at once to a congressional investigation. In the name of the citizens of the country who believe in its Constitution and law, and who propose to support and enforce them, I voice the general demand for such an investigation."

LEAGUE OPPOSES EXPOSURE OF CORRUPTION.

But the Anti-Saloon League, invisibly financed and pursuing invisible political methods, while publicly posing as the champion of all that is moral and virtuous in life and government, steadfastly opposes every suggestion of an investigation of prohibition scandals and even goes to the extent of blocking officials of the Government in their effort to expose them.

Listen to this from Collier's Weekly of January 26, 1924:

"When Haynes [the Federal Prohibition Commissioner] sat down to write his book, Prohibition Inside Out, he was bound and gagged, politically speaking. Had he been free of political impediments, he could have written a book the sensational disclosures of which would have staggered the Nation—a book which would have shamed men in high places, knocked halos from the heads of others, and gone down in history as one of the most astounding documents in the history of this Republic. . . . Haynes was tempted. While he wavered between duty to the American people, especially the prohibitionists, and loyalty to his political party, the master politician of them all—Wayne B. Wheeler—stepped in. Wheeler advised caution, Haynes listened, and the result was just a book.

"Haynes couldn't and didn't write the inside story of prohibition, because the story would have bared the corrupting influences of politics in prohibition enforcement and explained why the Federal Government has fallen down in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment."

What are the sensational facts that would have staggered the Nation? Who are the men in high places who would have been shamed? Who are the men who would have had halos knocked from their heads?

IF LEAGUE SPEAKS FOR CHURCHES, WHY DOES IT STAND FOR THIS?

If Mr. Wheeler, in his official capacity as counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, is representing the Christian churches of America, why is he trying to protect the men in high places who would have been involved in prohibition scandals, and why is he stopping the baring of the corrupting influences that have resulted in the Government's failure to enforce the eighteenth amendment?

Publicly he proclaims that the Anti-Saloon League stands for honest enforcement. All the facts indicate that neither the Anti-Saloon League nor Mr. Wheeler have ever taken any step to purge the Government of the corrupting influences that are having such direful effect upon the country, and have prevented the enforcement of the prohibition law.

If Mr. Wheeler and the Anti-Saloon League are in fact representing the Christian churches of America, what do the Christian churches think about it when Mr. Wheeler and the Anti-Saloon League use their power to block every movement to expose the corrupting influences in prohibition enforcement?

The very next day after Governor Pinchot demanded a congressional investigation of the prohibition scandal, Mr. Wheeler rushed into the newspapers with an interview opposing it.

We are informed that the Ladies Home Journal, at great expenditure of money and effort, gathered facts revealing scandalous practices in the prohibition enforcement department, and that Mr. Wheeler advised the suppression of this article, and that it was suppressed.

For what reasons? Let Congress call the editors and Mr. Wheeler and find out.

PRICE THE COUNTRY PAYS TO MAINTAIN "GOOD BUSINESS."

What further price are the American people paying to maintain prohibition as a "good business investment" for the "John T. Kings" who are financing the Anti-Saloon League?

According to the late President Harding "a nation-wide scandal that is the most demoralizing factor in our national life."

According to Governor Pinchot, "no scandal in our national history to compare with it."

According to the Attorney General of the United States, "a sordid story of assassination, bribery, and corruption that found its way into the very sanctums where the inviolability of the law was presumed to be sacred."

According to thousands of thinkers and writers, an institution that has broken down respect for all law, spread crimes of violence from coast to coast, corrupted governmental functions as nothing else in our national life ever has done, and has proven an utter failure as a temperance measure.

In addition to all this, the money cost has been monumental—in losses of revenue and actual outlay for Federal, State, and local enforcement.

INVESTIGATE FINANCES OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

We respectfully submit that the time has arrived when Congress should investigate the Anti-Saloon League to disclose the source not only of the $35,000,000 fund which Mr. Wheeler says was used to influence the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, but also the source of the $2,500,000 a year contributed, in part at least, as a "good business investment," and which is now used to maintain a standing organization of approximately a thousand members.

The personnel of the men to whom these great funds are intrusted, without any public accounting being made, is also worthy of investigation.

ANDERSON OF NEW YORK—SHUPP OF MISSOURI.

You have before you the example of two outstanding leaders of the Anti-Saloon League—Anderson of New York and Shupp of Missouri.

Anderson has been sentenced to prison. You are familiar with the fantastic tales he told on the witness stand in his own defense—of how great sums of money came into his possession through mysterious "John T. Kings," and disappeared through equally mysterious "Henry Manns," none of whom left any records of their transactions.

The case of Shupp of Missouri is even more illuminating.

Standing as the champion of moral reform, he became the joint owner of a drug concern engaged in the unlawful sale of alcoholic liquors and narcotic drugs. He demanded and received fees for getting alcohol withdrawal and other permits from the prohibition enforcement department.

He demanded and received fees from brewers for getting the prohibition law enforced.

His pockets—and the pockets of his assistants—were filled with passes issued by a railroad corporation that for two decades controlled the political destinies of the State by the use of passes.

ANDERSON AND SHUPP INDORSED BY LEAGUE.

It should be borne in mind that in spite of the conviction of Anderson by a jury of his own selection, and of the exposure of Shupp, of Missouri, that since their exposure both have been fully indorsed by the boards of directors of their own State Anti-Saloon Leagues, and these indorsements never have been withdrawn.

The fact that State Anti-Saloon Leagues, through their boards of directors, publicly indorse such acts on the part of their leaders, should be a warning to the Congress of the United States.

Is it surprising when the two State Anti-Saloon Leagues give their uncompromising and unqualified indorsement to the Andersons and Shupps that the Anti-Saloon League management in Washington should exert every power and influence it possesses to prevent an uncovering of the scandals of prohibition enforcement?

BOOTLEGGING AT SEA AND THE LEAGUE.

One of the associations affiliated with this committee had the fact reported to Mr. Wheeler that the United States Shipping Board, controlled by the Government, had entered upon a great bootlegging enterprise on Government-owned and operated ships, but Mr. Wheeler made no move to stop it.

So long as this fact was concealed from the American public, Mr. Wheeler and the Anti-Saloon League gave themselves no concern about the violation of the prohibition law by the Government itself.

It was shown that Anderson in New York, one of the agents of the league that helped to maintain invisible Anti-Saloon League government, was paid $15,000 a year in salary—exactly twice the salary paid to the Representatives in Congress of the visible government.

We make a demand for an investigation of the Anti-Saloon League with respect both to its financial control and its boasted control over chosen Representatives of the people.

We make a demand for an investigation of the Prohibition Enforcement Department, under Anti-Saloon League control, in order that an accounting may be made to the people of the administration of the prohibition law.

WHO RUNS CONGRESS, MEMBERS OR THE LEAGUE?

Call S. S. Kresge to the witness stand. Call the representatives of the great trusts that have contributed vast sums of money to the Anti-Saloon League. Call the "John T. Kings" who hide behind committees. Bare the facts and tell the people whether you, as the chosen Representatives of the Government, are running the legislative department of the Government, or whether the boast of the Anti-Saloon League is true that you are its pawns and move as the invisible influences behind the Anti-Saloon League direct you to move.

This committee pledges you its unreserved cooperation to bare the facts, and it will furnish you information, which, if followed up, will turn the light of day in dark places and destroy the sinister influences that are having such disastrous effect upon Government and undermining the confidence of the people in the Government they have established.

JAMES DUNCAN, Chairman,

THOMAS F. MAGUIRE, Executive Secretary,

Joint legislative committee for modifying the Volstead Act, representing the American Federation of Labor, Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Constitutional Liberty League of Massachusetts, the Moderation League (Inc.) for Modifying the National Prohibition Act.

DETROIT, December 5, 1923.

MR. CHARLES L. KNOWER,

St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR MR. KNOWER: This message is sent because of your interest in "good business."

A committee of 55 persons, called the manufacture and business committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America, began eight years ago to help the National Anti-Saloon League win and hold prohibition. A good many have assisted us. League men say our aid has been an essential factor for success. Now we are in the hot fight to uphold flag and law and finish the job. More help is needed. We need you!

Besides the State organizations, the national division of the Anti-Saloon League, under separate budget, has 200 employees who keep the organization everywhere strong and by voice and print do tremendous educational service. In its legal, legislative, and law enforcement departments it stimulates and backs up enforcement of the law throughout the Nation. Additional contributions are urgently required for current expenses and for the special work for 1924 now begun, including the big convention at Washington in January, for publicity and public sentiment.

Even if you assist this work in your own State, it is increasingly and vitally necessary that those who have a business interest like the members of this committee and you shall strongly help the national organization also. Knowing from close touch the national efficiency and needs, besides helping in the Michigan league I have personally given during the past year $10,000 to the national league as a "good business" investment.

Your assistance was never more needed than right now. Please give personal and special attention to this and send a check for $1,000, $500, $250, or $100, which will suitably indicate your desire to keep the liquor "bloodsucker" off decent trade. Read the inclosed copy of Roger Babson's letter to Mr. Russell, the secretary of this committee, and then mail your check payable to Foster Copeland, treasurer, or to S. S. Kresge, chairman, in the inclosed envelope. Our committee will appreciate your cooperation.

Yours for the protection of law,

S. S. KRESGE,

Chairman, Manufacture and Business Committee.

(This letter reveals that the Anti-Saloon League, while masquerading as the political representative of the Christian churches, is really the representative of big business interests that finance it for "good business" only. Kresge's income—approximately $10,000,000 a year—contributes thousands to control public morals, but wife charged that he refused to accept any responsibility for education and training of his own children. Fifty-five "John T. Kings" hidden behind the manufacture and business committee of the Anti-Saloon League.)

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Gentlemen, I am very glad to have an opportunity to vote for an increase of the teachers' pay in the District of Columbia. I believe that the teachers in our schools should be well paid everywhere. I have always been a friend of the teachers and a believer that they were entitled to better compensation than they receive, but I do not want to vote for this $10,000 salary for the superintendent of schools. Every bill that comes to Congress now seems to carry a salary of $10,000 or $12,000. I feel that we are overdoing the matter in the way of big salaries in this country, and if I get an opportunity, and I will, I am going to vote to reduce the salary below $10,000 for the superintendent of schools, because I think that is too large.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman vote for $8,000?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; and I will vote for $7,500 if I get a chance.

Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not believe by comparison we can reach a proper criterion for the pay of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia. A number of gentlemen, including my friend from Texas, have compared the salaries as set out in this bill with the salaries paid for the governors in the different States. Well, I will say to my friends, when they stop and think a minute, they will see the fallacy of such comparisons. The Governor of the State of Virginia gets $5,000 a year. Our superintendent of highways gets $12,000. The city manager of Roanoke, Va., with a population of 60,000 people, gets $6,000, and yet the Governor of the State gets only $5,000 a year. I think the manager of the city of Norfolk gets $15,000. So I submit, my friends, that is not a proper criterion. You know that many men can handshake themselves into a public office; we know that; but when you go to find the man with the mental, physical, and moral equipment that fits him to be the head of an educational organization such as you have here in the District of Columbia, you have got to have a man who, in my judgment, is worth a good salary. I am frank to say to you if the salary is going to remain at $7,500 or $8,000 for a while I think that is a good idea. It strikes me that $10,000 is a pretty big jump, when he is now getting $6,000. I deny that it is governmental economy to try to be stingy about the matter of educating the youth of this Nation. America is a great Nation, and why, not because of its gold, not because of its mines, not because of its territory, but because of the character of the men and women who blazed the trail of civilization through the forests of this country. [Applause.] That is the reason America is a great Nation. It was the ringing of the school bell, the peal of the church organ that blazed the path of American progress. Let me say this to you, if America is to continue to be a great and a free people and is to take her place as the leader of Nations, then the children of to-day, who will be the men and women of to-morrow, are better equipped to discharge the duties of citizenship than you or I. We should do everything to make them better men and women. I give you this thought from Socrates of years ago. He said, "If I could climb to the highest peak in Athens I would proclaim aloud, 'Oh, my fellow citizens; why do you scrape the rocks for gold and neglect your children to whom you must ere long relinquish it all.'"

And so, my friends, a dollar well spent in educating a boy or girl—and I speak of education in its broader sense, educating not only the mind and intellect, but the spirit, and building the character of the child—is the best dollar you can spend of governmental money.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. These high prices and low prices paid to teachers elsewhere may not be a perfect criterion. I agree with the gentleman. But in this age of competition should not the Congress take into consideration the higher salaries paid elsewhere in fixing the salaries here, since the teachers might be lured away by offers of better-paid positions elsewhere?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think Congress should take into consideration the low salaries in other places. I do not know of a place—certainly in my own State and other States—where the school-teacher, the person who has the function largely of shaping the life and character of the boy or girl, and in many instances more instrumental for good than the parents—many times the school-teacher will see the child and have more influence in forming his character and shaping his future than the parents.

I do not think we pay enough. When you go out and hire a man or woman who is mentally and morally equipped to take up this greatest of all tasks, they ought to be adequately paid. We want better men and better women. We should want more honesty and morality in public men and in men who take public office.

How can we have such a condition? By raising up a generation of better men and women. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking of honesty, and citizenship, and public office, I desire to take this opportunity to make a few observations which I hope shall not be entirely out of place at this time. I use the term "observations" advisedly, as what I shall have to say will be not in a spirit of criticism or prompted by partisan feeling. Mr. Chairman, I shall digress just a little with the indulgence of the committee.

I said to my constituents before coming to Congress that while I was a Democrat, and believed in the tenets and principles of the great party; and that while I should always endeavor to hold up its standard, when that standard was hoisted in the cause of right, yet I said that I regretted the tendency of both parties in too often allowing their zeal as party champions to overshadow, and sway their better and saner judgment as Representatives of the people. In the heat of the fray we of both parties too often forget that after all what the great masses of American citizens are most interested in is a constructive legislative program that will meet the needs of the varied and complex social and business life of America.

The average American citizen loves to see a good, lively, spirited, political campaign, and especially when it is conducted on a high plane and involves great and fundamental issues. They love to participate in such scraps. They like at election time to pick a candidate and a cause, and with characteristic American enthusiasm espouse the cause of their choice with might and main. But there is a time for partisan politics and a time for legislative action.

And so it is that the two great parties represented in the political life of the Nation vie with each other from time to time, each claiming to be the party best fitted by material, and best suited by tradition to reflect in the affairs of statecraft the hopes, the ambitions, and the ideals of this great people. I believe in government by political parties. I can imagine no other way in which the fundamentals of our American form of Government might find expression, yet I say again that the first, the foremost, and greatest duty of every man who takes the oath of a representative in either branch of the American Congress is to see to it as best he can that the legislative needs of the Nation are not neglected and passed by in our party fights. Country first. Party next.

Mr. Chairman, we are living in a day of investigations. Everybody who is not investigating is being investigated. And on we go. But let us not forget that our constituents are expecting, aye, demanding that certain great legislative needs shall have the consideration of their Representatives.

It can not be rightfully said that the present Congress has wholly failed to function. Its usefulness has been greatly handicapped. It is true, because of the impotence of the party in power. The Republican Party has a majority in both branches of the Congress. Both Houses are organized under Republican leadership. The legislative program of both bodies is wholly and entirely in the hands and under the control of the Republican Party. All legislation upon the floor of either body is engineered by a steering committee controlled by that party. Every committee of both branches has thereon a majority of Republicans and can report out a bill at its will. Their steering committee can bring that bill upon the floor for action at any time. And so if there has been a failure—and there has been to some extent—to function, is it not properly and justly chargeable to the party into whose hands the people of America in 1920 placed the power of Government?

Yet, notwithstanding this condition, substantial progress has been made in the passage of legislation in the House up to this time. A number of great appropriation bills have been passed. Absolutely no partisan effort on the part of the minority to delay the passage, or to embarrass the administration in the passage of these measures.

A revenue bill has been passed by the House. And although there is a wide difference of opinion about its merit, yet if it can become a law as passed by the House it will give to the people a substantial reduction in their Federal tax burden and a 25 per cent reduction on the 1923 Federal taxes, which to my mind is so desirable at this time.

Consideration was given a measure to submit to the States an amendment to the Federal Constitution to prohibit the further issuance of tax-exempt securities. This was a live question, ably debated, and defeated by a nonpartisan vote.

A so-called adjusted compensation measure was called up. The gag rule was applied by the party in power, all debate shut off, and the right to amend denied, and voted through by the advocates of adjusted compensation with a prayer upon their lips that the Senate would absolutely rewrite it.

The Muscle Shoals bill was debated and passed by an overwhelming nonpartisan vote—this measure that means so much to the farmers of the country.

And a number of other important pieces of legislation have been considered by the House, and now await action by the other branch of the Congress.

But all the time we are investigating and being investigated. What has come of it?

Well, some months ago this Nation was shaken from center to circumference by the revelations that the great oil reserves of the Nation, to which we must look for fuel for the Navy of the Nation in time of emergency, had been handed over to be exploited by private interests. A former Republican Secretary of the Interior had not been able to stand up against the temptings of private interests, and had, for a consideration, been false to his high duty as a Cabinet officer. A Republican Secretary of the Navy, either because of a fraudulent purpose, or abstract stupidity—and I believe the latter—who was the legal custodian of this public domain, had at least acquiesced in this great fraud against the rights of the American people. When confronted with his wrong, he said if he had the chance he would do it again. He will not have the chance.

A Republican Attorney General, long under suspicion before the bar of American public opinion; the veritable thorn in the flesh of the conscientious members of his party; a millstone around the neck of his party in power; the boon companion of crooks and bribers of all descriptions, and no longer trusted by his President, has gone down before the irresistible power that was gradually crushing him out of power, and that would have carried down all who tried to hold him up.

What is the net result of it all? What is the popular reaction to the investigations to date?

The investigations have shown a condition to exist in the high places of government never thought of in the wildest dreams of those who are ever too ready to suspect and question all public men. They have forced out of public life men who had not measured up to the high standard of honesty and integrity in public affairs, although picked from among "the best minds." Has this not been a service to the American people? Have we not written "that those who run may read"? I think we have.

Yet we are told that there are to be other investigations, and so on, and so on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I, as a Democrat, make bold to venture the suggestion that it might be possible to go to the extreme in the matter of investigations, just as you can go to extremes in most other things, even though the end sought might be ever so worthy. Of course, if anyone has violated the law he ought to be indicted and prosecuted for it; and impeached if he is an officeholder, no matter to which party he may belong. But what are we going to accomplish if we keep it up?

Well, we are told we will drive out all the rest of the members of the Cabinet. Well, in the first place I doubt it. In the second place I believe we ought from now on give more time and thought to the legislative needs of the Nation. Let us apply our talent and our serious thought and our eloquence in meeting and attempting to solve some of the great problems pending before Congress and which the people want us to consider and pass on. We have demonstrated beyond any possible question that the people made a great mistake four years ago, and that there ought to be a housecleaning upstairs and downstairs; but let us not be selfish about the matter and put them all out. Let us wait until November and give the great electorate of America a chance to help in the cleaning.

There are some measures pending before Congress that certainly should have its consideration and action before adjournment. There are many of them, but there comes to my mind the great immigration bill, in the passage of which the people are so much interested. The educational bill; several constitutional amendments that many of our citizens are interested in and have a right to an expression from Congress one way or the other. And still others. Some affecting the agricultural interests; the bill affecting the salary raise for postal employees, and the bill liberalizing the retirement act. All these and still others. Let us get down to it and leave it to the intelligence of the voting public of America to finish the housecleaning in November, which I sincerely believe they will do unless we, blinded by partisan desire, shall convince them that they could expect little better from the Democratic Party, should they be given the power to govern.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has 17 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas has 12 minutes.

Mr. ZIEHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in the very limited time allowed me I wish to urge the House to pass this bill which provides for an increase in the salaries of the teachers of the District of Columbia. In my judgment, no more important measure affecting the welfare of this great and beautiful city of Washington can be considered by this House. Nothing can be of more concern to this city than the education of her children. Into our hands is committed the trust of providing for the education of these children. We can not, we must not fail in this trust. Ours is the duty to see that every child in this city is afforded the opportunity to be trained and prepared and educated. Ours is the high privilege to give to the child, made in the divine likeness and holding that inestimable treasure which many of us have lost, that one priceless treasure, the future, a man's chance to win in the battle of life. [Applause.]

Education is a sham, a cheat unless carried on by able, accomplished teachers. The whole worth of a school lies in the teacher. As water can not rise higher than its source, so a class can not be better than its teacher. Adam Smith in his Wealth of Nations tells us that before the invention of the art of printing, a scholar and a beggar were terms very nearly synonymous. Before that time the governors of the different universities appear to have often granted licenses to their teachers to beg. As I have looked over the salaries that have been paid the teachers of the District of Columbia during the past years, I have not doubted but that these teachers have thought that we were about to return to those bad old days.

The evidence submitted to the committee reporting this bill shows that the salaries in Washington are much lower than they are in other cities of similar size—in fact, the compensation paid teachers in the District of Columbia is so much lower than the salaries paid in other cities that Washington can not compete with other cities in securing and retaining efficient teachers. A laborer is worthy of his hire, and if you do not pay him, you can not get him. Reports to the National Education Association show the following:

TEACHERS OF GRADES I TO GRADES VIII.

Maximum salaries: With the present Washington salary and using the smallest amounts wherever maximum is not a single amount, 64 of the 66 cities reporting pay more than Washington and 1 pays less, as a maximum.

With the present Washington salary and using the largest amounts wherever maximum is not a single amount, 55 of the 66 cities reporting pay more than Washington, 1 city pays the same, and 9 cities pay less, as a maximum.

This is but an example of the discrepancy between the salaries paid the teachers of the District of Columbia and the salaries paid the teachers of the other large cities of the country. Compare the minimum salaries or the maximum salaries, compare the elementary-school salaries or the junior high school salaries or the high-school salaries or the principals' salaries or the superintendents' salaries and the discrepancy will be very largely the same. In his testimony before the committee Doctor Bailou, the superintendent of the Washington schools, told of the great difficulty experienced in securing teachers for Washington on account of the low and inadequate salaries. He called attention to the fact that in 1922 out of 22 persons who had taken the examination and qualified to teach in the District of Columbia only 6 answered the inquiries as to whether or not they would accept an appointment, and that only 1 of the 22 would accept an appointment. If we consider the relative position of the States and the District of Columbia and their ability to educate their children, we find that the District of Columbia ranks first in income per child and that it ranks forty-second in per cent of income expended for education.

Let me remind you, gentlemen, that since 1913 the increase in the cost of living has been 52 per cent and the increase in the salaries of teachers has been only from 10 to 20 per cent. There are those who charge that education is costing too much. Education is costing this country each year approximately $1,036,000,000. This is only 2.13 per cent of the country's total income. The Nation spends vastly greater sums than this for other purposes; for example, according to the statistics of the National Education Association $17,336,000,000 is annually expended by the people of this country for luxuries. Of this amount over $2,000,000,000 is spent for tobacco alone. We spend nearly twice as much for tobacco as we do for all our public schools. Several years ago the United States Commissioner of Education estimated that 5 per cent interest on the money we expended to win the war would be a quarter of a billion dollars more than would be necessary to give to America a first-rate public-school system.

The salaries of the teachers in Washington are miserably low, but nowhere in this country are the salaries of teachers up to that standard that they should be. The teacher is like the soldier. You can not compensate the soldier for his service. You can not compensate the teacher for his service. The service is too great. You can merely give the teacher a salary that will permit him to serve, and I will never be satisfied until we pay the teachers of this country a salary that will enable them to live as their position in the community demands; that will enable them to carry on their work by study and by travel in the summer; and that will enable them to prepare financially for their old age. [Applause.]

The passage of this bill gives to us an opportunity to dignify the teaching profession in the Capital of the Nation to the end that a reasonable standard of pay for teachers may be established for the whole country. I wish to call your attention to the following resolutions, passed by the National Education Association and by the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association:

[Excerpt from resolutions of the National Education Association, Oakland, Calif., July 6, 1923.]

"We should be able to find in the city of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, leadership in matters concerning school administration, supervision, teaching, business management, and for the promulgation of a far-seeing and adequate educational program for city schools.

"The schools of the Capital City belong to the Nation, and for this reason we urge Congress to create a board of education for the city of Washington which shall be absolutely free from party control, which shall have entire control of its financial budget, and which shall have an adequate financial income to maintain schools of which the Nation may be proud."

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct extract from the resolutions adopted by the National Education Association, July 6, 1923, at Oakland, Calif.

J. W. CHADWELL, Secretary.

[Excerpt from resolutions of the department of superintendence of the National Education Association, Cleveland, Ohio, March 1, 1923.]

"We note with satisfaction and heartily indorse the expressed intention of Congress to make the school system of Washington the model school system of the country. We pledge to Congress our hearty support of this proposed legislation and of such appropriation of funds as may be necessary to provide in the National Capital a system of public education which shall exemplify to the Nation the best in administration, supervision, business management, and teaching service. To this end we urge the immediate passage of the teachers' salary bill now pending before Congress."

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct extract from the resolutions adopted by the department of superintendence March 1, 1923, at Cleveland, Ohio.

S. D. SHANKLAND, Executive Secretary.

It was my privilege as the president of the board of education of the city of Montgomery, Ala., to attend the annual meeting of the department of superintendence held in Atlantic City in February, 1921. At that time there was scarcely a paper or a periodical in America that was not indicting the American people for the meager and unjust salaries that were being paid our teachers. And yet, although that meeting was a continual discussion of the educational problems of the day I heard not one word of complaint, not one word of protest, not one word of condemnation by any educator of the mere pittance that was being paid the teachers of this country for their service to the Nation. The predominant note sounded by those educators was their fine understanding of the service which is theirs and their high consecration to that service. The whole meeting was so free from the taint of private interest or personal preference. There were no selfish aims subverted, no partisanship furthered. The atmosphere of the meeting was surcharged with Americanism, an Americanism potential with sacrifice, an Americanism vibrant in its democracy, and 100 per cent in its adherence to the precepts of the Republic. All seemed shot through with the idea to give something to the country. I thrilled beneath the spell of the nobility of that gathering and as I sat there in that great convention hall with those six or seven thousand men and women, representing the half million and more teachers of this Nation, it filled my imagination as I thought of them busy every day and every night, busy with a great eagerness to show some little stranger the right road, busy with a forgetfulness of their own comforts, pleasures, and fortunes, giving of themselves to bring light to the minds and the hearts of our people—servants come from God. [Applause.]

These are the men and women into whose hands is intrusted the molding of the citizenship of the morrow. It is to these men and women that we must look for the future American. The public school is making ready those who in the years to come are to uphold the pillars of the Nation. From its crucible will be poured the warp and the woof of our national life. It is the bulwark of the Republic. It is the great enterprise of the Nation. There is nowhere in this land any home so humble that it may not send its children to enter beneath the portals of the public school and there stand the peer of all. The public school pays no tribute to aristocracy, subscribes to no creed or caste, renders fealty to no monarch or master of any name or kind. It is no snob, and holds in its warm embrace all of its little sons and daughters. It is of the very stuff of opportunity. It is triumphant in its embodiment of the principles of the Republic. The teachers are the torch-bearers of the Republic. Without them the school is a meaningless shell decaying unto dust; with them it is a mighty living, moving thing. What the soul is to the body of man the teacher is to the school. [Applause.]

Here in the Capital of the Nation, in this body representing a great and grateful people, let us be just to our teachers and let us set an example for the guidance of the Nation in the end that our schools may be great, strong, and true. More than this we are not asked; less than this we can not do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Gentlemen. I wish you would give me your attention for a moment. You want to understand this bill, and I want to call your attention to the fact that the longevity allowance is granted in this bill. I call your attention to page 10, line 12 and on down:

Provided, That under the provisions of this section the present compensation of any teacher, school officer, or other employee shall be constructed to include basic salary, longevity allowance, session-room allowance, and increase of compensation (bonus): Provided further, That teachers and other employees assigned to classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the foregoing schedule shall be entitled to longevity placement as provided in section 6.

Now, in section 6 it is provided—

SEC. 6. That teachers, school officers, and other employees in the service of the Board of Education on July 1, 1924, shall be placed in the salary classes and positions of the foregoing schedule as follows:

Now, let me read to you a little further.

Provided further, That all teachers, school officers, or other employees hereafter appointed, shall be placed in the salary classes and positions in the foregoing schedule by the said board, and all teachers and other employees assigned to classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the foregoing schedule in the service of the said board on July 1, 1924, or thereafter appointed shall receive their longevity increase according to their previous number of years of experience in teaching in like positions in accredited schools to those which they hold on July 1, 1924, or to which they may thereafter be appointed:

Then it provides that service in the Army and Navy shall be the same as actual school service in teaching in granting this longevity allowance. Now, there is no question about the teachers, and I would not have it otherwise. Each teacher is entitled to a basic salary of so much and $100 each for 10 years. Suppose a teacher has taught for 10 years? She should be entitled to her longevity allowance. She ought to begin with the maximum salary; that is fair, and I would not have it any other way. I would contend for it if it were not already in the bill, but it is in the bill, and a teacher who has taught 10 years will begin with the maximum salary provided in this bill. There is no question about it.

Now, the point I made was this: There is nothing in the bill which keeps the officers from beginning with the maximum salary provided in the bill when they have already served the required number of years, and you can not find one word in this bill which will prevent every officer in the school force from beginning with the maximum salary. It is simply a question of construction and I would not have that otherwise. Say a school superintendent has been superintendent for five years or even three years, and you provide in the bill a basic salary of $8,000, and $1,000 for succeeding years of service. Why should he not begin with the $10,000, if he has had the proper longevity experience in teaching or in acting as superintendent?

Now, I want to submit this to you: You think it is awfully easy for a teacher to get a position in Washington; you think that positions are being vacated, that teachers are quitting and going elsewhere to places where larger salaries are paid, but I want to give you a little experience I had.

A young lady came here and asked me to help her get a position in the schools. I helped her make application to the superintendent for a position. She was a bachelor of arts from the University of Texas and had taken her arts degree there; she was a Phi Beta Kappa and wore her key when she went to see the superintendent. She was a graduate of the State normal school for teachers; she had her certificate of graduation from that school. She had taught for three years in an approved high school. If you please, and yet it took several months for me to even get her located as a temporary teacher, without any permanent position but merely a temporary teacher with no regular position at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, the people of the State of New York have insisted on their legislators giving them expert teachers through the medium of decent salaries and excellent training. I voted in the New York State Senate for the first equal pay bill and again for the increase in salary bill of 1920, about which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] has spoken. As a result of this New York State, according to the charts prepared by the National Education Association, stands first in the list of States in the matter of the pay of teachers.

I believe the people in my State want their Representatives to show the teachers of the District the same consideration which we showed to our own teachers, for, after all, the people of our State recognize that the people of the District, without a vote but with a tax, are entitled to decent and honest government from us, the same government which we accord to our own people.

According to city school leaflet No. 15, prepared by the Department of the Interior through the Bureau of Education, the salaries in the District of Columbia for the elementary grades run from $1,200 to $1,600 a year, while in Chicago they run from $1,500 to $2,600, and in New York from $1,500 to $2,875. Now, this disparity is great, and I do not think anybody will claim that New York City or Chicago are paying too much.

Then, the next question which confronts us is: Are the teachers of the District and the officials of this District entitled to the increases which are asked for in this bill? While Washington stands twenty-third among the cities of 100,000 or over in the matter of pay of salaries to teachers, Washington stands, according to the charts prepared by the National Education Association, first in the matter of information on public questions shown by its children, second in the matter of educational attainment shown by its children, and third in the matter of public-school efficiency. This is a marvelous comparison, and I submit that the teachers and supervisory officials who are responsible for this high rank in efficiency should get great consideration from this Congress.

I certainly believe that if the people of the city of Washington had the home rule to which they are entitled, and if they had presented to them the fact that although their teachers are paid a ridiculous salary they have managed to keep their schools in the very first ranks in the matter of efficiency, that the people of this city would vote for these increases.

Money given the public-school teachers is money given to the children of the schools. A cultured, contented teacher means cultured, contented children. [Applause.] Self-instruction, added culture, and added contentment come to the teacher with added income. As the report of the Carnegie Foundation for the advancement of teaching for 1923 points out, the schools, while primarily intellectual agencies, are inevitably, if they are sincere, agencies for the building of the character of the children; and a teacher in the right frame of mind will build up the character of the pupils, but the teacher dissatisfied and discontented will unconsciously debilitate the minds and morality of the children.

The children in the schools of Washington are, after all, the children of the various States, and they are going back at some time or other to the various States; and I believe it is the duty of the Federal Government, under these circumstances and under the peculiar relationship that exists between the District, the States, and the Federal Government, to see to it that the children in this District get the best possible education through the medium of the best possible salaries to the teachers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I suppose there is no investment which can be made by the public that yields as good returns as a proper investment for the education of our children, and I have always been of the opinion that those who are engaged in the work of teaching are doing as patriotic a service as the men who are fighting on the battle line. There is very little hope of reward for those who do the rank and file work in the educational field. Occasionally somebody gets to be a superintendent. Of course, there are few superintendents in comparison with the total number of teachers.

I am not sufficiently informed on the merits of this bill to give an intelligent opinion about its justice or whether the compensation sought to be paid is excessive or whether the compensation is not more than adequate. I have some doubt about the language of the bill. It looks to me as if it might be retroactive in some respects. If it is, it ought not to be passed in that form. It is proposed here to pay teachers a basic salary and to pay superintendents basic salaries and to pay principals basic salaries, with further increments to these salaries as time goes on. It does not say whether the number of years required of a teacher shall be 10 years after the bill is passed or whether it shall be 10 years counting the time before the bill is passed, before these additional amounts shall become effective.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
 Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman listen to this language of the bill: That on and after July 1, 1924.
 Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I understand that.
 Mr. DOWELL. I think language could not be clearer.
 Mr. MADDEN. It says that after July 1 these salaries become effective.

Mr. DOWELL. And then its provisions provide for the increases as they progress.

Mr. MADDEN. I think, however, that is simply to make it conform to the fiscal year when the appropriations become available. I have some doubt whether that does not become retroactive as to the additional compensation. If it does, I am opposed to the retroactive feature of it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I agree with the gentleman that the language of the bill is indefinite, especially when all of its provisions are considered, but what good reasons can be assigned why a teacher or a superintendent heretofore employed in the District schools should not have the benefit of increased pay by reason of such service?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, they have been getting longevity pay all the time.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I ask the gentleman this further question? When we came to write the classification bill for the Postal Service, my recollection is that service prior to the time of such classification was given credit for. The same was true when we came to write the pay bill for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. I think not in the Postal Service. I helped to write that bill. What we did do in the Postal Service was this: We increased the entrance pay; that is, the grade that was drawing a smaller rate drew a larger rate.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is correct. For example, if a man was in grade 5 of the Postal Service, when the new salary range was made he was transferred to grade 5 in the new range.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true, and that is just what I said. We increased the entrance pay.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. That amounted, of course, to giving him the benefit of his prior service.

Mr. MADDEN. We made the entrance pay larger.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And unquestionably, when we passed the increase pay bill for the allied military services last year, we gave the benefit of all increases to those who had performed previous service.

Mr. MADDEN. And these people have been getting their longevity also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Illinois two more minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I rose principally, however, to say this: I do not know anything much about the qualifications of the superintendent of the schools here, but that is due to my own lack of opportunity to study his qualifications. He may be the best man in the world, but I think $10,000 a year is more than ought to be paid to a superintendent of schools in a city of this class. No superintendent of schools here ought to get more than $7,500 a year. That is all the salary ought to be, not only now but at any time, while the population remains substantially what it is. Why should the superintendent of schools here get $2,500 a year more than a Member of Congress. Is there any reason why he should?

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Is he required to know any more?

Mr. DOWELL. The superintendent of schools in the city of Chicago gets—

Mr. MADDEN. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. DOWELL. Twelve thousand dollars a year, as I understand it.

Mr. MADDEN. The last time I heard about the salary it was $10,000, but it may have been increased. I do not know about that; but even if it has been increased to $12,000, certainly there is no comparison between the superintendency of schools here and the superintendency of schools there.

Mr. BLANTON. It is five times as large.

Mr. MADDEN. It is more than five times; it is eight times as large, and the responsibilities are eight times as great.

Mr. GASQUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GASQUE. Does the gentleman think that a member of the Railway Labor Board or a member of the Shipping Board should get more than the superintendent of schools here?

Mr. MADDEN. The members of the Shipping Board are only getting $7,500 a year.

Mr. GASQUE. A bill has been proposed here increasing it to $10,000.

Mr. MADDEN. They may propose all the bills they like, but that does not mean they are going to be passed. I am opposed to making this salary more than $7,500, and I hope we will have enough votes here to stop it from going any higher than that.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. May I inquire whether the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has consumed all his time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately, yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LARSON].

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not given to loquacity on the floor of this House. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will bear out the truth of that statement. The more I see of the workings of Congress the less confidence I have in the efficiency of "government by talk." I have come to the conclusion that it is one of the chief weaknesses of Congress—too much mere talk for home consumption and too little action for the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why does not the gentleman give less of it?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. You have given too much already, my friend. [Laughter.]

Reluctant as I am to talk, I can not remain silent when I hear objections pressed against so meritorious a measure as the one we are now considering. I am enthusiastically for it and every provision of it. This bill should pass without a dissenting voice.

We are considering a matter that has to do with the very foundation of our Government—public-school education—which the founders of this Nation, Washington particularly, urged us, to whom this country was given as a legacy, to encourage and foster. They understood the vital importance of an intelligent and educated citizenry to the welfare of our country and the perpetuity of our institutions.

In the great Ordinance of 1787 for the Northwest Territory, out of which a part of my own State of Minnesota was carved, the fathers said: "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

We have tried to follow that sound advice of the founders, but we have not fully measured up to our responsibilities in the matter of furnishing an adequate system of public-school education to the youth of our land. The disclosures made by draft records shock our national pride. They have aroused, I hope, our conscience. They showed that in this land of promise we have an amazingly large number of illiterate, native as well as foreign born. They revealed the humiliating fact that our percentage of illiteracy is much higher than that of the small and poor countries of Europe. We must remove that disgrace from our national escutcheon.

Let us start right here in the Nation's Capital to make good our erstwhile boast that our free public-school system is the best and most efficient in the world.

The keystone of any school system is the teacher. Commodious, well-ventilated, well-lighted, sanitary school buildings are good, but, after all, the teacher is the school. I think it was Garfield who once said that Mark Hopkins at one end of a log and a pupil at the other end constituted a college. He was right.

But, Mr. Chairman, how can we secure and retain efficient, well-trained, mature, and devoted teachers unless we pay them adequate salaries? And by adequate salaries I mean such as "will provide a comfortable subsistence, afford some compensation for money invested in professional training, furnish means for continued professional improvement, and also a reasonable margin for saving, which is properly regarded as an obligation of citizenship."

We do not require the testimony of an economic expert to prove to us that the cost of living is such here in Washington that salaries less than those provided in this bill do not meet the requirements.

We can not afford to be penurious and stingy in furnishing our children an education. If we must scrimp, let us not do it at the sacrifice of our children's education by being miserly with those who are consecrating themselves to the patriotic duty of developing them into honest, loyal, intelligent, law-abiding, and self-supporting American citizens.

As for the salary of the superintendent, my opinion is that if the man who occupies that exacting and important executive position is not worthy of $10,000 a year the appointive power should find a man who is worthy. It is false economy to have a mediocre at the head of such a great school system as we should have in the Nation's Capital. In voting on this important measure let us bear in mind that "the safety of the Republic rests to a large degree with the teachers of the Nation." [Applause.]

Now, as to comparing the salary of the superintendent of schools with the salary of a Congressman, I want to say that the salary of $7,500 for a Congressman is not enough. If I had my way I would place the salary of a Congressman at $12,000 and reduce by one-half the membership of this House. [Applause.] In my judgment the country would then have better legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1924, the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall be as follows:

ARTICLE I.—SALARIES OF TEACHERS AND SCHOOL LIBRARIANS.

CLASS 1. TEACHERS IN KINDERGARTENS AND ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

Group A. A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,200 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,300 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,600 per year is reached.

CLASS 2. TEACHERS IN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS.

A teacher in the junior high schools who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the elementary schools and who in addition has met the higher eligibility requirements established by the Board of Education for teachers in junior high schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules:

Group A. A basic salary of $1,600 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,400 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

A teacher in the junior high school who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the senior high and normal schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules:

Group C. A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for ten years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group D. A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

CLASS 3. TEACHERS IN SENIOR HIGH AND NORMAL SCHOOLS.

Group A. A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for ten years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

CLASS 4. SCHOOL LIBRARIANS.

Group A. A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,200 per year is reached.

Group B. A basic salary of $2,300 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,600 per year is reached.

ARTICLE II.—SALARIES OF ADMINISTRATIVE AND SUPERVISORY OFFICERS.

CLASS 5.—TEACHING PRINCIPALS WITH FROM FOUR TO SEVEN ROOMS—PRINCIPALS OF ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

A basic salary of $2,300 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,600 per year is reached.

CLASS 6.—TEACHING PRINCIPALS WITH FROM 8 TO 13 ROOMS.

A basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

CLASS 7.—ADMINISTRATIVE PRINCIPALS WITH 16 ROOMS OR MORE, AND PRINCIPALS OF VOCATIONAL AND AMERICANIZATION SCHOOLS.

A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached.

CLASS 8.—PRINCIPALS OF JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS.

A basic salary of $3,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,000 per year is reached.

CLASS 9.—PRINCIPALS OF SENIOR HIGH AND NORMAL SCHOOLS.

A basic salary of $4,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,500 per year is reached.

CLASS 10.—DIRECTORS OF SPECIAL SUBJECTS AND DEPARTMENTS.

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,500 per year is reached.

CLASS 11.—HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS AND ASSISTANT PRINCIPALS.

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $3,700 per year is reached.

CLASS 12.—SUPERVISING PRINCIPALS.

A basic salary of $4,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,500 per year is reached.

COMMUNITY CENTER DEPARTMENT.

A. DIRECTOR.

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,500 per year is reached.

B. GENERAL SECRETARIES.

A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,200 per year is reached.

C. COMMUNITY SECRETARIES.

A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $1,700 per year is reached.

DEPARTMENT OF SCHOOL ATTENDANCE AND WORK PERMITS.

A. DIRECTOR.

A basic salary of $3,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,500 per year is reached.

B. CHIEF ATTENDANCE OFFICERS.

A basic salary of $2,100 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for four years, or until a maximum salary of $2,500 per year is reached.

C. ATTENDANCE OFFICERS.

A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for six years, or until a maximum salary of $2,000 per year is reached.

D. CENSUS INSPECTORS.

A basic salary of $1,400 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for six years, or until a maximum salary of $2,000 per year is reached.

BOARD OF EXAMINERS FOR WHITE SCHOOLS.

CHIEF EXAMINER.

A basic salary of $4,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,500 per year is reached.

ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENTS.

A basic salary of $4,200 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $4,700 per year is reached.

FIRST ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENTS.

A basic salary of $4,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for five years, or until a maximum salary of $5,000 per year is reached.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

A basic salary of $8,000 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $1,000 for two years, or until a maximum salary of $10,000 per year is reached.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 7, line 1, strike out the words "For white schools."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard against the committee amendment. I would like to have my colleagues understand this amendment. You are here providing, as proposed by the members of the committee, that a salary of $4,500 a year shall be paid to the board of examiners of the District. Forty-five hundred dollars a year is a pretty big salary for them with what experience they have had in life, the number of years they have spent in preparing themselves to be examiners. I worked quite a number of years for $3,000 a year as a trial judge, and I think I gave the best there was in me to that work. The circuit judges all over the United States in most of your States, the circuit trial judges in your home States, who try men for their lives, who try property rights involving millions of dollars, do not now get over $4,000 a year. Most of them do not now get but $3,000, and here you are proposing to pay these examiners, white and colored, by this amendment $4,500.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Does the gentleman think the judges of whom he speaks get enough salary?

Mr. BLANTON. The people at home think so.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Does the gentleman think so?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this to my distinguished four-minute orator from the great West, that when you find salaries ranging from $3,000 to $5,000 they are fixed by the people; when you find big salaries ranging from $10,000 to $15,000, $20,000, and $25,000, they are fixed by legislators and not by the people.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to answer it. What is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Does the gentleman think that the judges of whom he speaks are adequately paid for their work?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know. I know that at every election there are numerous lawyers trying to get their jobs away from them. I am against this amendment, and I think it ought to be voted down.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the members of the committee that I am rather surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], a member of the subcommittee that reported this bill, and who should be familiar with this section of the bill. If the members will examine this amendment they will see that it is not a part of the bill, but it is simply a heading for a section of the bill. Here is a board of examiners, and if you will turn to page 18 of the bill you will find what the board of examiners really is. Section 13 provides:

That boards of examiners for carrying out the provisions of the statutes with reference to examinations of teachers shall consist of the superintendent of schools and not less than four nor more than six members of the supervisory or teaching staff of the white schools for the white schools and of the superintendent of schools and not less than four nor more than six members of the supervisory or teaching staff of the colored schools for the colored schools. The designations of members of the supervisory or teaching staff for membership on these boards shall be made annually by the Board of Education on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools.

Then section 14 says:

That there shall be appointed by the Board of Education, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, a chief examiner for the board of examiners for white schools: Provided, That an assistant superintendent in the colored schools shall be designated by the superintendent of schools as chief examiner for the board of examiners for the colored schools: Provided further, That, except as herein otherwise provided, all members of the respective boards of examiners shall serve without additional compensation.

This bill does create an additional examiner, who will serve as secretary and aid to the examining board and superintendent of schools, but it is specifically provided in the bill that the colored examiner shall serve without additional compensation and shall be assistant superintendent of the colored schools. The amendment does not change the language of the bill one iota. It is simply in the heading or caption and is not in the body of the bill at all.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. How many examinations are there a year? In my State there are only two in a year.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, examinations are being held continually.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I know that in Washington it is almost continuous, but there are very few vacancies. Can the gentleman give us some idea as to the amount of work these persons would have to perform? Taking other States with which I am familiar, there are not to exceed two examinations in a year, each taking about three weeks, which would be a total of six weeks. Does the gentleman mean to say that we should pay $4,000 to this man for six weeks' work?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, no; this chief examiner, which was advocated by the school board, will serve as a secretary and an assistant to the two boards.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. But the school boards up here are not elected as they are in Maryland, and they can advocate some things that the school boards of the gentleman's home and mine would not advocate.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It was shown to the satisfaction of the members of the committee that this additional help was necessary. There is only one extra position created. I am opposed to the position that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] takes, who states that a colored examiner is created by this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Of course, it is absurd that there ought to be no examiners for any but the white schools. That is what this proposes if the amendment is not adopted. The amendment ought to be adopted without any question. A board of examiners is all that ought to be provided for. It ought not to say a board of examiners for white schools, with no provision whatever for the colored schools. There ought not to be any discrimination in the matter. A board of examiners ought to be provided, and then the people who are to be the examiners are provided further in the bill. We ought not to say simply a board of examiners for white schools. We have both classes of schools here in the District and both should be provided with examiners. All you have to do to provide for that is to strike out these words.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. As I understand it, it leaves it just the same except that the board of examiners for the colored school works for nothing and for the white schools this man gets $4,000 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any discrimination here.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. In this bill that is discrimination.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there is any discrimination.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I am taking the word of the chairman of the committee. He said that there was no salary for the other.

Mr. MADDEN. That can not be true.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I will leave that as between the gentleman from Illinois and the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. There is provision made for a board of examiners for the white schools and another for the colored schools. The autonomy of the white schools and the autonomy of the colored schools are continued intact. There is no additional salary except the salary of the chief examiner. There is no compensation added on account of these people being examiners.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The paragraph at the top of page 7 creates a new position of chief examiner who shall serve as secretary to the board of examiners and as an aid to the superintendent in conducting these examinations. I might say that in Washington two-thirds of the teachers are white and one-third are colored. There is a much larger turnover among the white teachers than among the colored teachers. The colored teachers seem to be very proud of their positions and to hold on to them.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Under the language that the committee proposes, may I ask whether or not the duties of the chief examiner, which is the new position created, would be limited to a supervision of examinations of the white teachers, or would he have general supervision over both?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I understand that he would; yes. Under the provisions of the bill the superintendent of the schools is a member of both the white and the colored teachers' examining boards. This chief examiner is to act in a secretarial capacity, and I assume that in serving the superintendent, who is a member of both boards, he would serve both boards.

Mr. KETCHAM. If he does not, then the point made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] is well taken. There ought not to be any discrimination as would seem to be indicated here when a salary of $4,500 is paid one and no additional salary is paid to the other. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 11, strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is just a question of whether you are going to pay these assistant superintendents $5,000 instead of $4,500.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What do they get now?

Mr. BLANTON. As I understand it, the assistant superintendent gets $2,800 a year.

Mr. GASQUE. They get $3,600.

Mr. BLANTON. The principal of the big Central High School gets a basic salary of $3,500 with an increase of $100 for five years, and he is the highest paid man there.

Mr. GASQUE. My information is from one of the members of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia. If it is wrong—

Mr. BLANTON. What do these assistant superintendents get now?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will have that information in a moment.

Mr. RAKER. While the gentleman is examining, how many are there of these assistant superintendents?

Mr. BLANTON. I think there are only three of these first assistants.

Mr. RAKER. That is indefinite, coming from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, I am on this salary part of it. I am waiting for the committee to give me some information.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to give the gentleman some information right there with regard to assistant superintendents. At Dallas it is $6,000 a year, and they have got two of them. The people out there decide on how much they will pay their men, and Dallas is about one-third the size of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. By referring to my minority report, I find that they get $3,750; that is the assistant's salary. I find it in my minority report, and I do not now have to depend upon the committee. The gentleman from Minnesota first sought to give $750 raise. In his bill as originally introduced he provided them pay of $4,500. It is therefore a $750 raise already, but he was not satisfied with that, and when the committee met they passed an amendment giving them not $750 but $1,250. This committee amendment, if you vote for it, will give these three assistant superintendents a $1,250 raise, or a salary of $6,000 per year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How much on an average do they raise the teachers' salaries, the people who do the work here in these schools?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the average raise is $600 or $700.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not so much a raise as the assistant superintendent?

Mr. BLANTON. No; for this is a $1,250 raise. It ought to be sufficient to give these superintendents the $750 raise, but now they want to give them a $1,250 raise instead of a $750 raise, and I feel like I can not go with them. That is a matter for all of us to decide. We ought not to vote for this amendment, because even by voting it down it gives these assistant superintendents a $750 raise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no last word, only "$5,000."

Mr. SEARS of Florida. The last word is "reached."

The CHAIRMAN. In the committee amendment it is to substitute "$5,000" for "$4,500."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I listened to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said a moment ago. It was forcefully uttered, but did not impress me as being argumentative. He said that we had not raised anybody else's salary as it is now proposed to raise the salaries of these assistant school superintendents. Well, there is no other class of Government employees in Washington who have as great and vitally important a duty to perform as have the school-teachers in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] Not one. I have made that statement before on this floor, coupled with the statement that there are two supremely important professions in this Republic, one the profession of the school-teacher and the other that of the honest, able, high-minded, public-spirited, fearless editor.

Mr. KING. That species is extinct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In support of my estimate of the business of the school-teacher, I will quote what a great American long ago said about it:

The dignity of the vocation of a teacher is beginning to be understood; the idea is dawning upon us that no office can compare in solemnity and importance with that of training the child; that skill to form the young to energy, truth, and virtue is worth more than the knowledge of all other arts and sciences; and that the encouragement of excellent teachers is the first duty which a community owes to itself. I say the truth is dawning and must make its way. * * * The whole worth of a school lies in the teacher. You may accumulate the most expensive apparatus for instruction, but without an intellectual, gifted teacher it is little better than rubbish; and such a teacher without apparatus may effect the happiest results. * * *

What we want is a race of teachers acquainted with the philosophy of the mind, gifted men and women, who shall respect human nature in the child and strive to touch and gently bring out its best powers and sympathies, and who shall devote themselves to this as the great end of life. This good, I trust, is to come, but it comes slowly. * * * This good requires that education shall be recognized by the community as its highest interest and duty.

It requires that the instructors of youth shall take precedence of the money-getting class, and that the woman of fashion shall fall behind the female teacher.

That was the noble and true conception of the vocation of a school-teacher held by one of the noblest, wisest men this Republic has ever known, William Ellery Channing. A teacher takes a little boy or a little girl at the habit-forming age; and, as was said generations ago, habit is a cable; we weave a strand a day and at last it becomes so strong that we can not break it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed by what the gentleman from Wisconsin said; but, as he says of the speech of the gentleman from Texas, it has no relation whatever to the paragraph we are considering.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The whole section is under consideration, and this is an amendment to one paragraph of it, and I could not see a better opportunity to bring home this great truth, and I had it right there.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And the gentleman did it very well, indeed. I am not concerned very much as to the salary the first assistant superintendent shall receive. Five thousand dollars may be right. It may not be too large a salary for him if he is competent to hold the position; but I have been attracted by a long, long list of officers, each with an imposing title, and each with a considerably larger salary than is paid to teachers who do the real work. I am also concerned with the fact that the increase of pay provided for each man or woman who holds an imposing title is larger than the increase provided for teachers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In a moment. The bill tells of superintendents, assistant superintendents—I do not know how many; first assistant superintendents, principals—I do not know how many; assistant principals, teaching principals, supervising principals, directors, general secretaries, community secretaries, chief attendance officers; officers and titles too numerous to mention, justifying the statements that have come to me—reliable, I believe—that our schools have system, system; more system and more intricate machinery than anything else. They are becoming top-heavy; they are breaking down. More attention is paid to those who hold high official positions and are drawing high salaries than is paid to teachers in the grades, the teachers whose work is more difficult and of even greater importance than are the duties performed or assumed by many of those who carry high-sounding titles.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is not quite right in that statement. The last time these teachers' schedules were fixed by law was in 1906. There have been some increased allowances recommended by committees. In the increases in the schedules the gentleman will find—

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is not asking a question; I yielded only for a question.

Mr. SNELL. The assistant superintendent is one of the smallest increases in the whole list.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How many are there? Who appoints them? Are they made and created in the dis-creation of the superintendent, or by whom? I have had no answer to that inquiry, yet I have made it of gentlemen who, I thought, had information on the subject.

I fully agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and with the statement he read, that there is no more important or honorable profession than that of teaching. I agree also that teachers never have been and are not now properly paid. I think perhaps we are giving proper attention to the salaries of those higher up, but I am convinced that we are careless and neglectful as to salaries of teachers of the grades. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. I just want to call the gentleman's attention to this, that teachers of kindergarten and elementary schools are 845 in number. The gentleman referred to principals. We have principals in the 15 rooms, 50, so that he can see the comparison that he is trying to bring out, that we have more teachers at high salaries than we ought to have, is not sustained. There is one superintendent, and we have two assistant superintendents and one for the colored schools, so that he can see there that we certainly must have superintendents to take care of the work that belongs to superintendents of such a large class of children as we have here, about 70,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 34. So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 12, strike out "$100" and insert "$200."

Mr. SEARS of Florida rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak against the amendment. I do not want that right to be taken away from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The first speech should be one in favor of the committee amendment. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, you put me in an embarrassing position, but I will do the best I can. I am opposed to the amendment. I hope this amendment will not carry.

I listened with interest to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] said, and I am in hearty accord with every word he said.

For 10 years I worked with and tried to assist young men and young lady school teachers, and I want to say that then and now I bemoaned the fact that they were not paid the salary to which I felt they were entitled. I had hoped that when I came to Congress times might change and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] said, that the ones who did the real work might get the real pay. But I find that again the hopes of the school teachers are partly blasted, and I fear that they will go on to the end of time getting about the same salary they have always gotten. Of course we men higher up, those with the high-sounding titles, can get $7,500 or $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 a year. I believe the $20,000 maximum was mentioned by my friend from New York [Mr. SNELL]. But when you come to teachers, as stated by my other colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], you can not succeed in making much of a raise.

Now, if I have read the report correctly—and I am reading from the report—the kindergarten teachers received last year the wonderful salary of $1,200 a year. The House should do justice to these good women who are molding the lives and character of the children of this city. But instead we are going to give them the wonderful increase of $200, making their compensation $1,400, in order that they may live in luxury.

We are all appealing for the votes of the teachers if we demand for them what we believe they are entitled to; but turning to some official who works perhaps one month out of a year, we propose to pay him $4,000 a year and call that statesmanship. We should expect consistency. I hope sometimes, Mr. Chairman, that Members of Congress and the people back home will eventually appreciate the great work the teachers are doing and give to the teachers the salaries they are entitled to, and not give the good salaries merely to the higher class men because they happen to have some exalted title.

This is no new question with me. Back home I made the fight for increase of wages for the school-teachers. Then I was working for $125 a month as superintendent and refused a raise because the teachers' salaries could not be raised. The members of the school board were working for $4 a month and their mileage. I thought they might raise the small salaries they were paying the teachers, and we did raise the teachers' salaries, but we did not raise the amount paid the members of the school board. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] said, the reason we did not was because the people voted for the members of the school board and the superintendent, and they did not dare cut the teachers' salaries and raise their own salaries. But when we come up here, after making our pledges and our promises, then we forget, perhaps, what we told the people back home.

Why, Mr. Chairman, you can go into the Department of Justice, you can go into the Veterans' Bureau, and you can go into any bureau in Washington and you will find that the young men and young women who are doing the real work—the chiefs of the bureaus, clerks, and so forth—are getting practically nothing. I am against that system, and I believe the time has come when the little man, the real man, should get some justice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Gentlemen, I want to appeal to you on this amendment. This paragraph involves three men only—two white assistant superintendents and one colored—three men. They are now getting $3,750 a year each. You have just passed one amendment to increase their salary $1,250, or, in other words, to pay them $5,000. Is not that enough? Now you are called upon to pass another amendment which would give them another $1,000 raise, or, in other words, raise them $2,250, to $6,000 per year. Are you going to do that? Because they have already served their longevity term; they have already served their five years; and the very moment you pass this second amendment you will add another $1,000 to the salary of these men, and instead of getting $3,750, as they are now getting, if you pass this second amendment they will get $6,000 a year. That is more of an increase than I am willing to give them.

Now, if you gentlemen want to pay them that additional $2,250, you can do it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that we propose to offer at the end of this session an amendment which will provide that all supervisory officials and administrative officials shall receive for the next year only their basic salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, they are now getting $3,750, and you are fixing in five years' time to pay them $6,000. You have already given them a $1,250 raise. Is not $5,000 enough? Why do you want to add this extra $1,000, especially when you have a letter from the commissioners stating that the Bureau of the Budget has turned this bill down?

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Let me say to the gentleman that the Bureau of the Budget included this very increase in the bill which they indorsed.

Mr. BLANTON. But it did not include all the increases. I agree with my friend from Minnesota that increases ought to be given to these good teachers, but when you provide increases for them you do not provide as much as $2,250 each per year.

Mr. KELLER. Is not the gentleman in favor of the Reed bill, which was indorsed by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am in favor of giving increases to the teachers, but not $2,250 increases to these officers. Of course, the officers went to the Bureau of the Budget and had theirs fixed first.

Mr. KELLER. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, they did; and then you had to put the extra raises for the teachers in the bill afterwards.

Mr. KELLER. The school board and the superintendent of schools—

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman to take all of my five minutes' time. If you gentlemen want to vote for an increase of $2,250 all right, and, of course, I can not keep you from doing it. But that is a matter between you and your conscience and your constituencies. If you do favor such a large increase and you can go home and face your people and square yourselves, I shall not complain of such action.

The other day a petition was presented to the House from 350,000 farmers against salary raises, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Darrow], a member of the Republican steering committee, put it in the Record, and you are paying no attention to it.

Mr. GILBERT. I would like to make this suggestion as to why this amendment should not pass, and that is because after providing a salary of $5,000, if you raise that salary $200 a year for five years it will make $1,000 more, or $6,000, and as there seems to be considerable sentiment for reducing the salary of the superintendent to $6,000, you would then have the first assistant at the end of five years receiving as much as the superintendent.

Mr. BLANTON. That is true, of course.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman about the petition which 350,000 farmers sent in, asking that there should be no salary increases. Does not the gentleman think that those who favor increasing salaries will see to it that it gets no further than being buried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. It looks like it. I have watched raise after raise, and Members are paying no attention to it, and I appeal to you in this instance to pay some attention to the petition of the farmers, because they are the backbone of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 65, noes 34.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 13, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does any Member desire to speak in favor of the amendment?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not bear very heavily on the amendment. I am not going to criticize anyone. That is not my business or intention, but I wonder why we are all the time telling what the folks are going to do at home and what the folks at home would think of us, and whether we are going to do differently here from what we do in an ordinary business transaction.

It has been admitted and conceded that all of the teachers' salaries have been raised, under this bill, practically to their satisfaction. The entire committee has agreed upon the general salary raise of the great body of teachers. Then come the principals, the superintendents, and the assistant superintendents. Why should we not use the same ordinary horse sense, if I may use that appropriate expression, in legislating in regard to these matters that we do in every other business transaction? You know and I know that when you employ a superintendent or an assistant superintendent for any business on earth you select a man who has had experience, you select a man who has brains, you select a man who has nerve, you select a man who has courage, you select a man who has honesty, and the same thing would apply to the older teachers, so that you have picked out one who will make the entire enterprise a success, and that is how success comes—by having some one to engineer and control and keep the entire system working up to the very limit. In every private enterprise, in every bit of work you do, you provide men and women of that character and you pay them according to the responsibility cast upon them. You know and I know, while we are giving every credit to the school teacher in every grade of his or her work, that the superintendent, if he is doing his job properly, or the assistant superintendent, not only on holidays, not only after school, but every day and all the time is looking out so that when school opens and the whole system starts, it will keep working and functioning legitimately and up to the best standards, and we should pay these men and women for their work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 7, line 7, strike out lines 16, 17, and 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The superintendent of schools shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Texas the purpose of the reference to line 7.

Mr. BLANTON. It refers to lines 16, 17, and 18, on page 7. I ask to change that by striking out "line 7."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be corrected in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted, the superintendent of schools will receive $7,500 a year, the same as a Congressman, the same as a United States Senator, and more than all the bureau chiefs of the government now receive, including the expert scientists in our various bureaus. If you do not pass this amendment the superintendent will receive $10,000 a year. It is just a question of whether you want to pay him $7,500 or $10,000. I want to pay him $7,500. I am willing to admit that he may be just as valuable to the government as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and no more. I am willing to admit that he may be as valuable to the country as the majority leader—and he is valuable—but no more. I am not willing to admit that he is more valuable than all of the 96 United States Senators at the other end of the Capitol. He may be more valuable than some, but I am not willing to admit that he is more valuable than all of them. He may be more valuable than some of the Members of the House. He may be more valuable than the gentleman from Texas, but I am not willing to admit that he is more valuable to the country than every one of my colleagues here individually.

The law fixes his salary now at $5,000. We have been paying him $6,000. I am proposing now to raise it $2,500 by law and give him $1,500 more than he has ever received and make it $7,500 per year. He goes out and lectures in some of the universities of the land. I am informed he gets paid for this. I do not object to that. He ought to get paid for it. I think the man is capable of delivering a lecture that is worth money, and when he gives such a lecture out in the country he ought to be paid for it. I do not object to that at all, but as superintendent of schools of Washington, I think $7,500 is enough. Now, it is simply a question of what my colleagues want to do. I know I am going to vote not to give him any more than that amount. I will not fall out with you if you vote differently, because you have a right to vote as you please, but I do hope that you will not raise this salary higher than $7,500. It is just a continual drain on the people's Treasury, and we ought to stop it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN, Mr. MacLAFFERTY, and Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read in my time an amendment offered by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER] will be read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to be offered by Mr. STALKER: Page 7, line 18, after the word "reached," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Provided, That all officers included in Article II of this act shall start at the basic salary without credit for service prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will not be adopted. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER] is adopted, we will only pay our superintendent during the next year $8,000, with an increase up to $10,000 in the course of two years.

I want to read for the information of the committee the salaries paid in other cities that are comparable with Washington. New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Ohio, Detroit, Mich., pay $12,000 a year. Oakland, Calif., pays $11,000 a year. Jersey City, N. J., Boston, Buffalo, N. Y., Newark, N. J., Cincinnati, Omaha, Nebr., Youngstown, Ohio, St. Louis, Mo., Denver, Colo., pay $10,000. Toledo, Ohio, pays $9,750. Milwaukee, Wis., Akron, Ohio, Baltimore, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Minneapolis, Rochester, N. Y., Kansas City, Mo., Dayton, Ohio, pay $8,000. Seattle, Wash., Columbus, Ohio, Birmingham, Ala., Des Moines, Iowa, Portland, Oreg., Richmond, Va., pay $7,500. Dallas, Tex., pays $7,200. We feel that by modifying the bill in the manner prescribed in the amendment which is pending before the committee, and providing that the basic salary for the next year shall be $8,000, we are setting a fair rate of pay for the superintendent of the great school system in this city. Washington is entitled to the very best talent in the educational branch of government that you can possibly obtain. We can not get the highest type of men for a salary less than we are providing in this bill.

I am not going into the merits or demerits or qualifications of the present superintendent of schools, but I do contend that the people are entitled to the very best talent you can get, and for the very best we have got to pay a fair salary. The committee feels by this limitation that we are not paying any more than the position calls for, or more than the superintendent of schools is entitled to. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be voted down. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman ought not to do that; this section embraces all the salaries in the entire bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the First Assistant Postmaster General of the United States, with 160,000 people under his jurisdiction, to-day gets only $5,000 a year. When the classification act goes into effect he will get $7,500 a year. That is true of many men in the Government employ with equally important responsibilities. Seven thousand five hundred dollars will be the maximum paid to any man at the head of any bureau in the Government of the United States under the classification law. There is no reason to assume that the board of education, the superintendent of schools, is more than a bureau in the Government. Surely not, and if we are going to set aside the law that we have only so recently passed by making exceptions to it every time some man's salary is at stake, we may as well set the law aside now for good and all. The time has come when there ought to be some consideration given to the problems that affect the Treasury. You must remember that these problems not only affect the Treasury but the pocketbook of every man, woman, and child in America. [Applause.] You can not make appropriations without levying taxes. We have just gone through the motion here of reducing taxes, and you keep on with this extravagant waste of the public funds and you will commence to increase the taxes before very long, and then what will your friends at home say? For after all, they are the ones you must account to.

I have no criticism of the ability of the gentleman who occupies the exalted position of superintendent of schools, but I do not believe in good conscience we can afford to pay for this place more than $7,500 a year. We are charged with great responsibilities here and we must go to the people for election, we must, whether we will or not, pay more or less of what we get for campaign expenses, and yet we have no dearth of men who are willing to make the sacrifice. You come here from every section of the country, willing to give every pound of ability you possess in the interest of the Nation, and you are willing to do it because you want to be of service to your country. Now, let somebody be of service in other branches of the Government and let them make some sacrifice if sacrifice it be. I apprehend that no one will refuse to accept the superintendency of the schools of the District of Columbia at a salary of $7,500 a year. The gentleman who occupies the position is now getting $6,000, and he is only authorized by law to get $5,000. We are proposing to give him $7,500.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not true that there are men who would take the position for $4,000 or $5,000 a year?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; that goes without saying, but we can get the best minds that can be had for $7,500, and if the gentleman who occupies the exalted place refuses to take the job there will be 100 men to-morrow for the place. So let us vote down the committee proposal and place this salary, without further increase in the future, at $7,500 a year.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the argument thus far advanced on this proposition—for and against the proposed amendment—has been by comparison of salaries. In my judgment the matter of this amendment and the bill itself should be settled upon its merits, rather than by a comparison of salaries. I want the superintendent of the schools of the District of Columbia, the Nation's Capital, to be, if possible, just a little bit better than the superintendent of any of the public schools in any city of the United States. [Applause.] As one Member of this House I feel that we can not expect the best quality of service in our schools by underpayment either of the superintendent or of the teachers of the public schools of the Nation's Capital. The way to make our schools better is not only to pay our teachers better salaries, but to pay the officers and officials of our public schools, such as principals and superintendents, better salaries, and thereby offer an inducement for both them and our teachers to reach a higher state of qualification in education. Oh, yes; it is argued that a Member of Congress gets a salary of only $7,500 a year, and that is advanced as a reason why we should not pay the superintendent of the public schools of the Nation's Capital more than $7,500. I venture the assertion that a vast majority of the educators and teachers of this country belong to what we commonly term the poorer classes of people. Very few of them, indeed, have ever accumulated any great amount of wealth in the profession of teaching, I am sure. For that reason, if for no other, it is my judgment that we should place teachers of this country above financial worries. Where is the Member of Congress without independent means who would stand before me this afternoon and say it is not a constant problem in arithmetic to make the buckle and the thong meet in Washington on a Congressman's salary? Let us have it that the Nation's Capital points the way in education to the States of this Nation, and the only way we can do that is by paying adequate salaries, not only to the teachers but to the principals, the assistant principals, superintendent, and assistant superintendents. I earnestly hope that any amendment to reduce the salaries carried in this bill will be defeated.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do not the people who are paying the taxes find it a serious problem in arithmetic to make both ends meet?

Mr. ROACH. Yes; they do. I represent an agricultural district in the State of Missouri, but I venture the assertion that if there were any of the farmers there who signed the petition referred to by the gentleman from Texas, those farmers are progressive enough in their ideas to want to pay their teachers and the educators of our country, who have the youth and the future foundation of this Government at stake, an adequate compensation for that service, so as to attract them to the profession of teaching and keep them there. It is false economy to do otherwise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired and without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia yield for me to submit a unanimous consent request?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. That will close all debate on all of these salaries.

Mr. WATKINS. I would like to have the gentleman increase that three minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. I desire to offer an amendment to increase the salary to $10,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman mean the section or the paragraph?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer a substitute to that. I move as a substitute that all debate upon the paragraph close now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt as to whether that is a substitute.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I am willing to accept that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UPSHAW. But, Mr. Chairman, I have already been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to protect the gentleman from Georgia. He has been recognized, and he yielded.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I make it to close in five minutes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it has been the tragedy of America's educational life that the teaching proprofession has so long been made a stepping-stone to some position of higher financial value. Too long have we seen men and women accept teaching only until they could better their condition financially. It is a tremendous mistake, I think, to draw analogies, as has been done here this afternoon, between the salaries of governors and of superintendents and teachers. Most men who are elected to the office of governor, Representative, or Senator are men who have won prominence already either as lawyers or as business men, and, as has been brought out in this debate, most of them are well fixed financially with independent incomes, and therefore they can afford to work for the small salaries.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Pardon me, but I do not think I have the time.

Mr. KING. Is the gentleman quite correct in that last statement?

Mr. UPSHAW. Not always, but quite often. I think it is a tragedy to read that any State of this Union pays only three to four thousand dollars to a capable man as governor. I want to correct one statement of the gentleman from Texas, concerning my own State.

My own State of Georgia does not pay $5,000, but now pays $7,500 a year; and that golden-hearted man who is now Governor of Georgia, though a man of means, is worth every dollar, in his splendid devotion to duty. But that is not the thing. I am not responsible for what Chicago has done, nor what Milwaukee has done, nor Cincinnati, nor any other city. I did not vote the salaries of those men; but I am responsible for what this Congress will do in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UPSHAW. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Georgia has raised her governor's salary from $5,000 to $7,500, and I am proposing to raise this school superintendent's salary in the same amount, from $5,000 to $7,500, and the gentleman wants to make it $10,000.

Mr. UPSHAW. I am looking beyond the superintendent of schools in Washington. I have spoken to something like 4,000,000 boys and girls of America since I got out of bed, where I stayed for seven years, trying to put fire in their hearts and iron in the blood of these boys and girls of our country who are the to-morrow of this Republic. I want to look to the future of the superintendent of schools in Washington, the superintendent of schools in my home city, in the other cities, and inspire other cities to follow the leadership of the Nation's Capital and raise the salary of those educators who must be statesmen as well as educators. It is a tragedy that any assistant superintendent or teacher in a school, man or woman, should have to make the teaching profession a stepping-stone until a real job is offered in things political or commercial or perhaps an opportunity to get married that may come to the ladies who are teaching. Bless their hearts, I want them all to marry. I want them to do so while there is opportunity, but I do not want them to be forced to get married and undertake to support a sorry sort of husband, because their salary would not take care of them as teachers. I want to see the Nation's Capital stand as an inspiration to all the other cities of America, and I want to see it so that in giving this inspiration we have had far vision and a great heart for the twin builders of our civilization, for the teachers along with the preachers have long been too much underpaid. I would like to crown them from now until the judgment day. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion over the motion of the gentleman from Texas, which was a motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ZIHLMAN: On page 7, line 18, after the word "reached," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Provided, That all officers included in article 3 of this act shall start at the basic salary, without credit for services prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. BLANTON. That is not a perfecting motion nor a substitute.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is a perfecting amendment. The motion of the gentleman was to strike out.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no—

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Texas was to strike out the paragraph and insert certain words in lieu thereof. The motion of the gentleman from Maryland is to amend the text, and therefore perfects the text, and in the opinion of the Chair is preferential.

Mr. ASWELL. Can I offer a substitute for all of that?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a hypothetical question.

Mr. DYER. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ASWELL as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN]: Page 7, line 18, after the word "of," strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair that is a separate amendment and can not be offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted.

Mr. KETCHAM. I understand debate is exhausted, but I am simply asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am referring to the proposition advanced by the chairman of the committee, and I desire to call the attention of the Chair to page 10, line 9—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state we have not reached that.

Mr. KETCHAM. To the three lines which have a direct bearing upon the proposition we are now to vote upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state he does not see how it has any bearing, as it has not been read.

Mr. KETCHAM. I want to direct the attention of the Chair to this fact. This identical thought is incorporated in the suggestion offered by the chairman of the committee. I want to ask whether or not it is proper to strike out that when the same matter is offered further along in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That will be for the committee to decide.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STENGLE. If the Chair submits the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland first, and that offered by the gentleman from Texas last, how can a Member support each?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chairman presumes that gentlemen will have to use their best judgment in the matter of supporting an amendment on this proposition.

Mr. STENGLE. If the first of these amendments is adopted, will the second amendment then be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the amendment that the gentleman from Maryland proposed is adopted there will then be a vote on any other amendment seeking to amend the text.

Mr. STENGLE. That is what I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, to strike out the figures "$7,500" and insert "$8,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dyer to the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: In the last line of the amendment strike out the figures "$7,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the last amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that that is an amendment to the third degree and is no substitute. It merely changes the figure.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. Will I have the right to offer that amendment if this amendment is voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would think not, because the motion of the gentleman from Texas is—

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana is a preferential amendment to perfect the text if he wishes to offer it. While I am not in favor of it, by any sort of means, he can perfect the text by striking out $8,000 before it is stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut mean the text in the original bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I was telling the gentleman from Louisiana that he had the right to offer it as a preferential amendment to perfect the text.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I so offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana did not offer it so a moment ago, but he does so now.

Mr. ASWELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana as a preferential amendment to perfect the text of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASWELL: Page 7, in line 18, after the word "of," strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert "$12,000."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I make the point of order that there are no figures of "$10,000" in the bill.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. I would like very much to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes to explain this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASWELL. I make that request.

Mr. MADDEN. I must object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The debate is exhausted. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], which is a perfecting amendment to perfect the text. The Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ASWELL: Page 7, line 18, after the word "of," strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert the figures "$12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. How can that be a perfecting amendment? The amendment starts off at $8,000 and raises it a thousand dollars in two years, which would not put it at the figure mentioned, which is $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 61.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. ZIHLMAN and Mr. BLANTON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. What becomes of the limitations?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the limitations contained in the amendment of the gentleman do not appear in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes, they do. That comes at the end of it.

Mr. SNELL. The language was perfected, so that it goes out of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to offer that amendment, which was adopted in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer it as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment consisting of a new section. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STALKER: Page 7, after line 18, insert as a new paragraph as follows:

"The school officers, provided for in Article II of this act, shall receive compensation at the basic salary fixed herein, and shall not receive credit for services prior to this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, all debate is closed only on the last paragraph. The section is still open to amendment, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The section is still open to amendment, except the last paragraph.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 2, line 6, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$150," and in line 7, strike out "$2,200" and in lieu thereof insert "$2,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: On page 2, line 6, strike out the figures "$100" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$150," and in line 7, strike out the figures "$2,200" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,600."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will carry an increase of salary or service pay after this year for the teachers of Group A, the lower grade, and the teachers concerning whom so much eloquence has been—

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on this section is now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recall that debate was closed on the section.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan (continuing). The class of teachers in whose behalf Members have indulged in so much eloquence to-day, saying, and very properly, I believe, that the salaries of the teachers in the lower grades are not high enough; that they have received too little attention from those who prepared the bill, whereas those receiving the higher salaries have been nicely taken care of. Here is an opportunity to do something for a class of teachers who deserve and need help.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. On what page is the amendment offered?

Mr. SNELL. How did we get back to page 2?

The CHAIRMAN. Because it is all a part of the section.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield while I submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call attention to what our friend is proposing to do. The commissioners, the Board of Education, and the Bureau of the Budget approved a certain salary bill. It was a joint agreement between the three, between the Board of Education, the Commissioners of the District, and the Bureau of the Budget. That bill came here introduced by the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED], and was known as the Reed bill. But those of us who wanted to do a little more for the teachers approved of the Keller bill as a substitute for the Reed bill, and we gave these particular teachers a raise of $200 more than had been agreed upon by the Board of Education, the commissioners, and the Bureau of the Budget, and that provision was put in the Keller bill. Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] wants to give them another raise of $200.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Evidently the gentleman thinks this has all been fixed up and he names the different bodies which passed upon it, but I want to say that the more concerned and the higher up they are the worse it is.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the gentleman does not pay any attention to the Bureau of the Budget; it represents his President, though, and it represents the financial program of his President. The commissioners agreed with them, the Board of Education agreed with them, and yet after all that we came in and gave them $200 more in the committee, $200 more than had been agreed on. After we did that the Keller bill was sent to the commissioners for their approval; they submitted it to the Bureau of the Budget, and the Bureau of the Budget sent it back and said it was too much; that it was against the President's financial program and he disapproved of it, but we put it in just the same. We gave them $200 more than they had agreed to just the same, and now the gentleman from Michigan wants to give them $200 more.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I beg the gentleman's pardon. My amendment does not increase it at all; it only increases the amount to be added year by year as it goes along.

Mr. BLANTON. But the difficulty is they have already earned their longevity service; that is what they will get on July 1 under this bill, and that is the trouble.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Not under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BLANTON. But that amendment does not apply to the teachers; only to the officers.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It applies to all in this section.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it applies only to the officers; it does not apply to the teachers at all. All the teachers get their longevity allowance under this bill according to the years of service they have rendered, either in this school or in any other school, and they get it even if they have been in the service during the war. If they are men and served in France for three years, they are allowed three years of extra longevity under this bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield if the gentleman will not take up all of my time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is it not true—

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield any further.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan (continuing). That if Congress votes in accordance with the sentiments so often expressed here and makes this little increase, that the matter can be very well taken care of by an amendment, just as the other matter was taken care of by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not in favor of cheating the teachers out of their longevity allowance. I am in a different position than is the gentleman because I am in favor of their longevity allowance. But the trouble is that the committee has studied this bill and given careful consideration to it, and the gentleman does not know a thing in the world about it and is coming in here and offering an amendment on the floor that is going to do something, and the gentleman does not know exactly what it is going to do.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Will the gentleman yield? Was it not demonstrated just now that the committee did not know very much about the bill when the gentleman asked them a question and did not get any information?

Mr. BLANTON. They know a whole lot about it, but it is a little hard for them to tell it. The committee knows all about the bill and has studied it carefully.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Is it not a fact that this bill is 100 per cent satisfactory to the teachers in the various grades?

Mr. BLANTON. This bill suits the teachers exactly, and I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his amendment, because it does suit them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know very much about it, but I know the gentleman is not speaking the sentiments of the teachers of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the committee is speaking their sentiments. My colleague from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] has studied the matter and has worked for the teachers of the District, and so has the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], and I do not think that is a fair aspersion upon them. They have worked for the teachers, and this bill pleases the teachers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan) there were—ayes 29, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE IV.—METHOD OF ASSIGNMENT OF EMPLOYEES TO SALARIES.

SEC. 4. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, every teacher, school officer, or other employee in the service of the Board of Education on permanent tenure on June 30, 1924, shall receive the salary provided in the foregoing schedule for his class or position in accordance with the following rules:

(a) Teachers who are assigned to Group C of class 2 or Group A of class 3 and who on June 30, 1924, are receiving either the basic salary or the maximum salary of Group A of class 6 under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, shall receive a salary in Group C of class 2 or Group A of class 3 which is next above their present compensations, and in addition shall receive one annual increase in salary of $100 as provided in the foregoing schedule.

(b) Teachers who are assigned to Group C of class 2, or Group A of class 3, and who on June 30, 1924, are receiving salaries in Group A of class 6 under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, which are between the basic salaries and the maximum salaries of said Group A of class 6, shall receive a salary in Group C of class 2 or Group A of class 3 which is next above their present compensations and in addition shall receive two annual increases of salary of $100 each as provided in the foregoing schedule.

(c) All other teachers and school librarians assigned to Group A of the salary classes in the foregoing schedule shall receive the salary in the classes to which assigned which is next above their present compensations and in addition shall receive one annual increase of salary of $100 as provided in the foregoing schedule.

(d) All other teachers, school officers, and employees shall receive the salaries provided in the foregoing schedule for their respective classes or positions which are next above their present compensations: Provided, That under the provisions of this section the present compensation of any teacher, school officer, or other employee shall be construed to include basic salary, longevity allowance, session-room allowance, and increase of compensation (bonus): Provided further, That teachers and other employees assigned to classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the foregoing schedule shall be entitled to longevity placement as provided in section 6: Provided further, That the salaries assigned to teachers, school officers, and other employees in accordance with this section shall be in lieu of the compensation to which said teachers, school officers, and other employees may be entitled during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, as provided by the act of June 20, 1906, as amended: And provided further, That no teacher, school officer, or other employee shall in any event receive less during the year ending June 30, 1925, than his total compensation as of June 30, 1924.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to get a little information, Mr. Chairman. I had intended offering an amendment, but the Clerk was reading so fast I could not understand him, and we got by the paragraph. On page 7, line 21, the second paragraph reads as follows:

That the Board of Education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to classify and assign all teachers."

Did the committee intend to make it mandatory on the Board of Education to classify the teachers, as recommended by the superintendent of schools, and follow no other course and make no personal investigation?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The committee wished to make it mandatory that all teachers should be assigned and classified as provided in this salary schedule; yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Under this section, if the Chairman will permit me, the school board can only classify as recommended by the superintendent of schools. I had intended to call your attention to that and offer an amendment cutting out "on recommendation of the superintendent of schools," and provide that this should be done under such rules and regulations as the Board of Education might provide. I call your attention to this matter for this particular purpose. From personal experience and observation, the superintendent of schools may get it in for a certain number of teachers or a certain class of teachers and the superintendent will recommend to the school board that they be demoted, or, if he likes them, that they be promoted, if he wants to play favorites. Under this section, as I read it—and some of my colleagues have agreed with me—the school board is helpless. If they should make a private investigation and should find out the facts were to the contrary, the board would still have to classify them as reported by the superintendent of schools, and I do not believe the committee intended any such arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call attention to the fact that we have passed by the section which the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is true, and I called the Chairman's attention to that fact. I am sorry it took the Chair several minutes to discover it.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I said I was endeavoring to offer an amendment but the clerk passed it so rapidly I did not do so, and I was returning to the section in order to ask a question.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Florida that the committee considered the matter of giving rather broad powers to the superintendent under this bill, and the gentleman's colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE], who is an experienced educator, stated he believed the best results would be obtained by lodging this power in the hands of the superintendent, and stated that where it was lodged in the Board of Education there was chaos and more discontent than if there was such broad power vested in the man who is responsible for the administration and the success of the school system.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I am sorry I disagree with my friends, and I think they will find out that the other plan would work better.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to know what the legal definition of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 is and where they are to be found in the law; and what the legal definition of Groups A, B, and C is and where they are to be found in the law, and what these classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 and Groups A, B, and C mean; how they are to be organized, who is to define them and what law there is in this bill or anywhere else to warrant any such designations.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state to the gentleman from California that I was not present at the hearings, but it is my understanding that all grades of teachers are fixed in the act of 1906, which provides that teachers who teach a certain length of time shall be promoted from one grade to another, and it is my understanding that it is the school act of 1906 which is the basic law which this follows.

Mr. CURRY. There is no such thing as Groups A, B, and C nor classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the basic law.

Mr. KELLER. The groups are created in the new bill.

Mr. CURRY. What does it mean?

Mr. KELLER. It corresponds with the old grades.

Mr. CURRY. You permit the superintendent of schools of Washington, who is a pretty good politician and lobbyist but not an educator, under this bill to reward his friends and punish his enemies. Through his orders every Member of the House is card indexed in his office, and every school-teacher has been instructed to ascertain and report as to the prospective vote of every Member with whom he or she is acquainted, and will be held responsible for the accuracy of the report which has been card indexed in the office of the superintendent under the name of the Member and of the teacher. There is nothing in the bill that states that transfer and promotion shall be for length of service and successful teaching; it takes good care of the high-school teachers, the superintendent, and his assistants, but it does not of the common schools. Now, 80 per cent of all the children in the United States attend the common schools and do not enter the high schools. Only about 20 per cent enter high schools; about 5 per cent graduate from the high schools.

The committee ought to amend the bill and not leave the arbitrary power of promoting, demoting, and transferring teachers in the hands of the superintendent. The committee should define what Groups A, B, and C mean and what classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 mean. I believe in giving the teachers more salary than they have at the present time. I think we ought to do something for the schools in this city, but I do not think that we ought in this bill to make the superintendent of schools, who is not an educator, a czar and absolutely the controlling power over the teachers, without any appeal from his judgment, and give him an opportunity to exercise his likes and dislikes unchecked on the teachers.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to page 9 of the bill, where it refers to the Groups A, B, and C, and refers to the act of 1906.

Mr. CURRY. I know; but what does it mean?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to ask the gentleman a question on the point raised by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS]. Page 7, line 22, it says "the Board of Education is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to classify and assign all teachers," and so forth. That gives to the superintendent of schools the power to say how they shall be classified.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It gives him the power to recommend to the board of education.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Ought not the language to be "in consultation with the superintendent of schools," and not say "on his recommendation"? They are authorized to classify on his recommendation. They could not do a thing except on his recommendation. "In consultation" would carry out the intent if that is the intent of the committee.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that we intended to lodge this power in the hands of the superintendent of schools.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why, then, did you mention the Board of Education if you intended to give the superintendent of schools the power. This language turns over to this man the arbitrary power to do as he pleases.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. We assumed that he would work with the Board of Education.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Board of Education is a mere figurehead. They can indicate where the teacher shall go, but the superintendent will say where they shall go. That is the only interpretation that can be put on this language. It should read "in consultation with" him. This language lodges in one man, without any supervisory power, the authority to do as he pleases with all the teachers, and in my judgment that is absolutely wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk calls the Chair's attention to the fact that on page 7, line 26, the word "office" is misspelled, and in line 4, page 10, the word "foregoing" is spelled incorrectly. Without objection, the Clerk will make the corrections.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 7, line 22, for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out the words "on recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof "in consultation with."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to page 7, line 22, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 22, after the word "directed," strike out the words "on recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in consultation with."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to this portion of the bill for the purpose of offering the amendment?

Mr. KELLER. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will let this go he will save a motion to recommit. The gentleman does not want to make a czar of this man. I shall make the motion to recommit and put this language in.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That teachers, school officers, and other employees in the service of the Board of Education on July 1, 1924, shall be placed in the salary classes and positions of the foregoing schedule as follows:

(a) From kindergarten assistants, class 1; kindergarten principals, class 3; model teachers of kindergartens, class 4; teachers of first and second grades, class 2; teachers of third and fourth grades, class 3; teachers of fifth, sixth, and seventh grades, class 4; teachers of eighth grades, class 5; model teachers of first and second grades, class 4; teachers of manual training, drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, and domestic art in the graded schools, classes 3 and 4; assistants to the directors of primary instruction, classes 4 and 5; vocational trade instructors, class 5; and teachers of Americanization work, class 5, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 1, Group A, of the foregoing schedule.

(b) From head teachers and teachers of normal, high, and manual-training high schools, class 6, Group A; and teachers of manual training, drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, and domestic art in the normal, high, and manual-training high schools, class 6, Group A, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 3, Group A, of the foregoing schedule, except as herein otherwise provided.

(c) From teachers of normal, high, and manual-training high schools, promoted for superior work, class 6, Group B, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 3, Group B, of the foregoing schedule.

(d) From teachers in junior high schools, possessing the eligibility requirements of teachers of elementary schools, classes 3, 4, and 5, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 3, Group A, of the foregoing schedule.

(e) From teachers in junior high schools possessing the eligibility requirements of teachers of senior high schools, class 6, Group A, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 2, Group C, of the foregoing schedule.

(f) From librarians, class 5, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 4, Group A, of the foregoing schedule.

(g) From teaching principals with from four to seven rooms, classes 2, 3, 4, and 5, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 5 of the foregoing schedule.

(h) From teaching principals with from 8 to 15 rooms, classes 2, 3, 4, and 5, under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 6 of the foregoing schedule.

(i) From administrative principals with 16 or more rooms, class 5; principals of grade manual-training schools, class 6, Group A; and principal of Americanization work under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 7 of the foregoing schedule.

(j) From principals of junior high schools under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 8 of the foregoing schedule.

(k) From principals of senior high and normal schools under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 9 of the foregoing schedule.

(l) From directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and primary instruction; assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and primary instruction; and assistant supervisor of manual training under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 10 of the foregoing schedule.

(m) From director of intermediate instruction and supervisor of manual training under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 10 of the foregoing schedule, subject to the provisions of section 2 of this act.

(n) From director of penmanship and assistant director of penmanship under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 3, Group B, of the foregoing schedule, as provided in section 2 of this act.

(o) From heads of departments in high and manual-training high schools, class 6, Group B; assistant principals; and assistant principals (deans of girls) under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 11 of the foregoing schedule.

(p) From supervising principals under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 12 of the foregoing schedule.

(q) From teachers not otherwise provided for, classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 under the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, to class 1, Group A, class 2, Group A or Group C, or class 3, Group A, of the foregoing schedule in accordance with the eligibility qualifications possessed and the character of duties to be performed by such teachers: Provided, That all teachers, school officers, and other employees in the service of the Board of Education on July 1, 1924, not specifically mentioned in the provisions of this section shall be placed in the salary classes and positions in the foregoing schedule in accordance with the eligibility qualifications possessed and the character of duties to be performed by such teachers, school officers, and other employees: Provided further, That all teachers, school officers, or other employees hereafter appointed, shall be placed in the salary classes and positions in the foregoing schedule by the said board, and all teachers and other employees assigned to classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the foregoing schedule in the service of the said board on July 1, 1924, or thereafter appointed shall receive their longevity increase according to their previous number of years of experience in teaching in like positions in accredited schools to those which they hold on July 1, 1924, or to which they may thereafter be appointed: Provided further, That in crediting experience in teaching of any person who has been absent from his duties as a teacher because of military service the said board is hereby authorized to include naval, military, or other service with the armed forces of the United States Government or its allies as the equivalent of teaching experience: And provided further, That no teacher or other employee shall be placed in the salary schedule for more than the fourth year of experience in classes 1, 2, Group A, or 4, or more than the fifth year of experience in class 2, Group C, or class 3.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I take this opportunity to say a few words regarding the work done in the District of Columbia relative to the Americanization work and those in charge of it. I have had the opportunity of viewing the work and seeing the character of people in charge, as well as the result of the work being accomplished. There are classes of grown men and women who are being instructed in American history, American law, American institutions, and the work justifies the money expended and is a credit to the schools of the District of Columbia, especially to the principals and the teachers who are conducting the schools.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The pupils take to it very willingly?

Mr. RAKER. They not only take to it willingly but they show a keen interest in the work. It is a demonstration of what can be done and what ought to be done to make those who are not familiar with our language and institutions familiar with them and give them an opportunity to understand our form of Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman speaks of their study of American history. Does he know what history is being used in the school, whether it is Muzzy's?

Mr. RAKER. The history that is used in the schools is taught from the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of the Supreme Court, the laws of Congress, the laws and constitutions of the various States, so that when these men leave the schools they are familiar to some extent with our form of government. I think that we could not expend the money to better purpose than to give these people who come here, many of them of age before they land, an opportunity to understand our institutions, so that the 1,400 foreign-language newspapers now printed in America, including the 37 daily foreign-language papers printed in New York City alone, may be eliminated and so that these men who come here to live will make this country their country, willing to give their all for it.

They ought to be able to understand the English language and American institutions and have an opportunity to receive the benefits of the country. The alien that is coming to this country is not having the proper opportunity and sympathy that he ought to have. Let us give those who are here an opportunity to get acquainted with our institutions and form of government and prevent any more coming until those who are now here are assimilated. He is being imposed upon by those who understand a little English and who understand his language. The work that this school is doing and the work that is being conducted in the schools of this District and elsewhere in Americanization is something that ought to be encouraged and extended. Every man in America ought to understand the English language and to understand our form and character of government, so that he can intelligently vote at all elections.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 2, after the figure "3," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That nothing in this or any other section of this bill will authorize service rendered prior to July 1, 1924, to be credited to any employees other than teachers, and all accredited service shall be confined to service rendered in and to the schools of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. There shall be two first assistant superintendents of schools, one white first assistant superintendent for the white schools who, under the direction of the superintendent of schools, shall have general supervision over the white schools; and one colored first assistant superintendent for the colored schools who, under the direction of the superintendent of schools, shall have sole charge of all employees, classes, and schools in which colored children are taught. The first assistant superintendents shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the superintendent of schools.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to call attention to one important matter. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is a very important one, and it should be agreed to. I am surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota refuses to accept it, and refuses to permit him to return to the section, because he is going to force a motion to recommit, and possibly a roll call, when by permitting us to put this in it would save all of that trouble. I want to read the paragraph as it would read after being amended, for the benefit of the gentleman from Minnesota. It is on page 7, section 2, and it would read as follows:

That the Board of Education is hereby authorized and empowered, in consultation with the superintendent of schools—

And so forth.

If the gentleman would permit that, it would authorize the Board of Education to do this, in consultation with the superintendent of schools.

If you do not accept the amendment, you make a czar out of the superintendent of schools. He can do just as he pleases without any consultation whatever with the Board of Education. In other words, he makes the Board of Education do just what he tells them to do without giving them any discretion whatever. You force the Board of Education to take the recommendation of the superintendent of schools without giving them any say so whatever in the matter. I do not think you ought to do that. We are going to ask for a vote on that if we have to do it under a motion to recommit.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that this language is in the law of almost every city school board in the country?

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished authority on New York schools [Mr. LaGUARDIA] says it does not work out very well in New York. I do not care whether it is in other school laws or not. I do not think any man ought to be a czar. I think the Board of Education ought to pass upon the recommendation made by the superintendent. That is what the Board of Education is for. If you make his recommendation supreme, without giving the board the right to pass upon it, you fix it so that the Board of Education is absolutely helpless and the teachers are helpless. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph so as to offer this amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Chair desires to call attention to the word "principals," in line 2, page 17.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to make the correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to change so as to make the spelling accord with the text. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman if he was responsible for the former objection?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, no; I will say it was agreeable to me.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Was objection lodged by a member of the gentleman's committee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Then I object.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I ask that the amendment be put.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana—

Mr. STEVENSON. We have passed the paragraph.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the objection. Without objection, the correction will be made as requested by the gentleman from Maryland.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That boards of examiners for carrying out the provisions of the statutes with reference to examinations of teachers shall consist of the superintendent of schools and not less than four nor more than six members of the supervisory or teaching staff of the white schools for the white schools, and of the superintendent of schools and not less than four nor more than six members of the supervisory or teaching staff of the colored schools for the colored schools. The designations of members of the supervisory or teaching staff for membership on these boards shall be made annually by the Board of Education on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask, on page 18, line 21, that the words "on the recommendation of" be stricken out and the words "in consultation with" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: On page 18, line 21, strike out the words "on the recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in consultation with."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WATKINS) there were—ayes 30, yeas 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to conduct as a part of the public school system a community center department, a department of school attendance and work permits, night schools, vacation schools, Americanization schools, and other activities, under and within appropriations made by Congress, and on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools to fix and prescribe the salaries, other than those herein specified, to be paid to the employees of the said activities.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in line 16, page 20, I move to strike out the words "on the recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in consultation with."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Page 20, line 16, strike out the words "on the recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in consultation with."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, only a word in this connection. The original amendment that I offered, in line 22, on page 7, was similar to the one I have now offered. The chairman of the committee [Mr. ZIHLMAN], the gentleman from Maryland, accepted it. It was objected to by another member of the committee, and it was objected to because the intent and the purpose as has been announced is to give authority to the superintendent to name these people, and over in this section, page 20, to fix and prescribe the salaries. The Board of Education is to do certain things—that is, by recommendation—not in consultation with him, but they can not do a thing until he recommends it. What can they do but what he recommends? It is admitted that that is the intention. I submit, and with all due respect to the committee, that that is too arbitrary a power to give to one man. What is the use of having a Board of Education since they are just to be amanuenses to write down what the superintendent says he wants to do? I do not think the superintendent ought to fix the salary.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Take as an example section 15. That section provides—

That the Board of Education, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, is hereby authorized—

To do a certain thing.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. As the bill reads, he acts as an independent body and submits it to the Board of Education. The Board of Education can do as it pleases; but under your amendment you put the superintendent of schools in as a member of the board, and if he is a strong, hard-headed man, in consultation he will run the board and do exactly what you do not want him to do.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In New York City we have a similar provision, and if a recommendation of the board of superintendents is not accepted by the board of education, all they can do is to send it back and the others must wait until the superintendents certify to something else.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from California should listen to this very forceful statement made by the gentleman from New York. They have an analogous situation in New York, he says, by which they have a board of superintendents, and the board of superintendents makes the recommendation, and the council accepts or rejects what the board says, but it can do nothing itself. It has to come back to the board, so that it will be exactly what will happen here. This superintendent will make the recommendation, as they do in New York City, and it will go to the board, and if the board rejects it, then it will have to go back to the superintendent. Everything will be done by him. The board is a mere figurehead. That is the actual practice in New York City.

Mr. RAKER. The fifteenth section provides that—

The Board of Education, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, is hereby authorized to appoint annual substitute teachers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The trouble with the gentleman is that he did not read half the language. It says "authorized and directed."

Mr. RAKER. It does not say anything of the kind here.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The copy I have says so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That the rates of salary herein designated shall become effective on the 1st day of July, 1924, and that the estimates of the expenditures for the operation of the public school system of the District of Columbia shall hereafter be prepared in conformity with the classification and compensation of educational employees herein provided: Provided, That the amounts specifically appropriated in the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, for salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees whose salaries are fixed in the foregoing schedule, when not in conformity with the rates established by this act, are hereby reduced and increased to pay the said employees in accordance with the rates herein established during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for said purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, no teacher, school officer, or other employee of the Board of Education whose salary is included in the foregoing schedule shall receive any increase in compensation other than as provided in this act.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN: Page 21, strike out all after the first "Provided" in line 1 down to and including the word "further" in line 9.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the benefit of the committee that this amendment is offered at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who states that the increases carried in this bill should be provided for in the deficiency bill and not in the manner provided for in this section.

Mr. MADDEN. If the language of the bill which is sought to be stricken out is allowed to remain, it will mix up the appropriation in such a way that chaos will result, whereas if it is stricken out, an estimate can be made of the excessive amount of money required to meet the new obligations, and it can be provided in addition to the regular salary without the new system being interjected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHANDLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6721) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the three committee amendments, involving lines 11, 12, and 13 on page 7, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take that up later. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the amendment to section 17 of the bill. I do not know the name of the gentleman who offered it.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments en gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks unanimous consent that the three amendments to which he refers be considered en bloc. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 11, strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000"; line 12, strike out "$100" and insert "$200"; and in line 13, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 86, noes 36.

So the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendment, on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Maryland, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 16, amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Strike out the words "on the recommendation of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in consultation with."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KELLER) there were—ayes 73, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am a member of the committee, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. But is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. It all depends upon whether or not the amendment is adopted.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise to move to recommit?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed to the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

"On page 7, line 22, before the word 'authorized,' insert the word 'and' and strike out the balance of the line and add 'in consultation with the'; and in line 24, after the word 'assign,' insert 'in accordance with the provisions of this bill,' so that as amended the paragraph will read:

"Sec. 2. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized and empowered, in consultation with the superintendent of schools, to classify and assign, in accordance with the provisions of this bill, all teachers, school officers, and other employees to the salary classes and positions in the foregoing salary schedule."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that is practically the same as the Cooper amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. TILSON. I suggest to the gentleman that he should change his amendment and insert the word "act" instead of "bill."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "act" instead of the word "bill."

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion for the previous question, the gentleman can not amend it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it for that purpose, if it does not prejudice my rights.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Texas is amended in the manner indicated.

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 66, noes 63.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the announcement.

The SPEAKER. The ayes were 66, and the noes were 63, and therefore the motion to recommit is agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms is directed to bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 101, noes 162, not voting 169, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.
The question was taken, and the bill was passed.
On motion by Mr. ZIEGLER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. SEARS of Florida, Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan, Mr. ZIEGLER, and Mr. KENT were given leave to revise and extend their remarks made to-day.

PROHIBITION.

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on a bill that I recently introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record I include the following:

A COMMUNICATION TO A NUMBER OF HIS CONSTITUENTS BY MR. WOLFF, OF MISSOURI, DEALING WITH THE PROHIBITION QUESTION

DEAR FRIEND: In answer to certain communications which I have received, I beg to state in the first place that I was glad to receive these candid expressions relative to the Volstead Act. I admire anyone who has the courage to express his honest opinion and who believes what he teaches and who lives in accordance with that which he preaches. I may differ from my friend on a given subject, but that is no proof that he is a scoundrel or that I am a rascal because we do not agree on everything. My father was a Presbyterian minister and an ardent prohibitionist. My dear old mother talked abstinence to me from the time I could understand until her death, a number of years since.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.
The following pairs were announced:

I desire to apologize for the length of this communication, but trust that you will be kind enough to read it carefully and thoughtfully.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited."

It does not state what amount of alcohol is necessary in a beverage to make it intoxicating. The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that Congress has the right, therefore, to specify the legal alcoholic content of a beverage or how much alcohol it may contain before it becomes intoxicating. The Anti-Saloon League admits that Congress, under the Constitution and the decision of the Supreme Court, has authority to pass a law legalizing 2.75 per cent beer and that such a law would be constitutional. Congress heretofore, acting under such presumed authority, fixed one-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content of beverages as an experiment.

The eighteenth amendment is truly a part of our Constitution. Everyone knows this, and all good citizens should in every way defend and uphold the provisions of that great document. The Volstead Act is the enforcement act which tells us the amount of whisky which our physicians may prescribe, how much alcohol may be used in certain medicines, extracts, beverages, etc., and provides punishment for violation thereof. It is not a part of our Constitution, as many apparently believe. It is a very drastic law enacted by Congress which it was supposed, would, when enacted, immediately do away with strong alcoholic beverages and that our citizens, if not voluntarily, would in fear of its drastic penalties promptly comply with the provisions of the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution. But, my friends, have they done this? I agree with you that they should do so. But a day or so since I voted for an appropriation of an additional $14,000,000 to our Coast Guard, making nearly $25,000,000, to equip small boats with arms and men to further aid in attempting to prevent the smuggling of whisky into the United States. I shall help to enforce this law in every way possible, and I will say here that when I took my oath of office I made up my mind to abide by that Constitution and live in conformity with the oath I had taken. I do not advocate one thing and practice another. However, I am fully aware that anyone who wants whisky here in Washington and is willing to take the "chance" can get it at very reasonable prices—some real old-time stuff as well as other brands and grades.

Recently a member of the police department here informed me that the jail was overcrowded on all days and that they had three or four "drunks" in every cell on the previous Saturday night. It is not uncommon to see men drink more or less publicly and to see, as I have personally seen on a recent Sunday afternoon, several dozen "drunks" on Pennsylvania Avenue. The Washington Herald, March, 17, carried a headline as follows, "United States Capital 300 per cent more drunken than Paris, 2,000 per cent more more murderous than London," and gave the following statistics concerning other crimes:

"Since 1910 the population increase has been 32.17 per cent; murder has increased 291 per cent; manslaughter has increased 250 per cent; robbery has increased 103 per cent; grand larceny has increased 157 per cent; soliciting has increased 2,350 per cent; disorderly houses have increased 1,388 per cent."

These conditions exist in the Capital City of our Nation, but conditions are no worse here than in other large cities.

I am just informed by the Toledo Advertising Club, Toledo, Ohio, that within the month the Ohio State Board of Clemency has addressed a letter officially to every common pleas judge in the State requesting that the sentences of all first offenders be suspended, for the reason that there is no room left in the penal institutions of Ohio to accommodate them. It is stated that on two recent occasions the sheriff of Lucas County has been obliged to release prisoners convicted of violating the Volstead or Crabbe (Ohio) Act in order to make room for more dangerous characters. The association concludes by saying that it is believed that the adoption of the proposed change will solve many of the ills afflicting our people at the present time and encourage at least some measure of respect for the eighteenth amendment, now almost entirely lacking.

Space will not permit similar detailed recitals as to conditions in each State. However, in our own State you are, of course, familiar with the Shoup and Prather affairs.

The Washington Herald, March 28, contains the following article:

"In France alcoholism and drunkenness have been cut down 50 per cent in 10 years without prohibition. Eight wines and beer are not even considered alcoholic drinks there. But absinthe has been abolished entirely. Very heavy taxes are put on brandy and other alcoholic poisons and their prices are prohibitive. France is, by one-half, more temperate than in 1914."

What would have been the result if our Government had forbidden whisky, gin, etc., absolutely, or taxed these poisons $10 per bottle while permitting unrestricted sale of 2.75 per cent beer? Too late to ask that question now.

All over the United States young boys, who previously were not permitted in saloons, are to-day patronizing bootleggers and drinking the rottenest kinds of moonshine poisons. Young girls who previously never tasted or came directly in contact with pure liquor even are to-day drinking by the thousands, and they are now confronted with the double hazard of the deadly poisonous hip-pocket flask in the lonely, unchaperoned, converted "automobile barroom." This is certainly a matter which should receive the thoughtful consideration of all fathers and mothers. A little mild beer in the home, where desired, would not constitute such an alarming menace as the above true-to-life picture, it occurs to me.

Thousands of our best citizens are making home-brews and wines, every one of them violating the present provisions of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, as these concoctions all contain from 4 to 16 per cent alcoholic content. High Government officials, including Cabinet officers, have violated the Volstead Act. Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General, and Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, have been implicated in this connection, and Mr. Daugherty has recently resigned his position because of these and other charges. Prohibition enforcement agents and political appointees have sold out and committed other crimes under the Volstead Act. Anti-saloon officials have violated the law, as well as betrayed the confidence of their people, as in the cases of Anderson, of New York; Shoup, of Missouri; and others. Maj. James F. Johnson, a high official in the central prohibition enforcement office, has just recently been exposed. God knows that as administered to date there is no such thing as actual prohibition as advocated. The periodical announcements of Commissioner Haynes as to the amount of illicit liquors and concoctions confiscated throughout the country and the number of arrests which have been made for violations of the Volstead Act throughout the United States—no State being materially better or worse than another in either respect—are conclusive as to the wholesale violations of this act.

Under date of December 21, 1923, Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair said:

"There were 187 bonded warehouses robbed from January 10, 1920, to June 30, 1923. In these robberies 134,485 gallons of spirits were stolen."

These figures evidently do not include inside robberies, such as that of the Jack Daniels Distillery, of St. Louis, from which 892 barrels of whisky were stolen last August. At the bootleg price of $60 a gallon, the whisky extracted from the St. Louis warehouse was worth $2,676,000, and that stolen from the Government warehouses $8,063,100.

In Washington alone Mr. Haynes, according to his own statement, has seized approximately 15,000 gallons of whisky. He does not state how many gallons of other concoctions were confiscated, and there is no way to estimate accurately the amount of such liquors which escaped confiscation.

Recently before the Senate investigating committee witnesses testified that prohibition officials had sold stills to moonshiners and were protecting them. Witnesses before the Federal grand jury recently stated that Prohibition Agents Thomas Wheeler and George King have received for protection of whisky manufacturers over $20,000 since last December. It is charged that men with whom Andrew W. Mellon is associated have made many thousands of dollars since the enactment of this law by illegally releasing and issuing whisky permits. It is also charged that Andrew W. Mellon and family own practically all the stock of the Overholt Distillery, one of the largest whisky manufacturers in the United States, and that they are also interested in several breweries.

Richard B. Enright, head of the New York police department, gave out a statement but a day or so since—and this man does not guess; he knows what he is talking about. He said:

"The discouraging feature of the prohibition law is that those that used intoxicating liquor moderately, or used only beer and light wine before prohibition, now drink large quantities of hard liquor of very bad quality. It is far from reassuring."

Some persons may still be more or less reluctant to accept these statements on account of the startling revelation and because they do not personally know of such specific local instances of crimes mentioned. I know that violations are not so general in my district under this law as in the large congested centers of population. That is also true with reference to other statutes. But certainly no one will urge these considerations as proof that such conditions do not exist elsewhere. The incontrovertible evidence on which a conviction is obtained in any court is always appalling, and more so when least expected. It has been charged that some of the persons who are receiving large salaries in connection with the organizations opposed to any kind of alcoholic beverages are unwilling to have all the actual facts made known to the public for fear that efforts will immediately be made to correct the situation and thereby kill the goose that is laying the golden egg for them. I make no such charge as this, though it may be true in some few cases. Would you personally favor an investigation which would give to the public all the facts to date in connection with the attempted enforcement of this law?

Personally I am not a radical wet; neither am I a radical prohibitionist. Mr. Volstead testified before the committee during the hearings on his bill that 2.75 per cent beer was not intoxicating. Therefore an effort to legalize 2.75 per cent beer under the eighteenth amendment can not properly be construed as a thrust at the main structure. With thousands of our citizens beer is and was a beverage, as is coffee and tea with others. The Supreme Court in the case of Ruppert v. Coffey held that 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating. But, as many contend who have "ed it, one-half of 1 per cent beer is a tasteless product whereas 2.75 per cent beer contains enough alcohol to make it a palatable beverage and properly preserve it, and it is also nonintoxicating. Why, my friend, 20 per cent of the patent medicines on the market contain from 10 to 25 per cent alcohol as a preservative. Take down the bottles from the shelves of any drug store and examine them yourself; the alcoholic content is marked on the labels. Much of the home-brew manufactured in the homes of our best citizens has from 5 to 6 per cent alcoholic content and is therefore violative of the provisions of the Constitution and the Volstead Act.

Beer is beer whether it has one-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content as legally sold over the bars to-day or whether it has 2.75 per cent alcoholic content as advocated in the 83 bills introduced in Congress this session. These bills do not mention wine at all—beer alone. Your Representative has, with others, advocated a mild beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content to be sold in original packages for home use only, and these bills absolutely prohibit the sale of this beer in bar-rooms or saloons. I am advocating this change because I feel that it will do away with the sale of moonshine whisky, wines, and other poisons. It will remove from the minds of some adults the idea that we are trying to legislate morals into them and there will be no feeling of resentment on their part as is apparent at present. This change will from every viewpoint aid in the enforcement of the Volstead Act as no one will take a "chance" on the stronger poisonous concoctions if he can get wholesome beer of this kind.

I do not advocate this change as a revenue measure, the argument of the antiprohibitionists, but some revenue can be derived from this source which would tend to lower taxes. I do not advocate it for any personal reason or desire. If I wanted to use intoxicating liquor I could obtain all I want. All that is necessary is the price. As an American citizen who has carried a gun and faced an enemy of my country, whose father and grandfather before him had the same privilege, I feel it is my duty now as a legislator to protect and defend that Constitution just as much as then, but I do believe that we can best do so in this instance by regarding this particular problem as real rather than theoretical; get all the facts and then apply any remedy which may promise the desired relief. I shall not knowingly vote for any proposition that violates the provisions of the Constitution. I shall continue to stand for my people and shall endeavor to honestly represent them, still bearing in mind that there are 18 other amendments to the Constitution. I am for the enforcement of the law and shall vote for any measure that will help to accomplish this. To my mind, expressing my own humble opinion, what we need to-day is more broad minds, more of the real old-time honesty, and men in Government positions who have the courage of their convictions and who will abide by the commandments as written—

"Thou shalt not lie.

"Thou shalt not steal."

and men who will shape their actions to conform to that rule, which is as follows:

"Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

I honestly and truly feel that my proposal, if adopted, would materially aid in making safe, sane, and effective the actual enforcement of real prohibition, and this has not been approached to date. If my proposal does not have this effect, then I would be willing later to consider with you other means as a possible remedy. Do you consider this a fair proposal?

I desire also to call your attention to the fact that Woodrow Wilson, to my mind the greatest of all Presidents, vetoed this same Volstead law, which I am in an honorable way attempting to amend. I hardly believe that any constituent of mine will question the statesmanship of that world character, or insinuate that he was un-American because of this fact.

This letter is being mailed to several thousand people in my district, substantially an equal number in each county. A long reply is not necessary—simply answer the following questions and sign your name. Your name will not be disclosed and your answers will be regarded as confidential by me.

1. Considering all the facts herein presented, if true, would you favor a change in the Volstead law?

2. Would you favor legalizing 2.75 per cent beer if it were possible to positively guarantee that such action would improve present conditions?

3. After having read this entire statement, if you are still opposed to consideration of my proposal as a possible remedy for present evils, please state what remedy you desire to urge?

4. (Answer this question if you care to do so.) Have you in the past two years made home-brew, homemade wine, or cider, or have you taken a drink of moonshine liquor, wine, home-brew of any kind, or hard cider? (a) If you have, do you realize that this constitutes a violation of the Volstead law as written at present?

5. Are you 21 years of age or over?

May I hear from you?

Respectfully yours,

SCOTT WOLFE.

P. S.: Every statement as to every material fact herein contained is based on records and can be so verified if desired by you.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Federal Trade Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the independent offices appropriation bill (H. R. 8233), now before the House in Committee of the Whole, proposes to lop off the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission about $200,000. It is proposed to effect this by the following limitation:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for investigations directed by the President or either House of Congress, except those authorized by law: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to investigations in progress on April 1, 1924.

Although called a "limitation" it is my opinion that this language is, in effect, a repeal of a substantial part of the law and is legislation of the most obnoxious character. It takes from the duly constituted committee of the House, having jurisdiction of the matter, its lawful and reasonable right to weigh and consider the significance of the proposed change and attempts to hurry the House into a substantial change of the law upon the pretext of economy.

The act creating the commission was passed September 26, 1914. Its five members (not more than three of whom may be of one political party) are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The act was amended by the Clayton Act of October 15, 1914; the trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, and the Webb-Pomerene law of April 10, 1918.

The law, as it stands, provides that investigations shall be made by the commission upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress and reports made on facts disclosed pertaining to any alleged violations of the antitrust laws.

The proposed change would strip the President, the Senate, and the House of the right to initiate such investigations, and in so far as it does that it practically repeals the law or laws under which the commission acts.

As to whether or not the commission has justified its existence, or, as to whether or not the right to initiate such investigations has been abused by the President, the Senate, or the House, I beg to submit the following summary of the commission's activities since its creation.

From the summary it will be noted:

- (a) The President initiated six investigations.
 - (b) The Senate initiated 23 investigations.
 - (c) The House initiated seven investigations.
- Total investigations, 36.

And no one can pretend that they were not of the greatest importance.

Here is the list in detail:

MEMORANDUM OF INQUIRIES MADE BY THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AT THE ORDER OF THE CONGRESS, THE PRESIDENT, AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, UP TO MARCH 28, 1924.

PETROLEUM.

(S. Res. 457, 68d Cong., 2d sess.)

Acting under this resolution, the commission published a report on gasoline prices in 1915, which discussed the high prices of petroleum products and showed how the various Standard Oil Companies had continued to maintain a division of marketing territory among themselves. The commission suggested several plans for restoring effective competition in the oil industry.

SISAL HEMP.

(S. Res. 170, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)

This resolution called on the commission to assist the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by advising how certain quantities of hemp, promised by the Mexican Sisal Trust, might be fairly distributed among American manufacturers of binder twine.

ANTHRACITE.

(S. Res. 217, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)

The rapid advance in the prices of anthracite at the mines, compared with costs, and the extortionate overcharging of anthracite jobbers and dealers were disclosed in this inquiry, and a system of current reports called for regarding selling prices which substantially checked further exploitation of the consumer.

BITUMINOUS COAL.

(H. Res. 352, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)

While this resolution aimed originally at the investigation of the alleged depressed condition of the bituminous coal industry, the inquiry had not been long underway before there was a great advance in prices, and the commission in its report suggested various measures for insuring a more adequate supply at reasonable prices.

NEWSPRINT PAPER.

(S. Res. 177, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)

The newsprint-paper inquiry resulted from an unexpected advance in prices. The report of the commission showed that these prices were very profitable, and that they had been partly the result of certain newsprint association activities which were in restraint of trade. The Department of Justice instituted proceedings in consequence of which the association was abolished.

BOOK PAPER.

(S. Res. 269, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)

The inquiry into book paper which was made shortly after the newsprint inquiry, had a similar origin and disclosed similar restraints of trade, resulting in proceedings by the commission against the manufacturers involved therein. The commission also recommended further legislative action to repress restraints of trade by such associations.

FLAGS.

(S. Res. 35, 65th Cong., 1st sess.)

A sudden increase in the prices of American flags led to this inquiry, which disclosed that while a trade association had been active to fix prices shortly before, the price advance had been so great on account of the war demand that further price fixing had been superfluous.

MEAT-PACKING PROFIT LIMITATIONS.

(S. Res. 177, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

The inquiry into meat-packing profit limitations had as its object the study of the system of war-time control established by the Food Administration; certain changes were recommended by the commission, including more complete control of the business and lower maximum profits.

FARM IMPLEMENTS.

(S. Res. 223, 65th Cong., 2d sess.)

The high prices of farm implements led to this inquiry, which disclosed that there were numerous trade combinations to advance prices and that the consent decree for the dissolution of the International Harvester Co. was absurdly inadequate. The commission recommended a revision of the decree, and the Department of Justice is now proceeding against the company to that end.

MILK.

(S. Res. 431, 65th Cong., 3d sess.)

This inquiry into the fairness of milk prices to producers and of canned milk to consumers and whether they were affected by fraudulent or discriminatory practices resulted in a report showing marked concentration of control.

COTTON YARN.

(H. Res. 451, 66th Cong., 2d sess.)

The House called on the commission to investigate the very high prices of combed cotton yarn, and the inquiry disclosed that the profits in the industry had been extraordinary large for several years.

PACIFIC COAST PETROLEUM.

(S. Res. 128, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

On the Pacific coast the great increase in the prices of gasoline, fuel oil, and other petroleum products led to this inquiry which disclosed that several of the companies were fixing prices.

PETROLEUM PRICES.

(H. Res. 501, 66th Cong., 2d sess.)

This was another inquiry into high prices for petroleum products. The report of the commission pointed out that the Standard companies practically made the prices in their several marketing territories and avoided competition among themselves. Various constructive proposals to conserve the oil supply were made by the commission.

COMMERCIAL FEEDS.

(S. Res. 140, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

The inquiry into commercial feeds which aimed to discover whether there were any combinations or restraints of trade in that business was diligently pursued, and though it disclosed some association activities in restraint of trade it found no important violation of the antitrust laws.

SUGAR SUPPLY.

(H. Res. 150, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

The ordinary advance in the price of sugar in 1910 led to this inquiry, which was found to be due chiefly to speculation and hoarding in sugar, and certain recommendations were made for legislative action to cure these abuses.

SOUTHERN LIVESTOCK PRICES.

(S. Res. 133, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

The low prices of Southern livestock which gave rise to the belief that discrimination was being practiced were investigated, but the alleged discrimination did not appear to exist.

SHOE COSTS AND PRICES.

(H. Res. 217, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)

The high prices of shoes after the war led to this inquiry, and the investigation of the commission attributed them chiefly to supply and demand conditions.

TOBACCO PRICES.

(H. Res. 533, 66th Cong., 2d sess.)

The House called upon the commission to make inquiry into the prices of leaf tobacco and the selling prices of tobacco products. The unfavorable relationship between them was reported to be due in part to the purchasing methods of the large tobacco companies, and as a result of this inquiry the commission recommended that the decree dissolving the old Tobacco Trust should be amended and alleged violations of the existing decree prosecuted. Better systems of grading tobacco were also recommended by the commission.

TOBACCO PRICES.

(S. Res. 129, 67th Cong., 1st sess.)

This inquiry was also directed to the low prices of leaf tobacco and the high prices of tobacco products. It disclosed that in the sale of tobacco several of the largest companies were engaged in numerous conspiracies with their customers—the jobbers—to enhance the selling prices of tobacco. Proceedings against these unlawful acts were instituted by the commission.

EXPORT GRAIN.

(S. Res. 183, 67th Cong., 2d sess.)

The low prices of export wheat gave rise to this inquiry, which developed extensive and harmful speculative manipulation of prices on the grain exchanges and conspiracies among country grain buyers to agree on maximum prices for grain purchased. Legislation for a stricter supervision of grain exchanges was recommended, together with certain changes in the rules. The commission also recommended governmental action looking to additional storage facilities for grain uncontrolled by grain dealers.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS.

(S. Res. 127, 67th Cong., 2d sess.)

The failure of house-furnishing goods to decline in price since 1920 as much as most other commodities, alleged to be due to restraints of trade, was inquired into by the commission, and one report has already been issued regarding household furniture, which shows that extensive conspiracies existed under the form of cost-accounting devices and meetings, to inflate the price of such furniture. The commission has announced that it is continuing this inquiry into certain other kinds of house furnishings.

FLOUR MILLING.

(S. Res. 212, 67th Cong., 2d sess.)

This inquiry into the flour-milling industry has not yet been reported on.

COTTON TRADE.

(S. Res. 262, 67th Cong., 2d sess.)

The investigation of the cotton trade has not been completed, but a preliminary report was issued which showed a marked degree of concentration in the cotton-merchandising business.

FERTILISER.

(S. Res. 307, 67th Cong., 2d sess.)

The fertilizer inquiry developed that active competition generally prevailed in the industry in this country, though in foreign countries combinations control some of the most important raw materials. The commission recommended constructive legislation to improve agricultural credits and the advantages of more extended cooperative action in the purchase of fertilizer by farmers.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN PETROLEUM INDUSTRY.

(S. Res. 311, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.)

The acquisition of extensive oil interests in this country by the Dutch-Shell concern, an international trust, and discrimination practiced against Americans in foreign countries provoked this inquiry which developed the situation.

COTTON TRADE.

(S. Res. 429, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.)

The inquiry in response to this second resolution on the cotton trade has not yet been completed.

NATIONAL WEALTH.

(S. Res. 451, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.)

This subject has not yet been reported.

CALCIUM ARSENATE.

(S. Res. 417, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.)

The high prices of calcium arsenate, a poison used to destroy the cotton boll weevil, led to this inquiry, from which it appeared that the cause was due to the sudden increase in demand rather than to any restraints of trade.

RADIO.

(H. Res. 548, 67th Cong., 4th sess.)

The patents in the radio industry, which the commission was called upon to investigate by this resolution, were found to be controlled by a combination of a few great companies, as also commercial communication by radio. The commission since issuing the report has instituted proceedings against these companies. These facts are of vital importance in considering what legislation shall be now provided for the regulation of the radio industry.

BREAD.

(S. Res. 163, 68th Cong., 1st sess.)

This bread inquiry has not yet been actively undertaken, according to an official report to the Senate, on account of insufficient funds.

FOOD INQUIRY.

(Direction of the President, February 7, 1917.)

The President's food inquiry, undertaken with a special appropriation of Congress, resulted in a very important series of reports on the meat-packing industry, which had as their immediate result the enactment of the packers and stockyards act for the control of this industry and the prosecution of the big packers for a conspiracy in restraint of trade by the Department of Justice. Another branch of the food inquiry developed important facts regarding the grain trade which was of assistance to Congress in regulating the grain exchanges and to the courts in interpreting the law.

(Direction of the President, July 25, 1917.)

The numerous cost investigations made by the Federal Trade Commission during the war into the coal, steel, lumber, petroleum, cotton textiles, locomotives, leather, canned foods, and copper industries not to mention scores of other important industries, on the basis of which prices were fixed by the food administration, the war industries board, and the purchasing departments, like the Army, Navy, Shipping Board and Railroad Administration, were all done under the President's special direction, and it is estimated that they helped to save the country many billions of dollars by checking unjustifiable price advances.

WHEAT PRICES.

(Direction of President, October 12, 1920.)

The extraordinary decline of wheat prices in the summer and autumn of 1920 led to a direction of the President to inquire into the reasons for the decline. The chief reasons for the decline were found in abnormal market conditions, including certain arbitrary methods pursued by the grain-purchasing departments of foreign governments.

GASOLINE.

(Direction of President, February 7, 1924.)

At the direction of the President, the commission recently undertook an inquiry into the recent sharp advance in gasoline prices. This inquiry is still in progress.

RAISIN COMBINATION.

(Request of the Attorney General, September 30, 1919.)

A combination of raisin growers in California was referred to the commission for examination by the Attorney General, pursuant to the Federal Trade Commission act, and the commission found that it was not only organized in restraint of trade but was being conducted in a manner that was threatening financial disaster to the growers. The commission recommended a change of organization to conform to the law, which was adopted by the raisin growers.

LUMBER INDUSTRY.

(Request of the Attorney General, September 4, 1919.)

At the request of the Attorney General the commission examined certain alleged trade combinations in the lumber industry. Violations of the antitrust acts were disclosed with respect to the Southern Pine Association, West Coast Lumbermen's Association, Western Pine Manufacturers' Association, Northern Hemlock & Hardwood Manufacturers' Association, Western Red Cedar Association, Lifetime Post Association, and Western Red Cedar Men's Information Bureau.

The Department of Justice has already initiated proceedings in consequence of the commission's recommendations with respect to the Southern Pine Association and the Western Pine Manufacturers' Association.

REGULATION OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the proposed constitutional amendment regarding child labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, this proposition to adopt another amendment to the Constitution of the United States so as to confer upon the Congress the power to regulate child labor in every nook and corner of the United States and in every possible field of activity in which children may be gainfully employed raises a fundamental question and requires careful and cautious consideration before action.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT STRICTLY FEDERAL

Undoubtedly the framers of the Constitution of the United States, and I mean not only those who sat in the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in 1787 but more especially the members of the conventions in the several States called for the purpose of considering whether or not each State would ratify said proposed Constitution—all these framers, and more especially the people whom these conventions represented, considered this new Government of the United States being created, not only a Federal Government with limited powers but more especially a sort of international arrangement between the constituent States to render them more effective in the prosecution of war for their common defense. They realized that they had won independence solely by reason of cooperation, loose and imperfect as it was, between the several Colonies, now calling themselves "States," since their common Declaration of Independence, and they believed that so soon as the hereditary monarchies of Europe should find surcease from the destructions of the French Revolution and the subsequent Napoleonic wars that the European dynasties would probably combine to crush "this hotbed of Yankee democracy." They perceived that there was an essential and inevitable conflict between the principle of human freedom and the doctrine of divine right of kings. The States felt no need of cooperation for the promotion of their internal economic and social well-being. They were then conferring and protecting individual liberty and personal freedom as no government had ever done before. But they did realize that as the sole exponents of republican institutions and democratic ideals in the New World, and practically in the whole world, that their cause of freedom and their fight for the preservation of independence was a common cause and should be carried on by a common effort.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING

With the economic changes that have followed the progress of civilization since that time, there has been a constant drift of governmental power concerning economic matters and human rights and duties and privileges, and no thoughtful student of the history of this constant tendency toward centralization can contemplate the present vast volume of power exercised by the executive bureaus of the Federal Government, and the vast volume of taxes necessary to keep these bureaus and their activities going, and the vast volume of personal liberties and individual rights that come under the regulations of the mighty bureaus, without dreading the ultimate consequences of this concentrating tendency.

PREVIOUS CHILD LABOR LAWS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

When matters come up like the antilynching bill, we can consider them first of all from their constitutionality, and it seems that the unconstitutionality of the bill mentioned can be demonstrated to a practical, mathematical certainty. Consequently, so long as Congress thought that it might by indirect, under the guise of regulating interstate commerce and next under the guise of the taxing power, legislate upon the subject of child labor, the question could then be debated upon constitutional grounds. However, the Supreme Court having declared the indirect legislation, based upon the interstate commerce and taxation powers, both futile and insidious assaults upon the reserve rights of the States, and therefore idle and ineffectual efforts to augment Federal power, now two classes of persons have come forward with the proposition to change the Federal Constitution itself by adding a twentieth amendment to confer upon Congress the right, and therefore the duty to enact legislation regarding child labor.

WHENCE THIS AGITATION

What are these two classes? First, well-intentioned and unselfish people who are driven on by a benevolent zeal which has misguided them and led them to overlook the great fundamental American scheme of State and Federal Government and caused them to seek in this wrong way to do the right thing. I do not question their motive, but I do condemn their method. The next class consists of certain selfish interests which have found themselves in a losing game of competition with industries and activities in other parts of the country, and in the fight of self-defense they are seeking to level down by national legislation their competing industries. Thus, by seeking by legislation to deprive their competitors of the benefits of certain natural and economic advantages and to protect themselves against the otherwise inexorable laws of political economy.

WHEN AND WHERE SHALL WE DRAW THE LINE

But we are now face to face with the proposition upon its original merits. We must decide upon some line of demarcation between State power and Federal power. Shall we agree to continue this process of building higher and stronger the structure of Federal Government? Shall we permit the powers of the several States to be constantly and increasingly sapped and destroyed? Shall we subject the rights and interests and liberties and personal freedom of the individual citizens of all these 48 States and Territories, now numbering more than 100,000,000 and perhaps to number probably 200,000,000 in the next 100 years, to be subjected to, regulated by, and to derive their powers and privileges from a Federal bureau located in Washington, bound hand and foot by red tape, and slowly grinding out action according to the whim and fancy of each separate and changing bureau chief?

SYMPATHY FOR CHILDREN

My opposition to this proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not arise from any lack of sympathy for the poor children, wherever they may be, who are compelled to labor long hours under harsh and insanitary conditions. In fact, my opposition is largely based on an intense and burning sympathy for such unfortunate children and for their unfortunate parents, and my hope and aim is to preserve to these very people the right to exert some influence through the legislatures of their respective States in formulating the laws that shall regulate them and the industries in which they labor. If this matter becomes a national proposition, then the laws of Congress will be uniform all over the whole country and will have to apply to the cane fields of Louisiana and the cornfields of Iowa. There will be the same laws for the fruit growers of California and the cotton growers of the Carolinas. There will be the same regulations for the truckers of New England and the ranchers of Texas. It is therefore manifest that what will suit the people of one State and of one section must be unsuited to the people of another State and of another section. The industries are different, the climate is different, and, in a certain sense, the people themselves are different, having different racial ancestry, different local traditions, and different provincial customs. Therefore, my great aim is to preserve to the industrial workers of South Carolina, who labor largely in the cotton mills and whose influence is powerful and well-nigh dominant within the State itself, and where they certainly hold the balance of political power, so that these industrial workers of my State may be able to have such legislation formulated by their representatives assembled in Columbia as will suit the people of South Carolina.

WHY DISTRUST STATE LEGISLATURES

Surely the people of each State are willing to trust their own State legislatures in these domestic matters. Surely the voice of an industrial class in a State of about 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 people will be more powerful in the State legislature in procuring favorable conditions and hours and wages for children and favorable regulations for school attendance by the children than will their voice be in the National Congress, representing 105,000,000 people. For one, I believe that the people of South Carolina are glad to submit all such matters to the Legislature of South Carolina. They remember—and when I say they I mean mothers and fathers and children themselves—some of the arbitrary and unreasonable requirements of the inspectors sent out from Washington during the period when they were seeking to enforce Federal legislation in all the States. Many mothers told me that their sons had attended the school for the full period of the school, in most cases at least seven months for the year, and for the other five months these fine, strong sons over 14 and under 16 years of age were not permitted to labor to earn money to help support themselves and their mothers and younger brothers and sisters, to help buy their own clothes, but were roaming around the villages, wasting money, and wearing out their own clothes, learning evil practices and bad language, and yet their own mothers were standing at the spinning frame or watching the loom or counting in the cloth room to earn a livelihood for themselves and for these vigorous, able-bodied boys and for the younger brothers and sisters of these same boys.

WILL NECESSITATE MORE TAX EATERS

Then, if this amendment should be adopted by the States and Congress will pass these laws regulating child labor, and then to enforce these laws will put another army of clerks and bureau chiefs and field inspectors at work, I ask such industrial workers and their friends as may favor this bill: Who will be these inspectors? Will these inspectors be black or white? Will they be refined and cultivated people with a sense of decency, or will they be ruffians, practicing and pulling off military "rough stuff"?

TAX-CONSUMING PAY ROLLS

We must stop somewhere this centralizing process. Already the cost of maintaining the Federal Government is terrific. With over 550,000 civilian employees of the Government, with perhaps another 100,000 officials of high and low degree, with an Army of about 136,000 officers and men, with a Navy of near the same strength in numbers, with a war debt of about $23,000,000,000, the people of this country are staggering under a burden of taxation for maintaining their various local governments and schools and their county and State governments, and when the Federal Government is piled up on top of that we pay $70 per capita, which means about $350 upon the average family of five. We thus see the danger of continuing to pile duties upon the Federal Government. Already the Federal Government has its hands full, and due to the huge bureaus with their thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of employees, corruption and graft have crept in and are hard to eradicate. The recent exposures in well-nigh every branch of the Federal Government should warn the people against the dangers of continuing to concentrate Federal power. The State governments are relatively clean and far more economical. The reason is obvious. The State governments are close to the people, where they can keep an eye upon them and see that every dollar brings at least 95 per cent of value in service or commodities. But the Federal Government is far removed; its processes are dark and devious and its agents are multitudinous and its money seems vast, and so the individual citizen is swallowed up by the mighty mass of Federal activities and is unable to check up on Federal expenditures. But those who have been in the service of the Federal Government here for long years and have watched the tide rise and fall will advise you that of every dollar that is spent by the Federal Government it is not likely that the people receive more than 75 per cent, if that much, in service and commodities. Already the people of the United States are paying in taxes to support their Government $1 out of every $8 that they earn.

A large part of this expense is due to duplication of activities between the Federal Government and the State governments. Practically every State has its department of agriculture. Every State has a department of industry. There are State geologists and State foresters, State road commissioners, and commissioners of education. So on through the whole list every State within itself duplicates practically all the Federal offices. The net result is this enormous burden of taxation.

FEDERAL EFFICIENCY A MYTH

Those well-meaning persons who wish this constitutional amendment passed to confer power upon Congress to regulate child labor should not deceive themselves into thinking that the Federal Government can and will perform duties along this line more efficiently and economically than the States can. The efficiency of the Federal Government is a mere myth. All who have had dealings and transactions in any way with the Veterans' Bureau of the Federal Government can testify that this so-called efficiency is a farce. Those who have had transactions with the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Federal Government can assure us that the so-called Federal efficiency is a fiction and fancy. Those who know about the Federal administration of the railroads, and the graft and corruption, the bribery and perjury that have been practiced by and upon the agent and employees of the Federal Government seeking to enforce Federal prohibition, know that so-called Federal efficiency is an idle dream. I would not be mistaken. The people of this country have already spoken on the question of prohibition through their action in ratifying the eighteenth amendment and I am for its strict and rigid enforcement at any expense and sacrifice. But as to this present proposition to amend the Federal Constitution regarding child labor, we are now at the proper stage for debate. We can now consider the question on its merits. I am not only opposed to the amendment on its merits, but I am opposed to submitting it to the several State legislatures, or to conventions called in the States, for the purpose of considering it, because I believe that it will be dangerous to the liberties and interests of all the people of the Nation, and especially most dangerous to those very laboring people in the States whom certain selfish economic interests that are in a death grapple with economic competitors claim, as I believe hypocritically, that they are seeking to serve.

PERSONAL LIBERTY IN DANGER

This question of Federal centralization is vital, especially on the question of personal liberty and individual freedom. Americanism means individualism. America is another word for opportunity. America was the first and to-day is the foremost country in the world in affording a chance to the individual man or woman to make of himself and for himself all that his talents and industry and character can achieve. If we continue the process of building up a great bureaucratic, machine government in Washington that binds itself with bundles of red tape, these in turn will in time bind individual citizens with the bands of despotism, the unifying, soul-crushing, spirit-killing rules and regulations by bureaucratic despots. The State governments have their bureaus too, but they are relatively small, on an average being only a one forty-eighth part as large as the Federal bureaus. Therefore State officials can afford forty-eight times as much freedom for action and decision upon the merits and demerits of individual cases.

KILLING BY ADMINISTRATION THE WILL OF CONGRESS

Furthermore, Congress may make laws that seems just, but Federal bureaus by construction and regulation whittle down these laws or stiffen up these laws as they desire, so that their operation on the people is very different from what Congress intends. Witness the application of the reclassification act for harmonizing and equalizing the pay of the civil services of the United States. Within less than a year after its enactment the author of the bill, Mr. LEHLBACH himself, in most vigorous language upon the floor of this House, denounced the very board created by the bill as having acted contrary to the express authority and the direct mandates of the bill. Witness the various decisions and regulations of the Veterans' Bureau with regard to rehabilitation, and hospitalization, and compensation. Those well-intentioned people who want to impose additional powers and duties upon the Federal Government in regard to such matters as marriage and divorce, the qualifications, employment, and dismissal of teachers, the labor of women and children, the control and management of schools, and many other such fields of activity relating to the internal, intimate, domestic affairs and policies of the people themselves, relating to those subjects that come home close to the bosoms and breasts of men and women, those misguided people need to study the inside management of some of these bureaus in Washington to realize the mighty mistake that they are laboring under and leading others into.

A WARNING FROM HISTORY

There is another danger ahead that the wise person must heed. We must learn lessons from the history of our own country and of other countries. We have no way of judging the future except by the past. We realize that human nature is everywhere, all over the world, the same. If we continue this consolidating, concentrating, centralizing process of piling up power after power in the hands of the Federal Government, then finally some single man will snatch the reins of power, will overthrow parliamentary government, will set up a dictatorship, will establish a monarchy, will proclaim himself to be a king, and will fix upon posterity a royal dynasty to rule our children's children. This is no wild dream. It happened in France twice. First in the case of Napoleon Bonaparte, and next in the case of his nephew, Louis Napoleon. Let this centralizing tendency in the United States continue until the civil-service employees shall number 1,000,000 and the official appointees shall number 200,000 and the Army shall number one-half million and the Navy one-quarter of a million, and until all the financing of the Nation shall center in Washington, until all the industries shall center in Washington, until all the sociological activities shall center in Washington; when the laws regulating parents and child, husband and wife, guardian and ward, teacher and student, master and servant, carrier and passenger, seller and buyer, landlord and tenant, pastor and flock, pulpit and pew, and every conceivable relation shall be centered in governmental bureaus in Washington, and then some individual with powerful personality will become President. He will serve the limit of two terms, set by George Washington's example; his ambition will not have been satisfied; he will gather into his hands the reins of official and political power, manipulate the convention of his party, have himself nominated for a third term, and then his appointees and those seeking appointment, all this vast horde of a million civil-service officials and all the influence of the Army and the Navy exerted by their personnel upon their families, relatives, and friends back home through systematic correspondence, all these avenues of appeal and approach to the public mind will be employed to insure the election of this vigorous, powerful person to be President for a third term. Then he will know the game. Then he will set in motion a sentiment to have himself proclaimed dictator.

He will spring up as another Mussolini. He would be a Lenin in American clothes. He would be a General Rivera of an American edition. He would be our modern Napoleon. He would make the people demand his continuance in office. He would compel the people to cry for his crowning. He might pretend thrice to deny the kingly crown but finally all personal scruples would be overcome and he would yield to a self-made sentiment for his enthronement and thus would end American liberty. Then would die personal freedom. In this grave would be buried the hopes of our fathers who fled to this unwelcome land 300 years ago. There would be embalmed the bright promises that found birth in the Declaration of Independence. Those who follow this centralizing tendency, who urge this augmentation of Federal power, are treading the pathway that other peoples have trod, that finally led them to despotism and to the destruction of liberty. I can not believe that the American people, when they are correctly informed and cautioned, will continue this movement to enlarge Federal power. I believe that in some respects the pendulum will swing backward. It is true that inventions and the progress of civilization have so changed matters that certain activities of the people had to be brought under Federal regulation, and in time certain other changes may produce like results. But no railroad, or steamboat, or telegraph, or telephone, or automobile has ever changed the status of a child toward its parents. These things have not changed the nature of the home. They have not modified the feelings of the mother's heart. They have not lessened the duties of fatherhood nor weakened the love of motherhood. These intimate personal matters must be left to the States, where the States are in close touch with the people and with the local sentiments and desires and needs of the people. Where climatic changes, and seasonable changes, and industrial changes, and commercial changes, and educational changes, and all the vicissitudes incident to progress may produce quick and accurate response and reflection upon the statute books of the several States.

MY OPPOSITION BASED ON PRINCIPLE, NOT EXPEDIENCY

So, Mr. Speaker, I stand upon this principle of local self-government. I stand for the liberties of the individual citizen. I stand for the integrity of the American home. I stand for the independence of the mothers and fathers in the several States and for the rights of the States, in close touch with these mothers and fathers, to regulate such matters as marriage and divorce, parent and child, guardian and ward, teacher and pupil, and the thousand other like things. I maintain that it is not only the right of the State inherently to do these things but it is the duty of the State to do it, and it is the duty of the people of the State to see that the State governments discharge this duty. There is nothing to hinder and everything to encourage the people of any industrial class or group in any village or community in South Carolina to select one of their fellow citizens, living among them, knowing their conditions, and in sympathy with their needs, and to offer this citizen, either man or woman, as a candidate for the State legislature or the State senate upon a platform for the regulation of child labor in such a way as will meet the needs and desires of these people. In fact, that is what has been done in scores of cases in South Carolina and is being done constantly and will happen all over South Carolina in 1924. The laws of South Carolina for the protection of the home are the best in the whole Nation. South Carolina stands alone among all her sister States in her determination to abide by the old faith that man and woman once wed shall continue such until death. We recognize no divorce. We grant no divorce. We stand for the integrity of the home, and though in a few instances the personal convenience and feelings of the husband and wife may suffer a lifetime sacrifice, yet it is all for the public good and for the good of the children, and in the end society is promoted, virtue is sustained, and the chivalry of manhood and the glory of womanhood preserved and magnified. Coming from South Carolina, knowing the sentiments of her people, I am opposed to this constitutional amendment.

I know how the people who labor in the factories, who work up and down the alleys between the whirring, humming, roaring machinery, feel. I know how the farmer and his wife and children in the far-flung fields of the coastal plains and the Piedmont region feel. I know how the people in the country home and in the village and town and city feel. I know that they have confidence in their State legislature. I know that they realize that the best agency to preserve their liberty, to meet their local needs, to promote their peculiar welfare is their own State government, elected by themselves, paid for by themselves, and supported by their own cooperation in the enforcement of their own laws. I believe that this is the very essence of Americanism. I believe that America is great because the fathers wisely divided the powers of government between the Federal Government and State governments. They gave to the Federal Government those general powers relating to the common defense, relating to international relations and to interstate commerce. All other powers they reserved to the people of the States, and this meant that the people of Nevada could have divorce laws if they wanted them, but the people of South Carolina could prohibit divorces if they wanted to. It means that the people of Massachusetts could have colored and white children in the same schools if they wanted to, but not so the people of South Carolina. It means that the people of Illinois might have colored and white people riding side by side in the same train, in the same Pullman sleeping coach, or in the same street car, but not so in South Carolina. This is but an illustration of what I mean by local self-government. This is what I mean by conforming law to local conditions and local traditions and local sentiment. This is the very heart and substance of the things spoken of in the Declaration of Independence. This is the thing for which the continental heroes followed George Washington through seven long years of strife and bloodshed to establish. This is the principle that has inspired the American people from their first footing upon these shores until this good day. And if we allow a few misguided zealots, whose purpose and motives may be good, but whose plan and method are full of danger and peril, to rush us on into the concentration and consolidation of power in the hands of the Federal Government, upon these matters that relate to the intimate, close, personal affairs of the people, then Bunker Hill should be and will be forgotten.

Then Yorktown will no longer be one of the bright pages of world history. Then the Declaration of Independence will be as vain a declamation as were the wild words of Abbe Sleyes. When we turn our back on all history. Then we ignore the present-day lessons of the British Empire. Then we will be unworthy of those great judges that have sat upon the Supreme Court of this Republic and have proclaimed from the beginning that ours is a Government of limited powers, that we are a sovereign Nation, consisting of 48 sovereign States, that ours is an indestructible union of indestructible States; that the States in their integrity are as much an object of the Union's care as the Government itself created by the Union. When the States cease to exist as such, the Union ceases. That the States derive their power from the people of the States, and not from the Constitution of the United States. When we leave the plain and safe track of local self-government, which is but another word for "State rights," when we enter upon the untried field of consolidation, then we need not be surprised, and we must expect, if history continues to repeat itself, that we shall go the way of other nations, of first falling into despotic hands and, then following the deceitful ways of ambition, be crushed by some greater power or aggregation of powers.

AS NATIONAL POWER RISES STATE POWER FALLS

My opposition to the concentration of so much power in the administrative bureaus in Washington grows out of the fact that it spells a corresponding diminution of power in the States. The enlargement of one means the shrinking of the other. My views are not based upon tradition or sectional prejudice or historic schisms. My views are based upon grounds of public policy. They grow out of a conception of government, and are developed in the light of our historic experience. Those who framed our system of government were not inspired, but they were truly wise men. It was no accident that their work provoked that great encomium spoken by William E. Gladstone. They had had experience through the trying years of the Revolution. They had helped to establish republican institutions in the thirteen original States, and had erected governments therein founded upon written constitutions. They had studied the science of government as taught by Locke and Montesquieu. They had studied the history of the great republics, ancient and modern, and they came together with the deliberate purpose of establishing a more perfect union, to insure domestic tranquillity, to provide for the common defense, and to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity. How well they have accomplished those aims is manifested by the marvelous development of this country since that day in every direction. Our territory has been multiplied many times; our population has grown with our territory; and our institutions have expanded to the changing circumstances of science and civilization. Though it took more than half a century of debate and discussion and four years of civil war to settle forever in the minds of all the people the proper constitutional status of the States within the Union, yet that status is established and has solemnly been declared time and time again to be "an indestructible union of indestructible States."

THE STATES INSURE LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Now, the existence of 48 States, with the power reserved to them under the Federal Constitution to legislate upon the mass of domestic concerns, is the chief guaranty to the people of this Union of the right of local self-government. Local self-government is the inheritance of all Anglo-Saxon people; it is the nursery of Anglo-Saxon liberty; it is the school of Anglo-Saxon citizenship; it is the source of our American strength. There is danger in solidifying government. The minority, which might consist of more than 50,000,000 people, would be too large and too well organized to submit freely and easily to the domination of a majority. But when this minority of 50,000,000 people is broken up into 48 different fractions, and where the people in the 48 different States are divided perhaps upon 48 different questions, cooperation among these minorities will be practically impossible, and the general submission to the will of the majority is accomplished. Furthermore, with a consolidated Republic seeking to legislate upon myriads of matters relating to life, liberty, and property, it would be impossible to frame general legislation so as to take care of the diverse rights, the multifarious interests, and the varying feelings of the people in all parts of the country. We must remember that people are more concerned about laws and their administration as they relate to the intimate domestic relations and business concerns than they are about national affairs. Therefore the people might easily become aroused and angered and enraged beyond the point of control by nation-wide legislation affecting the status of marriage, or the relation of parent and child, or of master and servant, or of employer and employee. But where these matters are legislated upon in 48 different States this feeling is broken up into 48 different fractions, and the ship of State goes on without feeling the slightest tremor of excitement. Rome recognized the necessity of letting her colonial provinces and her subject peoples live under their traditional laws. Great Britain, with her far-flung Empire, recognizes the same principle. We see her to-day voluntarily voting autonomy for a part of the United Kingdom, and giving to the Irish people the chance to be governed by their own representatives. There is much diversity in this Nation between the cavalier of Virginia and the frontiersman of those great new empire States of the West. There is a great difference between the modern New England Puritan and the Latin peoples of Louisiana and other Southwestern States. There is a difference between the all-white population of the Northern and Northwestern States and the biracial population of the Southern States. There is a difference between the population of the East with the large percentage of foreigners and the native-born American population of the South. Nation-wide legislation can not properly regulate such a diverse people if it applies to the matters that come home to the breasts and bosoms of men, to the domestic and business affairs of the people.

THE STATES AS "INSULATED CHAMBERS" OF EXPERIMENT

The 48 States pursue their several ways in the development of government, constituting a great experiment station for each other. One State enacts novel and so-called radical legislation, and if the same is a failure the other 47 States are unhurt; but if the same proves wise and progressive, the other 47 States may profit by the example. In this connection I quote an extract from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes in the case of Truax against Corrigan, decided on December 19, 1921, as follows:

I must add one general consideration. There is nothing that I more deprecate than the use of the fourteenth amendment beyond the absolute compulsion of its words to prevent the making of social experiments that an important part of the community desires, in the insulated chambers afforded by the several States, even though the experiments may seem futile or even noxious to me and to those whose judgment I most respect.

THE STATES AND NATION AS MUTUAL CHECKS

The checks and balances established by the Federal Constitution within the Federal Government itself have often been commended as the agencies for restraining the radical and revolutionary spirit that seems to rise periodically in the breasts of the people. But the establishment of the Federal system whereby the National Government is restrained within the sphere marked out by the Federal Constitution and all the rest of sovereign power confined to the several States is a masterpiece in the way of creating checks and balances. It is entirely within the bounds of our history to say that the Federal Government at times comes under the domination and control of ultraradical sentiment and at other times under ultrareactionary control and domination. For illustration: It usually happens that while the Federal Government is under control of some dominant passion about one-half of the State governments remain dominated by contrary ideas and governmental policy. Under such conditions assume there be no restraint and boundary to the powers that Congress may exercise and that the other branches of Government may exercise in the administration of congressional legislation, then you will find legislation of ultraradical and idealistic policies enacted by Congress, and through the breach now proposed to be made in the defenses of State rights such congressional legislation will be driven into the States themselves, and the States (which are still the citadels of conservatism) will by Federal power be forced into the line and ranks of the radicals.

HOW THE STATES AND THE NATIONS MUTUALLY ACT AND REACT

But, on the other hand, preserve to the States their constitutional power and even if the Federal Government does for a time fall into the hands of the ultraradical or the ultraconservative, still about one-half of the States will continue to be the strongholds of the contrary ideas, and from these strongholds may rally forth the champions of their cause and by reason thereof in a few years a majority of the people of the whole Nation may be convinced that a change of administration in the National Government is desirable. By reason of this condition we may fairly expect slow but continuous progress in our republican institutions. It was Aristotle who said that a monarchy is a swift sailboat that outruns all the other barks upon the seas, but if perchance it goes upon the breakers, it is a complete wreck. On the contrary, a democracy is a raft where all the people may ride safely, though slowly, and with their feet constantly in the water. Our forefathers wisely adopted the idea of a raft as the pattern for our ship of state. We will progress slowly but surely if we keep to the standards of our fathers. Let it be our aim, as it was the aim of "our old mother beyond the seas," from whom we brought the ideals and traditions of Anglo-Saxon liberty, to be "a land of settled government of just and old renown, where freedom broadens slowly down from precedent to precedent."

THE UNSINKABLE SHIP OF STATE

Recent development in ship construction has produced a vessel with a large number of entirely separate water-tight compartments. Any one or two or three of these compartments may be broken into by the explosion of a torpedo or by ramming by another ship or by going upon the rocks, and still the ship will continue afloat and the lives of her passengers and her cargo be saved. So it is in this Republic, with this distribution of governmental power between 48 States. One, two, or more States may for a time be flooded by a sentiment which, if dominating the whole Nation, would result in national disaster. But only local harm would be done, and local recovery would be quick and the national safety and existence remain unimpaired. Again, our separation of powers between the Federal Government and the 48 State governments is analogous to the piers or pillars constituting the foundations of a house. If the same amount of brick and mortar distributed among the 48 pillars and at the various corners and along the several sides of a house were all concentrated in one large pillar under the center of the house even slight winds and earthquakes would topple the house over; but by the distribution of the stress and strain amongst 48 piers the house stands the stoutest storm and the severest quakes. When the fathers reserved to the States the vast multitude of powers relating to internal and domestic affairs they veritably builded this national house upon a rock. If we continue the original plan of structure, the storms may beat and the rains may descend but this house will stand.

BRITISH EMPIRE IS DECENTRALIZING

In the work entitled "The New Constitutions of Europe," by McBain and Rodgers, the question is discussed of the policy now beginning to prevail in large countries and empires, of decentralizing legislative and administrative functions so as to obtain greater efficiency, more satisfactory service, and more responsive attitude toward the needs, desires, and interests of the people. I quote, beginning at page 78:

As applied, however, to the United Kingdom itself, the agitation for federalism under the designation of "devolution" is by no means a dead issue. And the agitation rests not so much upon a demand for self-government among the units of the Kingdom as upon the practical necessity of bringing some measure of relief to an overburdened Parliament and Cabinet. The Parliament of the United Kingdom acts in four more or less distinct capacities: First, as a local legislature for the separate interests of England and Wales, of Scotland, and formerly of Ireland; second, as a national legislature for the interests of the United Kingdom as a whole; third, as an imperial legislature that is peculiarly responsible for the protectorates; and fourth, as the "single, sole, and sovereign authority finally responsible for the control and protection of the interests of the British Empire as a whole and in all its parts." In these several capacities the Parliament of the United Kingdom is responsible directly or indirectly for the peace, order, and good government of a quarter of the total population of the earth. The burden upon it has of recent years become almost intolerable. Imperial interests have grown in number and complexity. The internal, legislative, and administrative problems of most people of the British Isles, like the similar problems of most other peoples, have likewise become more numerous and more complicated. Merely because of the ever-increasing concentration of business many persons have thought that some measure of decentralization was not only desirable but also indispensable. To this end, and wholly apart from the unique and difficult Irish problem, proposals have been made for a devolution of some part of that created for England, Scotland, and Wales.

In October, 1919, the Prime Minister appointed a conference on devolution, which was presided over by the speaker of the House of Commons. This action was taken in response to a resolution passed by the House of Commons by a large vote on June 4, 1919.

It was resolved that, with a view to enabling the Imperial Parliament to devote more attention to the general interests of the United Kingdom and, in collaboration with other governments of the Empire, to matters of common imperial concern, this house is of opinion that the time has come for the creation of subordinate legislatures within the United Kingdom, and that to this end the Government, without prejudice to any proposals it may have to make with regard to Ireland, should forthwith appoint a parliamentary body to consider and report—

- (1) Upon a measure of federal devolution applicable to England, Scotland, and Ireland, defined in its general outlines by existing differences in law and administration between the three countries;
- (2) Upon the extent to which these differences are applicable to Welsh conditions and requirements; and
- (3) Upon the financial aspects and requirements of the measure.

In respect to the "devolution" of powers, which of course amounted to a division of powers between the British Parliament and the local legislatures, the proposals were substantially identical. The division would be somewhat different from that of any other federal system; but apart from the fact that it would be subject to alteration at the will of the central government, it would be none the less intrinsically federal in character.

On the local legislatures it was proposed to devolve powers over the following matters:

- (1) Internal commercial undertakings, professions, and societies (advertisements, amusement places and theaters, auctioneers, building societies, and loan societies, licensing (liquor), markets, and fairs);
- (2) order and good government (cruelty to animals, betting and gaming, charities and charitable trust acts, inebriates, police other than metropolitan police, poor law and vagrancy, prisons, reformatories);
- (3) ecclesiastical matters (burial law and matters affecting religious denominations);
- (4) agriculture and land (commons and inclosures, game laws, grainage, improvements, settled land acts, distress, and tenure);
- (5) judiciary and minor legal matters, coroners, county courts, minor criminal offenses procedure, definition, and punishment, law of inheritance, intestates estates, conveyancing and registration of land, minor torts, trustees, guardians, and wards);
- (6) education—primary, secondary, and university (except Oxford, Cambridge, and London);
- (7) local government and municipal undertakings (county council and municipal bills, fire brigades, local legislation—private bills, gas, water, and electricity undertakings—municipal government, including local franchises);
- (8) public health (preventive measures, contagious diseases, hospitals, housing, national health insurance, lunacy, and mental deficiency).

I introduce the following copious extracts from a recent publication entitled "Federal Centralization" by Prof. Walter Thompson of the faculty of Political Science, University of Wisconsin. It is very gratifying to observe how keenly he perceives and how clearly he expresses the hazards and dangers of continuing the concentration of Federal power:

OTHER NATIONS DECENTRALIZING

But judging from recent developments throughout the world, one must note that the movement is not entirely toward centralization but that there is also, in many quarters, an earnest protest against this tendency and a plea for decentralization of legislative and administrative functions on the ground that the legislative area of the central government has become too large, and that consequently the General Government is not sufficiently in sympathy with local needs and desires. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

LOCAL GOVERNMENT SERVES LOCAL NEEDS

That there are distinct local interests which may serve to handicap the exercise of Federal control, irrespective of the constitutional questions involved, is lucidly pointed out by an English observer of American conditions as follows: "Yet even an observer handicapped, as I am, by an alien tradition, can not help but realize that there is in America a certain fundamental disunity of circumstances. When I am in Kansas, I know that I am not in New York. The problems, even the thoughts and the desires, are different and affect people differently. Is it wise to make Washington a kind of Hegelian harmonization of these differences and say that Congress can transcend them in a Federal statute? In the result, as every statesman must know, what are called the 'interests of the Republic' in New York will probably be called 'discrimination against the Middle West' in Kansas. And that is intelligible, even if it is rarely praiseworthy. For while action in Kansas would have attempted to cope with the difficulties of the Middle West, action at Washington aims—since a balance of interests must be struck—at their general evasion. Surely this suggests the existence of a problem which has aroused less attention than it deserves. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

NATION-WIDE LAWS IGNORE LOCAL CONDITIONS

There are also distinct sectional problems which in local public opinion, because of their proximity and applicability, appear even more important than general national interests. It is not to be expected that Wisconsin, where there is hope of assimilating most of the population, will have the same problems as Georgia, where a large proportion of the population is colored. Nor will a regulation which is applicable to Kansas, which is primarily agricultural, necessarily be applicable to Pennsylvania, which is largely urban and industrial. It is difficult to imagine any large State where local interests are more clearly marked than they are in the United States, and one reason for there not being such a protest against centralization in the United States as there has been in England and France may be that, whereas in England and France the agencies of local control have been reduced to impotence, in the United States there have been opportunities for an effective expression of regional opinion. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

POWER OF PUBLIC OPINION

An alert public opinion is a dividend a democracy declares at the cost of efficiency. A more autocratic form of government where efficiency is the watchword is not adapted to the development of a vigilant public opinion. (Thompson on "Federal Centralization.")

The very alertness of public opinion in the United States may be a hindrance rather than a help to centralization of governmental functions. Most important questions vary in their application in different States. What is desirable in some is not acceptable in others. In national regulation there is always a danger of a relentless majority of the States imposing its will upon other States on a question that has not the same meaning in different localities. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

TYRANNY OF BOTH MAJORITY AND MINORITY

National control makes possible the tyranny of the majority, and if the control is established by constitutional amendment, it even makes possible the tyranny of the minority. It also imposes upon the national government the difficult task of enforcing the regulation in large areas which are not in sympathy with the legislation and where violation rather than enforcement is encouraged. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

STATE RIGHTS INSURES ADJUSTMENT TO GROWING NATION

The American people, especially in the West, are possessed of a pioneer spirit which manifests itself in attempts to try new things. The rapid growth of the country has demanded frequent readjustments. There has been a danger of the rapid economic transformation outstripping the formulation of such legislative policies as the exigencies demand. Consequently, in the last few years there has been much legislative experimentation, and by a process of trial and error the States are learning how to cope with new conditions. Such legislative experiments obviously would be inconvenient, if not frequently disastrous, if attempted on a national scale. But when conducted by the States the experience of one may be helpful to the others. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

GENERAL SAFETY AND PROGRESS INSURED

It is fortunate that the large number of Commonwealths in the American Union permits one State to experiment for the other 47. One State or another makes a new departure in the way of a minimum wage for women, abolition of private employment bureaus, "mothers' pensions," the "social evil," probation for adult first offenders, the juvenile court, municipal ownership, factory sanitation, the surgical sterilization of degenerates. Other States watch eagerly the results of the experiment and follow suit if the results are encouraging. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

THE UNSINKABLE SHIP

There is a great advantage in having different State governments trying different experiments in the enactment of laws and in governmental policies, so that a State less prone to accept novel and untried remedies may await their development by States more enterprising and more courageous. The end is that the diversity of opinion in State governments enforces a wise deliberation and creates a "locus penitentiae" which may constitute the salvation of the Republic. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

A SURE FOUNDATION FOR PROGRESS

Such an opportunity for experimentation makes it possible for the States to deal with contested and immature standards in legislation until a stabilized public opinion is formed. A State by experimenting may learn what to retain and what to eliminate. Other States can then accept the legislative policy and modify it to suit local conditions. This works for progress built on a sound foundation, and is one of the strongest and most practical vindications of our system of division of powers. (Thompson on "Federal centralization.")

CLAIMS OF HON. E. W. COLE TO A SEAT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an argument made by my constituent, E. W. Cole, claiming a seat in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an argument from a constituent on the Cole contested-election case.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman in favor of seating him?

Mr. BOX. The gentleman is my constituent, and has prepared a brief argument which I wish to insert.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it a long argument?

Mr. BOX. No; two typewritten pages, possibly three.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, Hon. E. W. Cole, who claims a right to a seat in this House as Representative at large from the State of Texas, has furnished me a copy of his argument in support of his contention that Texas is entitled to 19 Representatives in this body and that he should be seated. Mr. Cole, while now sojourning at Austin, the capital of Texas, where he fills the office of director of the State bureau of markets, has his permanent residence at Alto, Cherokee County, Tex., and is therefore my constituent. He is a man of high character. Since Mr. Cole gives evidence of a sincere conviction that he is entitled to a seat in this House and presents this argument on his own responsibility, desiring that it be inserted in the RECORD for examination and consideration of Members, it is only fair that they should read and consider it:

REASONS WHY THE STATE OF TEXAS IS ENTITLED TO 19 MEMBERS IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND E. W. COLE SHOULD BE SEATED

Because—

The Constitution of the United States requires that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, agreeable to the census which shall be taken every 10 years. (See Constitution of the United States, Art. I, sec. 2; and Art. XIV, sec. 2.)

The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land. (See Constitution of the United States, Art. VI, pt. 2.)

A State obtains its right to Representatives in the Congress from the Constitution of the United States, and not from any action or inaction of the Congress, the power of Congress, in this respect, being purely ministerial for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Constitution. (See Constitution of the United States, Art. I, sec. 2; Art. XIV, sec. 2; and Art. VI, pts. 2 and 3.)

Members of the Congress, under their oath of office, are sworn to support the Constitution of the United States. (See Constitution of the United States, Art. VI, pt. 2.)

During the 1910 census decade the representative population of the United States was 93,403,151 persons, and the numerical membership of the House of Representatives was 435 Representatives; and the representative population of the State of Texas was 3,896,542 persons, and the number of Representatives from Texas in Congress was 18 Members.

But during this, the 1920 census decade, the representative population of the United States is 105,271,598 persons, and the numerical membership of the House of Representatives is still 435 Representatives; and the representative population of the State of Texas is 4,663,228 persons, and the number of Representatives from Texas certified by the Congress at the present time is only 18 Members. (See United States census reports for 1910 and 1920 and the Congressional Directory.)

The number 105,271,598, the representative population of the United States, being divided by the number 435, the numerical membership of the House of Representatives, gives a quotient of 242,003, which is the correct basis for the apportionment of Representatives in the Sixty-eighth Congress, and the number 4,663,228, the representative population of the State of Texas, being divided by the number 242,003, the present basis for the apportionment of Representatives in the Congress, gives a quotient of 19 plus a fraction of the basis. Thus it is clear that Texas is entitled to 19 instead of only 18 Representatives in the Sixty-eighth Congress. (Make the calculation and see for yourself.)

The people of the State of Texas have duly elected E. W. Cole, of Austin, Tex., as a Representative at Large, to fill the nineteenth place in the Texas delegation of the House of Representatives, and the Governor of the State of Texas has issued a certificate of election to the said E. W. Cole, and the said certificate of election was duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress. (See official records at Austin, Tex., and Washington, D. C.)

The first apportionment of Representatives among the several States was made directly by the Constitution itself, which at the same time directed that all subsequent apportionments shall be made according to the census which shall be taken every 10 years, and no Congress, except the Sixty-seventh Congress, has, in the history of the Nation covering a period of 120 years, failed to make an apportionment of Representatives every 10 years according to each decennial census, effective the third year of each census decade. (See Constitution of the United States, Art. I, sec. 2; and U. S. Stat. L., from 1790 to 1910, inclusive.)

To deprive E. W. Cole, the duly elected Representative at Large from the State of Texas, of membership in the House of Representatives of the Sixty-eighth Congress would be to deny the State its constitutional right and to abrogate Article I, section 2; Article XIV, section 2; and Article VI, parts 2 and 3, of the Constitution of the United States. (Read them again.)

If Congress has power to deny Texas or any other State Representatives to which it is entitled under the Constitution for two years, then by the exercise of the same power it could deny Texas or any other State its constitutional portion of Representatives for 200 or any number of years. Therefore it seems logical to conclude that if the Constitution does not require that Representatives be apportioned among the several States every 10 years, effective every 10 years, then it is evident that the founders of this Republic were mistaken as to the intent and purposes of the Constitution, and that all former Congresses were, in making all former apportionments, acting without a constitutional mandate, and that they could have lawfully refused to make any reapportionment since the adoption of the Constitution. Whereby in that event only 13 of the 48 States would now have Representatives in Congress, and they, the thirteen original States, could each have exactly and only the number of Representatives assigned by the Constitution—that is to say, New Hampshire, 3; Massachusetts, 8; Rhode Island, 1; Connecticut, 5; New York, 6; New Jersey, 4; Pennsylvania, 8; Delaware, 1; Maryland, 6; Virginia, 10; North Carolina, 5; South Carolina, 5; and Georgia, 3; making a total of 65 Members—and that the 35 States admitted to the Union since the adoption of the Constitution would therefore be without membership in the House of Representatives. (Read this again.) (See Constitution of the United States, Art. I, sec. 2.)

At the present time, based on the Constitution of the United States, the 1920 census, and the present numerical membership of the House of Representatives, 8 States of the Union are entitled to additional membership in the House, namely, California 3; Connecticut 1; Michigan 2; New Jersey 1; North Carolina 1; Ohio 2; Texas 1; and Washington 1; total, 12. And 11 States are enjoying membership in the House of Representatives to which they are not entitled, namely, Indiana 1; Iowa 1; Kansas 1; Kentucky 1; Louisiana 1; Maine 1; Mississippi 1; Missouri 2; Nebraska 1; Rhode Island 1; and Vermont 1; total, 12. (See United States census of 1920.)

If the States obtain their right to Representatives in the Congress from the Constitution of the United States, and not from the Congress which is a child of the Constitution, then any State would evidently be within its right to demand of the Congress its constitutional portion of Members in the House of Representatives, as in the case of Texas at this time, and certainly there could be no power, so long as the Constitution remains as it is now written, to deprive a State of any part of its full constitutional quota of Members in the House of Representatives without the consent of such State, except as provided by the Constitution wherein if any State shall disfranchise its lawful voters Representatives may be lawfully denied, but in the proportion only which the number of disfranchised voters shall bear to the whole number of lawful voters in such State. However, if any State should prefer to waive its right to its constitutional portion of Representatives in the Sixty-eighth or any other Congress, as in the case of some of the States at this time, such State could probably exercise that privilege. Furthermore, if any State has at this time more Representatives in the Sixty-eighth Congress than to which it is entitled under the Constitution, as in the case of some of the States, such State is, to that extent, enjoying a special privilege through the graces of the Congress, and not exercising a lawful right under the Constitution.

In addition to the constitutional provisions herein cited, which specifically provide that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by the census taken every 10 years, and precedents, in the form of regular apportionment acts of the Congress for the purpose of carrying out the expressed provisions of the Constitution, showing conclusively that heretofore all apportionments of Representatives have been made regularly every 10 years, the following precedents are cited wherein at different times, covering a period of 50 years, 13 Representatives have been added to the membership of 11 different States, namely, Alabama (twice), California, Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee (twice), and Vermont, by special act of Congress when it was shown that these States were justly entitled to additional Representatives under the Constitution. These 13 cases are at point and have a special bearing at this time on the case of the State of Texas. (See United States Statutes, June 2, 1862, and May 30, 1872.)

This case has been established purely upon questions of law and fact and is not a partisan question. Therefore, I hope that it may be decided solely on the basis of justice and not from the standpoint of individuals' political fortunes or partisan politics.

E. W. COLE,

Representative at Large Elect from the State of Texas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following files, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7449. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6623. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio; and

H. R. 1316. An act for the relief of William R. Bradley, former acting collector or internal revenue for South Carolina.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. SPROUL of Kansas, for eight days, on account of important business.

To Mr. EVANS of Montana (at the request of Mr. LEAVITT), for three days, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 1, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

422. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of certain disbursing officers, office of the superintendent State, War, and Navy Department Buildings, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.
